NEWS & CORPSES

DEVELOPMENTS now underway promise some considerable evolutions and changes in the technique of newsreels to be delivered to the theatre screens of the nation. The outlook is exceedingly promising, on the premise that any change is likely to prove an improvement.

And while this period of evolutionary change is young, it will be proper to make some observations pertaining to the product and its public. The newsreel situation currently is fraught with possibilities of peril to the motion picture quite as definite as those which brought on the Legion of Decency campaign addressed at the drama.

The motion picture drama offended a considerable sector of the public by what, with a certain latitude of viewpoint, might have been called either bad morals or bad taste, or both. The newsreels have been tending to offend in taste rather than morals, but none the less dangerously.

The newsreels within a few months have regaled the public with pictures of the exhumation of the grisly corpse of Alexandre Stavsky in France, with the preliminary processes of the post-mortem evisceration, and with views at all angles of the stark body of the exceedingly dead John Dillinger on a slab in a Chicago morgue.

¶ Within the fortnight a sound news camion was raced down into Alabama bearing a box of de-fanged rattlesnakes for a "Holy Roller" demonstration of faith, before the camera, in imitation of a demonstration of the week before when an inflamed zealot submitted himself to the ordeal of venom and came jolly well near dying of it.

A few months ago the cameras of two newsreels caught and presented on the screen pictures of the unfortunate members of the landing crew at the San Diego flying field when the Akron carried them up to a death drop. Particularly explicit telephoto shots showed the bouncing of the bodies at the impact with the field. Audiences, exhibitors and the Secretary of the Navy protested and in time the scenes were cut. Such cuts never overtake first runs.

We submit that it ought not to be necessary to explain, as it seems to be, to newsreel editors that neither a corpus delecti nor the making of it are considered by any large portion of the public to be entertainment.

¶ It is not in general held pleasant to get up from ice-cream and demi-tasse to go to the charnel house. Skulls and reptiles may be facts; they may even be news; but they are not entertainment for persons of sound mind. The fact that they may get attention, that they may create sensations of a sort, does not make them proper screen merchandise.

Newsreels appear to be continually being led astray by their impression that they are in the news business, that they purvey news, and that they are to be classified as publications.

The real publisher of the newsreel is the exhibitor who puts it on his screen for his own portion of the theatre-going public.

The spectator knows nothing about the editor sitting in New York and is not interested. The average motion picture patron is very likely to think

THIS WEEK - - -

COAST PRECEDENT

The possibility of a precedent is involved in the request that a municipal court in Los Angeles this week determine whether a production talent case shall be heard by it or go to Academy arbitration. Lupe Velez brought action against Rowland Productions, charging non-payment of $5,000 due. A technicality, since the company claimed she never worked for it, though holding a contract, brought the case to the court. . . .

MAJORS SUED

In U. S. district court, Omaha, Exhibitor Vern S. Brown, Iowa, has brought suit for $425,000 damages against all major companies, Omaha Film Board of Trade, two Publix units, charging conspiracy in restraint of trade to prevent him from obtaining film, claiming Publix opened a theatre with which to compete with him for that very purpose. . . .

MEXICAN BAN

Boycotted by theatre unions of Mexico City has been the film, "Mussolini Speaks," charging it disseminates Fascist propaganda which the union calls undesirable for Mexican workers. Backing the boycott is the Peasants' federation, which would indicate the ban may extend throughout the country. . . .

JAPS ON STRIKE

Vigorously, earnestly protesting against the introduction of talking pictures, theatre employees of the city of Tokyo, capital of Japan, went on strike. . . .

NEW ORLEANS TAX

No absorption of the new local amusement tax will be permitted by the theatres of New Orleans. The extra cent must be collected on all tickets, exhibitors have learned. The levy actually will raise admission prices, allowing the operator to show a profit, according to some exhibitors. Though the tax is one cent up to 50 cents, the actual rate is two per cent of admission, making a difference between that collected from patrons, and that required to pay the city. . . .

CLAIMS PLAGIARISM

An injunction, accounting of profits, damages of $100,000 are asked from Fox in a U. S. district court suit this week filed by Mark Linder, playwright, alleging Fox's "Now I'll Tell" infringes on his play, "Room 349," which he claims was produced on the New York stage in 1929. Plaintiff also asks leave to settle, if he prefers, for $500 per film performance. . . .

ACTING SINGER

With concert appearances in Europe and South America behind him, MGM player Ramon Novarro plans an attack on the American audience concert front, via early appearances in San Francisco, as preliminary to a full concert tour planned for next year. He wants to be accepted by audiences as "a singer who acts in motion pictures," rather than vice versa. . . .

KIDNAP THREAT

Revealed last week in New York was a plot to extort $50,000 from William Fox, with a threat to kidnap Mr. Fox's two daughters if the money was not forthcoming. In Hewlett, Long Island, an unnamed suspect was taken into custody by Department of Justice operatives. . . .

PICKFAIR WEALTH

Disclosed in the records of the Los Angeles county tax collector last week was a drop in the taxable wealth of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. The wealth of Miss Pickford, says the record, has dropped $734,620 in the past year, while that of Mr. Fairbanks has decreased $631,400, based on assessed valuation. The totals: Miss Pickford, $1,950,770; Mr. Fairbanks, $1,065,530. . . .

NAZI BANNING

Since it "offends National Socialist feeling and is calculated to endanger public order," the Nazi film censor in Germany last week banned showing of the Austrian film, "Spring Voices." Also banned by the Nazi was MGM's "The Hollywood Party," though no explanation of the action was forthcoming. . . .

SCHENCK - OBERON

To England from Hollywood shortly will go Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists and 20th Century, there to meet Merle Oberon, his fiancee. Returning with her, the couple expect to marry at Pickfair, Coast home of Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, in about six weeks.

that the name of the product is "a pathé," considering that to be a generic noun.

The newsreel is not a purveyor of news and never is likely to become one. It is a derivative of the news, related to the affairs of Page One about as the Sunday rotogravure supplement is related to them. The newsreel ought to be an entertaining and amusing derivative—just so long as its avenue to the public is through the dramatic screen theatre, and along with the drama.

Newsreel policies diverging from the esthetic and amusement standards of the dramatic screen would be proper and practical only in theatres in which the newsreel was the exclusive or dominant product. The Trans-Lux experiment, had it come to full floreation, for example, might have warranted a divergent and high-colored newsreel product. The chief influence of that project was, however, the injection of some Brisbanery into film destined to association with the drama.

The newsreel never has and likely never will enjoy all the license of the press. There is no very good reason why it should need such license until it has its independent approach to the public as a specialized form of publication, not as amusement.

The reader of the printed page has some options. He can turn from or lay aside that which he finds unpleasant, uninteresting, offensive. The theatre patron must take it or forfeit his admission.

With their illusions of a publishing position and function the newsreels are inevitably influenced by the sensationalism of the tabloids, led by New York's Daily News, by the bitter sardonic and often gruesome or sadistic reports of Time and its imitators among news-magazines, and by the delving, emotional and anatomical presentations of MacFadden pages.

The printed page offers no precedents and blazes no trails for the newsreel that goes to the dramatic screen.

Some of the young men who play at "publishing" in the newsreel business have surrounded themselves with staffs of sub-editors with titles like those of newspaper desks, with printer telegraph services from the press associations, and annually angle for invitations to the Gridiron Club dinner in Washington to complete the self-delusion. One of them for years sought for membership in the American Publishers' Association.

In view of the agility of news-tipsters, sitting at the desks of every newspaper in New York, and the abundance of editions, a news ticker is about as useful in a newsreel office as a Hoe octuple press would be. It is interesting to observe that the newsreel with the closest of newspaper associations makes the least of newspaper pretentions.

Whether they know it or not, the newsreels, as they call them, are just in the show business, or they should by all means get into it.—T. R.

U. S. CREATES A $33,000,000 CREDIT FOR THEATRE REPAIRS

Motion picture theatre owners having good credit standing, whose capital inadequacies have prevented them during the nationwide deflation from making structural improvements in, or repairs to their properties, are eligible to apply to authorized local banks and lending agencies for inexpensive credit for the modernization of their exhibition buildings, under the National Housing Act which assures the banks of repayment.

Eligibility of exhibitor owners under the Act was officially acknowledged this week by the Federal Housing Administration at Washington, which stated, however, that the loans shall be applicable to repairs and improvements which shall become a permanent part of the property, and shall not be expended for movable theatre equipment.

The government anticipates that some $1,500,000,000 will be spent within the next 18 months in repairing and remodeling homes and business properties throughout the nation. The motion picture industry could obtain for the modernization of its theatres as much as $33,600,000, if the owner of each of the 16,800 houses that are either opened or are in idleness were granted the $2,000 to be allotted for improvements to each property.

The bulk of the applications in exhibition will, naturally, be made by the owners of the independent class, especially those whose theatre structures are in that majority group of 15,700 houses seating less than 1,500—opened or closed.

There has existed some doubt that motion picture theatre owners could take advantage of a loan under the Act for remodeling and repairing. It was felt in exhibition quarters that the Housing Act was only intended by the Administration to improve residences. An inquiry directed this week to the Federal Housing Administration at Washington revealed that the government insurance plan is by no means restricted to homes.

See Many Theatres After Loans

On the contrary, Federal Housing officials on Wednesday said that they anticipated that hundreds of theatre owners will take advantage of the opportunity to obtain medium-sized loans created by the Act at low rates for the purpose of making much-needed improvements and for alleviating unemployment ranks—which is the basic purpose of the Act.

While the loans, to be obtained at authorized local lending agencies, are restricted to individually owned and operated properties, lease holders may take advantage of the plan under certain conditions.

The loans to theatre owners are subject to the condition that they must be used for new improvements which will become a permanent part of the property. The funds cannot be used to pay off back indebtedness for building purposes, nor can they be used for the purchase of certain types of movable equipment, generally known as operating equipment, such as projectors, carpets, seats, draperies, screens and the like.

However, it is natural to assume that the new theatre modernization movement will open wide the market for theatre equipment sales. The need for new equipment usually appears when the owner engages in a "sprucing up" process through remodeling, redecorating and repairing.

It is to be pointed out in this connection that while a loan for rebuilding and repainting is obtained under the Federal Housing Act from local lending agencies, this is done on the owner's notes, without any endorsement and involves no mortgages or liens against the property. Therefore, the property retains its former integrity as a basis for further credit.

Thus a loan for rebuilding does not necessarily act to impair the credit of a theatre operator in the equipment market, but is actually conceived as supporting it.

Two highly important results, of considerable financial benefit to the industry as a whole and to its allied manufacturing branches, would be forthcoming from any wholesale granting of loans to theatres:

1. Increased equipment sales that usually follow theatre remodeling.

2. Better business prospects at the box-office developed by the psychological effects of the rejuvenated theatre on the minds of theatregoers.

Although fine legal questions as to the nature of some of the improvements permitted under the Act will probably have to be referred to the Housing Administration's legal division at Washington for decision, the majority of improvements to be allowed have already been specified. In the field of exhibition, some of the improvements permitted by the Act in theatre structures—all to be of a so-called generally permanent nature—include:

Theatre owners will be able to borrow amounts up to $2,000 on promissory notes at varying rates of interest. The Administration feels that considerable improvements can be made with $2,000, especially to small buildings and to buildings in small towns. Larger advances under the insurance plan may be specifically authorized by the Federal Housing Administration, but it is unlikely that there will be many variations from the generally authorized limit. However, the bank and the borrower may make independent arrangements for an additional sum.

Lending Agencies Total 3,000

Application for these loans must be made only to local lending institutions which have accepted the government insurance plan. The number is increasing daily and by the end of the week more than 3,000 banks and building and loan associations, with billions of resources, will have subscribed to the program.

Regulations permit individual lenders to fix their own rates of interest subject to a five per cent maximum limitation. Notes may not run more than three years without the specific approval of the Federal Housing Administration. Under no conditions are the loans to require any endorsement, merely requiring the signature of the property owner, and, if the owner is married, also the signature of his wife. As previously stated, the loans shall not involve any mortgages or liens against the property.

LOAN POSSIBLE ON EACH HOUSE

After having decided what improvements his theatre requires, the exhibitor may call in a contractor, or—if it's an important job—an architect, or he may get in touch with a local better housing committee, if there is one in the community. Any of these may estimate the cost. The exhibitor may engage his own labor, purchase his own materials from whoever offers the best prices. He may even do his own work. There is no limitation on how he may do the job.

Any property owner, whether individual, partnership or corporation, with a regular income from salary, commissions, business or other assured sources may apply. It is not necessary to be a depositor in the financial institution consulted. Specifically, the financial institutions subscribing to the plan may include any national bank, state bank, trust company, savings bank, or industrial bank, building and loan association or finance company approved by the Federal Housing Administration; or it may include a contractor or building or supply dealer who could accept a note to be discounted by a financial institution.

The money is not loaned by the government. The government provides insurance without cost to the financial institution to cover any probable loss to such institution, and, according to the Administration, "will contribute its share to make this type of paper a distinctive investment" for the banks. Nor does borrower pay for such insurance.

If not loaned directly, the bank may discount the borrower's note to the contractor.

Each Property Eligible

Loans may range from $100 to $2,000, depending on the income, for improvements on any one property. A like amount may be applied for for each property owned by an exhibitor up to five. Thus, he may secure $10,000 to improve five theatres. On loans for more than five properties, the exhibitor must secure the approval of the Federal Housing Administration at Washington.

Loans may run for any number of months from one to 36. They may be extended from 37 months to five years with approval of the Administration.

A good credit record in the community is the only security required to be placed on the note.

The exhibitor must assure the bank that he owns the property. Lessees under "repairing leases" may qualify under special circumstances which the local lending institutions can explain.

Further, the exhibitor must give assurance that the annual income of the signer or signers of the note is at least five times the annual payments to be made on the note; and that the mortgage, if any, is in good standing; and that there are no past due taxes, interest or liens against the property.

The financial institution may not collect as interest and/or discount and/or fee of any kind, a total charge in excess of an amount equivalent to $5 per $100 of the original face amount of a one-year note, deductible in advance by the lending institution.

Loans must be repaid in monthly installments, so that the actual interest charge will be higher than the nominal rate, but at the same time, well under prevailing commercial paper rates. Compared with ordinary 60 or 90 day bank loans, the rate is higher. Compared with the same type of loans payable in monthly installments, it is much lower than heretofore available. The reduced cost is made possible because of the government credit insurance to the financial institution, the government having set aside $200,000,000 for such loan insurance.

Loaning Agency Must Approve

While the general rule is to make regular, equal, monthly payments, farmers and others with seasonal income may make seasonal payments.

The exhibitor does not have to use specified building materials, but the methods of construction must meet the general approval of the lending agency.

The regular monthly installments will be made in person at the place of business of the lending agency; or by mail; or as otherwise arranged. No payment shall be made to any governmental office or governmental organization. The government will not insure any such loans after January 1, 1936.

The note may be paid in full at any time before maturity. A reasonable rebate will be allowed for such prepayment when charges have been collected in advance.

An exhibitor may pay as many installments at one time as he wishes, but such payments should be in exact multiples of the agreed payments—that is, if monthly payment is $10, advance payments should total $20, $30, etc.—not, for example, odd sums such as $18 or $25, when the agreed payment is $10.

The maker must not permit his payments to fall in arrears. Should a payment be more than 15 days late, the financial institution's expense, caused thereby, may be reimbursed in part at the rate of not more than five cents per dollar for each payment in arrears. Persistent delinquency will make it necessary for the financial institution "to take proper steps to effect collection in full." Any time after 60 days' default the bank may present the note to the Administration and receive cash.

The Administration suggests that in preparing to modernize theatre buildings, in order to ascertain what improvements are needed the exhibitor should check the condition of the structure for general defects, sanitation, safety, attractiveness, and then consult with a contractor or architect.

Competitive Bids Urged

Furthermore, it is suggested, officially, that the exhibitor check the reputation for responsibility and the skill of the contractor or workmen engaged. It is advisable to know personally the contractor or workmen.

Probably the only effective safeguard as to price is the securing of competitive bids. Exhibitors should receive a written guarantee from the contractor before paying for any work completed.

"No item of repair, alteration or improvement should be an attempt to conceal building defects which are more fundamental," declared the Administration. "If the work involves a large expenditure or major changes in a building—that is, if it involves alterations and new construction rather than mere repairs, it is wise to consult an architect or engineer," said the Administration officials. "Your saving will be much greater than the fee of the architect, which may be included in the loan," they added.

Exhibitors were also advised to consider the neighborhood and the character of the property to be improved. Cost and benefits should be weighed against the building's future and surroundings. "If your application is rejected because of unfavorable neighborhood conditions," said the Administration, "you may still become eligible for a loan by enlisting a substantial group of neighbors in a general neighborhood improvement plan."

The first loans were made on August 15th, and by January 1st, 1935, the government expects that $500,000,000 will have been expended for remodeling and repairs under the plan, with the full estimated amount of $1,500,000,000 expected to be spent by January 1st, 1936.

A front-page crusade by the Kansas City Journal-Post, against an allegedly indecent vaudeville act at the Tower theatre in that city, this week engendered a storm of protest by Kansas City theatre men.

The newspaper's denunciation revolved around the appearance of a girl, aged four years, in a family act. The child's parents, and especially the theatre, were berated in a review of the Tower's bill—which, strangely, was printed on the paper's front page—for allowing the child to sing such "ribald" songs as "Minnie the Moocher" and to tell "vulgar" jokes. The paper ran a two-column box the depth of the full page, headed "Work For the Police," beside the review. The act was subsequently removed from the Tower bill.

Exhibitors were up in arms against the paper's stand. The Tower had not been advertising in the Journal-Post, and exhibitors see in the attack a warning that they "had better use the paper as an advertising medium, or else take the consequences."

HOLLYWOOD ALERT TO INFLUENCE OF STAR BROADCASTS ON BOX OFFICE

Fox, MGM, Twentieth Century Refuse To Permit Contract Talent to Perform on Air; Others Favor Moderation

The motion picture industry in Hollywood, through the medium of some of the large producing companies, went on record this week, unofficially, as being opposed to the promiscuous "appearance" of its contract talent on the radio for entertainment purposes alone.

Some of the studios appear to have finally arrived at a realization that motion picture theatre owners were not entirely in the wrong when, as on several occasions in recent months, they voiced their objections to frequent film star broadcasts of song and dance on both sponsored and sustaining radio programs, on the grounds that such air entertainment detracts to an immeasurable degree from motion picture box-office values, which subsequently lessens receipts, and, besides, unfairly competes with theatres during the time of the broadcasts.

Radio Exploitation Favored

Radio broadcasting by star and player talent under contract for purposes of exploiting motion picture releases of the day are favored, however, in some quarters.

Some 200 to 250 Hollywood player personalities appeared on air programs during the season just passed.

With the brand new conclusion reached by some of the largest producers that radio entertainment by their contract talent is competition to the performances at the box office of their own pictures, it appears that the long-fought battle between exhibitors on the one hand and broadcasters and producers aligned on the other may be nearing an end in favor of the exhibitors.

Exhibitors have long contended that the practice of giving free radio broadcasts in radio studios in the large cities, and also in unused theatres renovated for that purpose, constituted flagrantly unfair competition. This practice, coupled with widely publicized radio "entertainment" appearances of film stars, has been the cause of reduced theatre revenue, theatre owners have charged.

MPTOA Demanded Cessation

The stars and players on independent companies, as such, rarely ever participate in radio entertaining, nor do the independents sponsor programs on the air.

Although the exhibitors' fight against radio competition of film stars has been largely of a spasmodic nature, and almost wholly unorganized, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, at its 14th annual convention in Los Angeles, last April, virtually demanded immediate cessation of entertainment broadcasting activities by film personalities under contract to studios.

A careful survey made this week of the attitude and official policies of the large producing companies in Hollywood brings to light several interesting facts pertaining to this troublesome problem, as follows:

1. Three producers—Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and 20th Century Pictures—flatly refuse to permit their contract stars and featured players to broadcast under any circumstances.

2. Paramount and Columbia do not object to radio broadcasts featuring their contract players when those players are allowed to "plug" forthcoming pictures produced by their own company, either generally, or in connection with specific showings.

3. The RKO Radio studios, which own and operate a broadcasting studio on the lot in conjunction with National Broadcasting, naturally favor screen talent broadcasting, and it is from this studio that the Hollywood-on-the-Air program emanates each week. Universal, which has no objection to occasional broadcasting activities by its contract players, participates on this program at times.

4. Warner Brothers also operate a broadcasting studio, station KFWB, and over this its stars and pictures are exploited. Warners also permits commercial tie-ups for broadcast purposes by its stars, provided they are allowed to "plug" Warner pictures.

For many months relations between exhibitors and distributors and producers over the film star broadcasting situation have been strained. The distributors, exhibitors charged, had refused to cooperate with them in persuading Hollywood to eliminate what was threatening to become a serious competitive influence on the box-office. The attitude of the majority of distributors, however, was that the theatre man was exaggerating the situation and was not capitalizing what distributors considered to be an effective medium of exploitation and publicity.

Thus it was that exhibitors finally decided to go directly to the producers, to attempt to influence them to put an end to the practice contractually.

Whether or not all of the producers have definitely written clauses into their contracts with players prohibiting broadcasts of any nature, whether interviews or dramatic, could not be ascertained. It is known, however, that both Metro and Fox have taken such action and it is thought that others will follow.

Indications are, however, that the exhibitor's fight is not yet completely won. From Al Wilkie's Paramount publicity office in New York recently came the announcement that "radio and motion pictures will continue more and more mutually to benefit each other by using stars of their sister industry."

This statement is attributed to John W. Swallow, Hollywood director for NBC. With the new NBC studios in Hollywood now in full operation, Mr. Swallow said that it is possible for more and more radio stars to go to Hollywood during the course of a radio contract and continue their air shows while working in films.

"It is expected that this fall the radio world will be astounded by the number of air shows coming out of Hollywood—both with motion picture stars taking time off from their studio work and with radio stars trekking westward to take time off from their air work to be in pictures," Mr. Swallow said

From Hollywood have come reports that contemplated action of the producers against film talent broadcasts has stirred the colony's acting residents into something like a frenzy, the majority of actors being of the opinion that occasional broadcasts stimulate theatre attendance rather than detract from it.

Actors Consider Retaliation

Further, the actors, through the Screen Actors' Guild, are reported to be considering retaliatory measures against the exhibitors by turning down all offers of personal tours in theatres throughout the country. Although this movement has not received the official sanction of the Guild, the actors who are sponsoring it declare that they have helped the theatre owners' business by making personal appearances in their houses and, therefore, should be allowed to manage their own business as they see fit.

Many players have openly expressed the opinion that their appearances—particularly those of the gossip-interview variety—have done more harm than good to their reputations.

Another point of contention between some Hollywood producers and players has been over the question of remuneration for broadcasts. Some studios have assigned their players to programs for exploitation purposes, but have refused to allow those players any extra compensation. One studio, which is definitely opposed to all broadcasting, recently allowed one of its contract players to broadcast on one program, with extra salary from the sponsor, in lieu of a salary raise at the studio.

Fox Against Broadcasting

Not only is the Fox studio set against radio broadcasting, but the company's board of directors has gone on record with the conclusion that the appearance of picture personalities, whether its own or those of others, is a direct interference with motion picture theatre business. The studio maintains that pictures make the personalities first and that when they are famous, "radio grabs them."

Paramount permits its players to broadcast on programs boosting Paramount pictures, but objects to the general practice. This studio's objections to the general practice are (1) It is an imposition on exhibitors and (2) When a star broadcasts, production schedules are interfered with. In the cases of Bing Crosby, Lannie Ross and Ethel Merman, contract players now but erstwhile radio headliners, they have no jurisdiction over existing contracts. These stars, however, with the consent of their commercial sponsors, usually aid Paramount's pictures in their broadcasts.

Warner Brothers has its own radio station.

PARAMOUNT CLAIMS, 50 MILLIONS; CIRCUIT HOLDINGS DOWN TO 1,280

Claims of Creditors Reduced from $282,000,000; 600 Theatres Have Been Turned Back or Were Abandoned

Creditors' claims against Paramount-Publix Corporation have been reduced some $232,000,000 since petition in the bankruptcy was field in April, 1933, from an original claim of $282,700,000, to $50,600,000. Other interesting highlights of the corporation's financial and corporate structure that were revealed this week by the Paramount management and trustees included:

1. Circuit's holdings have been reduced from the 1932 peak of 1,800 theatres to 1,230.

2. Present creditors' claims are: $25,800,000, held by bondholders; $25,800,000, by banks, and $11,300,000, by general creditors.

3. Parent corporation earned $5,029,252 net profit in 1933, and a net of $2,601,856 in the first quarter of 1934. Net loss in 1932, after all charges, was $19,945,000.

4. Cash on hand was $15,644,000 at the beginning of the summer, compared with $6,561,000 on the same date in 1933.

5. Receipts for 14 months ended June 16th, 1934, were $84,859,000, and disbursements, $78,271,000.

The reduction in claims, drastic in its scope, realizes the most optimistic hopes of all groups working for reorganization of the company and would seem to point the way to Paramount's economic rehabilitation. Many months ago, shortly after the original claims had been made known, debenture holders interested in reorganization had expressed the view that could the claims be scaled down to about $60,000,000, a plan of reorganization could be effected.

The present claim balance comprises those of debenture holders, amounting to $25,800,000; banks, for $13,500,000, and general creditors, $11,300,000.

Among the large claims eliminated through plans of settlement are those of the Paramount Broadway bondholders for $178,500,000; Allied Owners, $23,300,000, and general creditors, $12,500,000.

One of the final points in the Paramount reorganization was, however, forestalled last week, when the 12 banks involved in the 1932 credit transaction of $13,000,000 to Film Production Corporation, a Paramount subsidiary, succeeded in intervening with a United States District Court motion to test the legality of the subpoenas with which officers of the banks had been served and the validity of the proposed examination of the officers. Suit had been brought by the Paramount trustees to have the transaction set aside.

The banks' test case came up in New York on Wednesday before Federal Judge Murray W. Hulbert, who referred the motion to Judge Alfred Coxe who is now vacationing and is not expected to return for another week. As a result, Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballantine, counsel for the Paramount trustees, said that the suit would not be tried until October at least. All of which lessens the expectancies of reorganizing Paramount by October 1. The leading factors in the Paramount reorganization work are understood to view the delay with exasperation.

Among bank officers subpoenaed were Thomas A. Reynolds, vice-president of National City Bank, New York; Max D. Howell, assistant vice-president of Chemical Bank and Trust Company, and L. A. Keidel, vice-president of Bankers' Trust. Nine other New York, Chicago and Philadelphia banks are made defendants in the Film Production suit, in which the Paramount trustees seek to have the banks declared general, rather than preferred creditors of Paramount.

Meanwhile, it was disclosed officially that Paramount Publix and its subsidiaries showed a net profit of $5,029,252 for the entire year of 1933, and a net profit of $2,601,856 for the first quarter of 1934.

The 1933 profit compares with a loss of $9,730,234 for 1932, before charges for depreciation and amortization. After deduction of those charges, the 1932 loss amounted to $19,945,569. Included in the comparative statements, which were disclosed last week in an official earnings report to Special Master John E. Joyce, are charges for film exhaustion, or write-offs, in 1932, of $36,994,000; in 1933, of $26,460,000 and for the first quarter of this year, $7,718,000.

Cash on hand on June 16 of this year was $15,644,000 compared with cash on hand of $6,561,000 on April 22, 1933, the date on which Paramount was adjudicated a bankrupt.

Receipts during the 14 months ended June 16th, 1934 were $84,859,000, and disbursements, $78,271,000. The receipts of picture subsidiaries were $49,227,000, and of the trustees, $4,327,000. Disbursements of Paramount Pictures Corp. amounted to $46,786,000; of other subsidiaries, $29,971,000; trustees, $1,514,000.

Small creditor groups in Paramount are understood to be contemplating opposition to the petitions for fees and allowances aggregating $721,204 for services of the trustees, their attorneys, and special accountants and counsel employed by them in connection with the bankruptcy. Bondholders groups represented by Victor House, Saul E. Rogers and Samuel Zirn indicated this week they would urge drastic reductions in this amount. These same groups opposed the petition for $296,000 of allowances for services during the three and one-half months of the company's equity receivership. Those fees eventually were reduced to $105,000.

An interesting, and important sidelight on the Paramount situation was afforded this week when it was estimated that the company's theatre holdings have been reduced by approximately 600 theatres during the past 18 months. This information was contained in a report to the U. S. District Court in New York, which places Paramount holdings at approximately 1,230 houses, of which slightly more than 1,000 are in 39 American states, 200 in Canada and 30 in 11 foreign countries.

In 1933, a report to the same court had placed holdings at approximately 1,800 theatres at their 1932 peak.

Reorganization of Saenger Theatres and Saenger Realty Corp. by September 15 was made a possibility Tuesday by the approval in New Orleans Federal court of certificates of deposit for bondholders of the company. Court approval of the deposit certificates authorizes Saenger to proceed with reorganization.

Ostrer Here To Finish G-B Plan

Mark Ostrer, at the head of Gaumont-British, important English company, arrived in New York from London this week and immediately went into conference with Jeffrey Bernerd, general manager of Gaumont-British, and Arthur A. Lee, head of Gaumont in America, on the completion of plans for the establishment of a Gaumont distributing and perhaps an exhibiting organization in the United States.

On his arrival Mr. Ostrer was quoted as declaring the company has no intention of invading the American theatre field, but will rely on the quality of its pictures to obtain playing time in the theatres of the country. He declared Gaumont-British is spending an average of $250,000 on each feature picture.

The indications are that the company will organize a national sales force here, with physical distribution being handled by an American distributor. Also pending is a deal whereby the Roxy theatre in New York will take 16 Gaumont-British features, establishing itself as a Broaoway show-window for the product. Mr. Ostrer is expected to remain in New York several weeks.

Urges A Good Will Campaign

George P. Aarons, secretary of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, this week issued a plea to all exhibitors to adopt in future the role of goodwill ambassador among local organizations and individuals in order that a better understanding of the problems of the theatre man and the industry in general may be given to the public.

Mr. Aarons, whose appeal is timed to coincide with a cessation of general hostilities in Philadelphia on the part of the press and the church, advised exhibitors that if they do not feel inclined to speak before organized meetings he himself is ready to talk to civic organizations on their behalf.

Walsh Named to Executive Committee of the MPTOA

Morgan Walsh, president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Northern California, has been elected a member of the national executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, according to Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA.

Mr. Walsh will attend his first meeting in his new capacity when the executive committee meets in Chicago within the next few weeks. It is planned to map new double feature opposition at the session for future MPTOA action. Production changes also will be discussed, as well as the music tax.

"Jaydee"

the story of the spectacular career of J. D. Williams

By TERRY RAMSAYE

DEATH came swiftly this week to daring James Dixon Williams, most famous entrepreneur and adventurer of the business of the motion picture.

The end was at ebb tide in a career which had carried "Jaydee" through from a novitiate with black-tent picture shows in the picaresque world of the carnival when the century was young, to high executive position as the dominant general manager of First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., in the days of its glory, 1917 to '23. The impress of his special genius and creative imagination lays across the screen from Australia to Britain and all the lands between.

From the abundance and effulgence of the life of a prospering showman in the bright lights of Broadway and Shaftesbury, Mr. Williams' fading resources found him, in this summer of 1934, with home a woodland cabin at Schooley's Mountain in New Jersey.

Most undismayed and still merrily following the fairy pipers of fortune, ever expecting a turn on the morrow, "Jaydee" came to Broadway as often as might be, eagerly alert to the flow of pictures and events, building hopes and fancying projects. In a trade press advertisement of one of his projects he insisted on the whimsical line "Night address Edison Hotel." "In the show business you've got to be around nights," he argued. "I want people to know where they can find me."

Ten days ago on one of his journeys between Broadway and Jersey he was stricken with a heart attack, which upon examination proved to be coupled with a nervous disorder. A few days ago on the way to the office of a physician he was seized by another attack and was taken to Manhattan State Hospital, where he died Tuesday morning, at the age of 57. The funeral was held Thursday afternoon at Campbell chapel in New York, followed by cremation.

Mr. Williams is survived by his wife, Ethel Hope Williams, and three sisters, Mrs. Victor Fear of Sebastopol, California; Mrs. Hugh Chatfield of Catlettsburg, Kentucky, and Mrs. Clough Davidson of South Point, Ohio. He was a thirty-second degree Mason, a Shriner and a life member of the Elks.

Mr. Williams was born at Ceredo in the hills of West Virginia, February 27, 1877. When he was sixteen he left school to take the box office ticket selling job at the Parkersburg Opera House. He started promoting immediately and became the editor and publisher and advertising salesman of a program house organ.

He always had to "go and see"

PIONEERED WITH A BLACK TENT

With the advent of the motion picture in those dim days before it had created a home for itself in the nickelodeon young Williams became one of the array of exhibitors who presented film programs in black tents as one of the attractions of the many itinerant carnival outfits which trouped the country in the period. Carnival men were violently nomadic, predatory and resourceful. He learned about the show business from them. It was the same rough but richly endowed school which contributed to the making of many another motion picture showman, including the late William Swanson and Edwin S. Porter, whose "The Great Train Robbery" founded the photoplay and gave initial impetus to the nickelodeon.

The adventures of the road took "Jaydee" and his picture enterprise presently into the big Northwest, where he was engaged in exhibition variously in such centers as Spokane and Vancouver. He opened and operated a half dozen theatres in the era when equipment consisted of a two-pin Edison projector and a set of folding chairs.

Vancouver was then as now a great port where ships come in from all that vast other side of the world. Already restless with the call of the road, "Jaydee" one day found in one of those folding chairs a remnant of an illustrated paper from Australia, apparently discarded there by some sailor. As he read the paper out in the light of the lobby, under the squawking phonograph ballyhoo, Mr. Williams decided that he must be going somewhere and that that somewhere would be Australia.

"I wasn't sure why I was going there," he recounted not so long ago, "but I was sure I had to see a country where the leaves grew upside down on the trees and kangaroos leaped all over the landscape. I've always had to 'go and see.'"

Half-a-world away in Australia, fortune and romance were waiting this hopeful young adventurer. Luck and opportunity were with him in the land of the kangaroo. Australia, remote from resources of both the homeland and the United States, was amusement hungry and a perfect market for the show that comes in the can. Mr. Williams arrived in 1909 as production was just hitting its stride in its first great era of development. He founded the Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Company with a chain of continuous motion picture theatres that were—and continue—among the most successful in the world. Later he was the successful promoter of a merger of his corporation and its theatres and exchanges with Wests, Ltd., and Spencers, Ltd., under the names of Union Theatres, Ltd., and Australasian Films, Ltd., concerns which continue in active prominence in that field.

In Australia, in the midst of this rising career, Mr. Williams wooed and won the handsome and athletic Miss Ethel Jefferson Hope, a champion swimmer from England, who had gone out to Australia to be secretary to Hugh McIntosh, M. P., publisher of the Sydney Times and variously interested in theatres.

As was seemingly inevitable in the cycle of Williams' exploits and enterprises, there came a day when he wanted no more of Australia. He sold and sailed away, arriving in time to have a contact with the formation of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, organized to distribute Adolph Zukor's Famous Players product and Jesse Lasky productions. In New York he represented Colonel William N. Selig's venturesome nine-reel first feature, "The Spoilers," with which Samuel L. Rothafel, by dint of Williams' salesmanship, opened the Strand theatre on Broadway in 1914.

HOW FIRST NATIONAL WAS BORN

Thereafter Mr. Williams voyaged about the world a bit and arrived one day in Los Angeles in the significant year of 1916. Significant it was because the rising power of Adolph Zukor in the building of his mighty array of Famous Players-Lasky forces, with control of a preponderance of box office material in both players and directors, was exerting pressure upwards on film rentals. Here and there across the land important exhibitors, dependent on that product, were chaffing and growing heated. In Los Angeles it was Thomas L. Tally, who had come up from his first "theatre" in the back of a phonograph parlor in 1902 to be a first-rank exhibitor of the feature era.

GETS BIG IDEA: FIRST NATIONAL!

In Los Angeles Williams explored busy Hollywood and looked the town over, seeking an inspiraiton. It was the dark early hours of one morning when he bounced out of bed and started to shake Mrs. Williams by the shoulder.

"Get up Hopie, I've got a big idea!"

Mrs. Williams, having been married now for some years, was rather used to hearing about big ideas at odd hours.

As "Jaydee" breathlessly raced through a recital of his inspiration for a big theatre circuit syndicate she began quietly to reassemble the covers. As she turned away to sleep again she remarked:

"Sell that to some exhibitor and when he Ok's it I'll tell you its big, too."

A few hours later "Jaydee," all a-glow, set out looking for Thomas L. Tally, exhibitor.

As Mr. Tally recalled the contact many years after, it seems that Mr. Williams, with his Australian experiences and promotions freshly in his mind, came to see him promoting notions for bigger theatres and a chain of them.

"If they don't quit trying to take my shirt away from me on film rentals for Mary Pickford, I'll have too many theatres right here," Tally observed. And all that led right up to the Williams notion of what a chain or a federation of theatres might do with their buying power. In that conversation the exciting First National Theatres Circuit project was born.

The Williamses and Mr. Tally set out up the coast, calling first on E. Bruce Johnson of the Turner & Dahnken circuit in San Francisco. Up the coast and across the nation the Williams Expedition covered the dominant exhibitors and brought into federation the dominant first-run buying power of the land. Mrs. Williams traveled with "Jaydee" and shared his high-pressure hectic campaigns. She took up stenographic notebook and typewriter again to write his confidential mail and spent many a fevered night drafting and redrafting contracts in hotel rooms between the Coast and New York that spring of 1917.

With First National formed, Mr. Rothafel, who had started to his Broadway fame with "The Spoilers," became the circuit's first president, with J. D. Williams the executive power with the title of general manager.

THE CHECK HE GAVE BACK

First National's syndicated power was a challenge indeed to the producer-distributor concerns. Twenty-seven of the world's best customers had been converted into a buying unit, and potential competitors. Mr. Williams was invited to luncheon at the Cafe Beaux Arts by Adolph Zukor and Lewis J. Selznick, partners in Select Pictures Corporation and distributors of costly product.

Mr. Williams heard at the luncheon that First National had every prospect of failing soon and leaving him without employment. It was suggested that he would make a valuable member of the Select staff, and a check, said to have been for $50,000, was pressed upon him as an advance on the salary that he might expect to earn from Select. "Jaydee" carried the check a while and petted it now and then. Ultimately, according to his reminiscent testimony, it was returned. First National was feeling better.

The first important move of First National was in pursuit of Charles Chaplin, then the world's best box office material. John R. Freuler of Mutual, whose Lone Star Corporation was turning a handsome profit on twelve two-reel Chaplins costing for star salary exactly $670,000, bid a million salary for twelve more. First National bid $1,075,000 for eight pictures and got Chaplin, including production costs, who proceeded to make no more two-reelers and raised the price on First National considerably. They all made money. Thence onward First National went after Mary Pickford, Thomas H. Ince and many another box office star.

It was First National competition which sent the producer-distributors headlong after motion picture theatres as product outlets, culminating, to be sure, in the great circuit development leading up to the problems and decentralizations that still color the screen horizons.

RITZ-CARLTON AND VALENTINO

There came a day when "Jaydee's" word was no longer magic and law in First National—he could be neither right nor lucky all the time, and First National's federation was a set of hard task-masters, many of them with conflicting interests. Presently after a typical voting trust controversy, Mr. Williams resigned. His resignation, never made public, and a copy of which is in the writer's files, will one day be motion picture history's most heated philippic.

Mr. Williams' next venture was named, characteristically enough, Ritz-Carlton Pictures, Inc., in 1925. It was formed while the Ritz-Carlton's Crystal room was still being hired by the motion picture industry to confer aroma and kudos on exploitation parties and previews. Ritz-Carlton's primary purpose was to capture and capitalize the idle box office value of the late Rudolph Valentino, who had left Paramount in a huff, or one of the huffs of his huffy wife. She got huffy almost immediately with Mr. Williams and Ritz-Carlton, too, and that concern came in time to naught. Its debts were paid in the end by Williams' share in the profits of the ensuing picture that Valentino made for Joseph Schenck on a sequel contract.

Then "Jaydee," still merry and hopeful, sailed for England. He organized British International Pictures, Ltd., and brought into being the great stages of Elstree, near London, the British film making capital of today. In 1928, with John Maxwell, head of British International, and E. W. Hammons, Mr. Williams formed World Wide Pictures, Inc., in New York, specializing in imported productions.

With the succeeding years the cycles of the Williams projects grew shorter. The ups and the downs were coming faster as the whole industry became more and more intensively organized and exploited.

The years of the depression came for "Jaydee," and these were all fallow, fruitless years. He who had gone all over the world "to go and see and go and see" came home again to wait and see. He worked while he waited, but it was fate that he was not to live on into a new day in the motion picture industry.

Jacob Schreiber, veteran Detroit motion picture exhibitor, was honored recently at the opening of his sixth film theatre, the New Forest. In Detroit exhibition for many years, Mr. Schreiber now operates the Fine Arts, Majestic, Colonial, two Blackstone theatres.

Penny-a-Seat Is Pledged to Fight Music Tax Rise

Eight thousand theatres on Wednesday pledged to contribute one cent per seat to a war chest being raised by the National Exhibitors Emergency Committee to prosecute a federal court battle against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in order to prevent the society from putting in effect its publicly announced increased music tax schedule for theatres on October 1.

Some $60,000 is expected to be collected from the 6,000,000 seats in the 8,000 theatres operated by the exhibitors who made the pledge. Pledging support were the large circuits and theatres operated by Allied States, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Independent Theatre Owners of New York, as well as local and state exhibitor organizations and the Shea, Commerford, Butterfield, Wilmer and Vincent and other large independent circuits.

The pledges were delivered by representatives at a luncheon at the Hotel Roosevelt in New York, presided over by Walter Vincent, chairman of the Emergency Committee, and Leopold Friedman of Loew's, chairman of the legal committee. Mr. Vincent and Milton C. Weisman, ITO counsel, were named custodians of the fund.

George Z. Medalie, former United States District Attorney in New York, was retained this week by the special Exhibitors' Emergency Committee to lead the theatre owners in the fight. The exhibitors' campaign, to be instituted in the courts, involves the pressing of an anti-trust suit, which is generally regarded as the principal weapon against new scale of reproduction taxes which ASCAP intends putting into effect October 1.

The Society said this week it does not propose a blanket increase in music taxes October 1, but will permit existing contracts to run out their terms.

Sixteen pictures comprise the first group, the first three of which include "The Wandering Jew," which has been sold to MGM; "Bella Donna," starring Conrad Veidt, and "Broken Melody," with Merle Oberon.

Kuykendall in New Orleans

Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, this week will attend a special meeting of the Gulf States Theatre Owners Association in New Orleans.

GOVERNOR AWARDS PLAQUE

THE first of the Quigley Awards to be won by one of Broadway's own showmen was presented Monday afternoon to Charles W. Curran of the New York Strand, with Governor Herbert H. Lehman making the presentation at his New York residence in Park Avenue. Curran won the July award for his exploitation campaign on Warner Brothers' "Here Comes the Navy". In making the presentation the Governor said:

"Mr. Curran, I am pleased to present to you on behalf of MOTION PICTURE HERALD and the Committee of Judges representing the showmanship of the motion picture industry, this plaque, the Martin Quigley Award for July, for your advertising campaign on Warner Brothers' picture, 'Here Comes the Navy,' selected as the most meritorious by the judges of all those submitted to the Managers' Round Table Club during July. You are honored, too, as the first New York theatre manager to receive the Award in this world-wide competition."

RCA Wins Royalty Action in Kentucky

Judgment was entered in the United States court in Owensboro, Ky., last week, awarding $51,922.86 to the Radio Corporation of America in its suit against the Ken-Rad Corporation. The order says the judgment is to be credited with $887.03. The suit had to do with royalties, the Ken-Rad contending it was being discriminated against in the matter of paying royalties. The judgment will be appealed to the United States circuit court appeals.

Music in Films Held Aid to Their Appeal

Music and dances in motion pictures have been responsible for an increase in the world circulation of films from approximately 50 per cent to 90 per cent, according to Dave Gould, RKO Radio dance director who is in New York on a vacation.

More than half of Radio's product for the 1934-35 season will include music in some form or other with appropriate dances wherever that may be possible, Mr. Gould indicated.

"BANK NIGHTS" VIOLATE CODE, RULES AUTHORITY

Hundreds of Exhibitors Will Be Affected by Surprise Ruling; Flood of Appeals on Zoning

The Motion Picture Code Authority "cracked down" on hundreds of exhibitors this week when it made a surprise ruling that so-called "bank nights," a form of merchandising stunt involving prizes, are violations of the motion picture code's lottery and reduced admissions provision.

This ruling, which established a Code Authority precedent in cases of the kind, was based on an appeal by the Englewood theatre in Chicago from the local grievance board in that city which had held that a "screeno" game involving the distribution of a cash prize by the theatre was a violation of the reduced admissions clause. The Authority upheld the local board's finding. Complaint was brought against the Englewood by the Balaban & Katz Southtown theatre.

The ruling follows a previous decision by the Code Authority allowing each local board to rule on "bank nights."

Authority Flooded with Appeals

The Code Authority this week literally was flooded with clearance and zoning appeals from practically every key city in the country. For this reason, in order not to retard new season selling, the Authority has designated a committee to investigate the advisability of abandoning attempts to draft new clearance and zoning schedules on appeals, instead of which, the local boards would be reconvened to resume the hearing of protests against existing schedules. The committee consists of George J. Schaefer, Paramount; Charles L. O'Reilly, T. O. C. C.; R. H. Cochrane, Universal; Nathan Yamins, Allied States, and Harold S. Bareford, Warners.

In the meantime, all scheduled hearings by the Code Authority on clearance and zoning appeals have been postponed.

U. A. To Contest Ruling

Preliminary plans for drafting a new assessment schedule for producers and distributors, and arrangements for more equitable exhibitor assessments were discussed at a Code Authority committee meeting in New York this week. A report was scheduled to be made to the Authority later this week. Division Administrator Rosenblatt must approve any new levy and all companies affected also must endorse it before it is put into effect.

United Artists will go through with its original plan to contest the Code Authority's ruling that United Artists' pictures are subject to the code's 10 per cent cancellation clause, by filing a test case in United States District Court, New York. The suit was scheduled to be filed this week.

The Code Authority's decision, rendered several weeks ago, points out that the cancellation provisions of the code are intended to be remedial in nature, providing exhibitors with some leeway in making program arrangements to conform to the requirements of local audiences and conditions.

The Authority finding held that United Artists' individual contracts are the same as those of other companies except for their designation of film cost and the manner of playing. It cited a clause in the company's contract giving the distributor the right to cancel all contracts in the event of a breach of any one as creating a situation in respect to United Artists "which does not differ from the usual practice in the industry of executing a single contract for all pictures with varying rentals and playing arrangements for each individual picture."

"Surely," the Code Authority decided, "in so far as the rights of the distributor and the obligations of the exhibitor are concerned, the difference is only in form."

The NRA in Washington this week, as part of the general program of improvement, announced a virtually complete realignment of its code groupings to conform to a new fundamental classification of all industries and trades. Henceforth, all amusement codes, including the motion picture, will be listed in the Service Industries groups.

In Atlanta last week the GFTA Independent Theatres' Association issued a plea for the small exhibitor, and in a document entitled "The Declaration of Independents," scored the motion picture code as favoring the large interests.

Copies of the "declaration" were sent to President Roosevelt, General Hugh S. Johnson, Will H. Hays, Sol A. Rosenblatt, John C. Flinn, heads of producing companies, local code boards, the Atlanta exchange managers, the trade press and all individual "of any prominence in the industry."

Local code boards during the past 10 days were reversed by the Code Authority on all but four out of 19 cases brought before it on appeal.

MPTO To Hold Annual Session in Pittsburgh

The annual convention of the MPTO of Western Pennsylvania, Allied affiliate, will be held at the Shanley Hotel, in Pittsburgh, October 1-2. The present roster of officers is expected to be reelected, in addition to three directors whose terms expire this year.

The present officers are: Dr. C. E. Herman, Carnegie, Pa., president; William Lipsie, Blairsville, Pa., vice-president; Joseph Gellman, Duquesne, Pa., treasurer; Fred Herrington, Pittsburgh, secretary.

Ohio ITO Joins Allied

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio in Columbus last week, it was voted to affiliate with Allied. P. J. Wood, secretary, was instructed to wire Abram Myers to that effect. Mr. Wood is now alternating between Cleveland and Cincinnati from week to week.

Charles Haarmann Dies

Charles H. Haarmann, 73, father of William Haarman, booker at the Omaha Paramount exchange, died in that city last week.

Warns Against High Percentages

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware this week issued a warning to exhibitors against major distributors who are allegedly charging 40 and 50 per cent of the gross for their pictures. With new-season contracts still being negotiated in most sections, the organization urges exhibitors not to sign contracts having such high percentages with any distributor.

"We all know that exhibitors cannot make money playing these kind of percentages," the MPTO said.

Meanwhile, during the past week, further production plans for the 1934-35 season were announced.

Blue Ribbon Pictures was formed and has leased space at General Service Studio in Hollywood to make from four to six features.

C. C. Burr, former Educational producer, will produce an undetermined number of features for the independent market.

UB Iwerks is about to launch a new series of "ComiColor" cartoons for release through P. A. Powers' Celebrity company.

Fifteen one and two-reelers on the company's new season program have been completed in New York by Educational. Tom Howard has been re-signed for a new group of two-reelers.

Wanger May Return to Paramount

Exploitation Pictures announced 24 action features and two serials. The former include "Courage of the North," "Timber Terrors," "Fury of the Mounted," "Rogues of the Rockies," "Roaring River," "Million Dollar Haul," "Missing Messenger, "On the Spot," "Inside Information," "On Patrol," "Captured," "Way of the West," "Pals of the Range," "Saddle Courage," "The Ropin' Fool," "Two Fisted Gallagher," "Going to Town," "Sure Shot Sam," "The Dawn Rider," "The Texas Terror," "The Ridin' Preacher," "Cyclone of the Saddle" and the "Ghost Rider." The two serials, in 12 chapters each, are "Pioneer of the Plains" and "Custer's Last Stand."

Fairhaven Productions, Ltd., closed with Arthur Greenblatt for distribution of "Ra-Mu" in New York.

Fox will make 10 quota pictures in England during the new season. Domestically, aside from previously announced plans, Fox will release a new picture produced by Earl Carroll and Harold B. Franklin, former theatre executive, will make two for Fox, entitled "Gambling" and "Three Sisters."

Negotiations are understood to be nearing completion whereby Walter Wanger will return to Paramount, where he formerly was production manager. Mr. Wanger is scheduled to make six features for the 1934-35 program, the first to be "The President Vanishes."

United Artists' revised program totals 21 features. Ten will come from 20th Century, three from Goldwyn, two from Reliance, three from London Films, two from British & Dominions and one from Charlie Chaplin. Mr. Goldwyn's third production for the season will be "Broken Soil," with Anna Sten and Gary Cooper. Ronald Colman signed a long-term contract with 20th Century, the company announced this week.

A report from Hollywood on Tuesday indicated that a new company, Adventure Pictures, is being organized there to produce 26 features and six serials, with financing by Agfa Ansco, which was reported to be investing $2,000,000 in the venture. However, this report was later denied by Charles Cannon, New York manager for Agfa, who said he had no knowledge of any financial connection between his company and the new producing enterprise.

Mexico Assists Home Producers, Shifting Tariffs

The Mexican government has answered still another quest for aid in their uphill struggle made by native motion picture producers by slashing to the minimum import duties on materials that benefit the home folk and elevating the tariffs on articles that made the going of the national industry more difficult.

Under a decree signed by President Abelardo L. Rodriguez, the ministry of finance, which has charge of customs tariffs, has put into effect the following film and accessories import duties:

Blank films for cinematographic cameras, 50 centavos (about 14 cents) the kilogram (2.2046 lbs.). Positive films intended for cinematographic purposes, the width of which does not exceed 20 centimeters, eight pesos (about $2.25) per kilogram, and those wider than that from 10 to 18 pesos (about $2.80 to $5) the kilogram, according to their classification.

Spanish dialogue and music films are given the edge over those in other languages. The levy is fixed at eight pesos the kilogram for all positive films that have Spanish talk or music impressed by the Movietone or sound on film systems. But if these impressions are in any other language, the impost ranges from 35 to 45 pesos (about $9.75 to $12.50) the kilogram, according to the film's classification. If importers fail to comply with the film quotas they register with the ministry, the duty on these latter films can be placed as high as 75 pesos (about $21) per kilogram.

Discs in Spanish dialogue or music intended to be used with films pay a duty of one peso (some 28 cents) each.

Industry in India Will Demand Importation Duties

A demand for duties on film imports will be made in the forthcoming session of the legislative assembly of India, at Bombay, which will convene shortly. B. V. Jadhav, member of the assembly, has declared the industry needs the assistance of the government if it is to compete with importations that are shown to a large extent in India.

CONGRESS MAY BE ASKED TO HALT LABOR VIOLENCE

Employers in Various Industries Preparing "Showdown" to Stop "Strongarm" Methods

Organized employers of all industries this week were reported to be planning to ask the next session of Congress to place drastic legal restrictions on violent and unfair strike and picketing activities of all labor unions, and, at the same time, create machinery which will enforce these restrictions and provide severe penalties for offenders.

In the motion picture field the activities of labor unions, especially in recent months, have frequently involved such misdemeanors as the planting of stench-bombs in theatres, an act in itself adjudged in most sections of the country to be criminal. It is believed, however, that the forthcoming drive for more rigid control of labor organizations will chiefly center around the subject of picketing.

In New York, within the past two weeks, as a result of Mayor La Guardia's order that picketers are not to be molested—provided they conducted themselves without interfering with business and provided their signs stipulated the truth of the grievance—picketing of theatres has been rampant. During the past week five Broadway theatres were stench "bombed."

Rank and File Ask Direct Action

According to the United Press, there is, on the other hand, agitation from the rank and file of labor for direct action to bring a clearer cut definition of the collective bargaining provisions of the National Recovery Act, and for definite steps by the Government to make this guaranty effective and binding.

The American Federation of Labor is "under fire" from both directions, it was said. It is being attacked by employers as "too grasping" and criticized by some of its membership as "not sufficiently aggressive."

United Press, in a copyrighted story from Washington, said:

"The National Association of Manufacturers has distributed copies of the British trade disputes act of 1927 and apparently will sponsor some such law in the United States.

"The British act made strikes illegal under certain conditions, prohibited sympathetic or general strikes, limited picketing and in general controlled local employment relations.

" 'We will fight strenuously against any such plan,' said William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

Three-Point Program Offered

"Another type of labor union control, advocated by some employers, is illustrated in the last midmonthly review of the National Association of Credit Men, which proposes a three-point labor program to provide more able labor leaders, control through a national body and fair practice codes for labor unionism comparable to the NRA codes for industry.

"The recovery act, while specifying what industry may or may not do, leaves labor without restrictions.

"This second plan, which in similar form has been discussed in Washington, is intended to meet the argument of many employers that, while not opposed to the principle of collective bargaining, they do not want to deal with the type of men now being put forward by organized labor," continued United Press.

"Another approach to this problem is the announced intention of the American Federation of Labor to war on communist groups in the labor movement. Some labor liberals see in this a threat that more progressive ideas, or anything not sponsored by the conservative leadership, will receive a communist tag and forthwith be opposed on that score," it was said.

The Independent Theatre Owners' Association in New York on Thursday issued a "warning" to Mayor La Guardia that unless he took some action to alleviate the picketing situation in the city's theatres, the exhibitor organization would appeal to Governor Lehman for troops. The ITOA claimed that although their own pickets are limited in number, or barred altogether, pickets of Local 306 of the IATSE operators' union were allowed to stage "snake dances" in front of theatres impeding the entrance of patrons to the box-office, and, in some instances, forcibly preventing patrons from entering theatres. As a result of the ITOA "demand," the Mayor ordered that only two pickets be allowed at each theatre.

Allied Operators' Union Tuesday obtained a show cause order against Local 306 and other unions to restrain them from picketing ITOA theatres where Allied operators are employed.

The support of the American Federation of Labor was pledged on Wednesday to the IATSE operators in New York in their drive against so-called company unions, especially Allied Motion Picture Operators' Union, by Matthew Woll, vice-president of the AFL.

Breen To Publicize Clean Films by Air

Joseph I. Breen, head of the Production Code Administration, this week started a series of radio broadcasts sponsored by the motion picture industry, which are designed to give the general public a more comprehensive and accurate picture of forthcoming film fare on the 1934-35 production schedules.

The first of the four broadcasts in the series got under way on Wednesday night and featured Lionel Barrymore and Irene Dunne in a film "preview," as well as an interview with Mr. Breen. There will be two evening performances of these broadcasts and two in the afternoon, dates to be set later.

Edwards, Once Director, Dies After Yonkers Brawl

John Edwards, 44, once a director for Warner and Fox, and in 1925 named publicity director for Warner, died late last week in St. Joseph's Hospital, Yonkers, following a brawl in which he was knocked down, sustaining a fractured skull.

Four men, his associates along the water front in Yonkers, were held in his death. Jack Edwards, who had been a hanger-on of the water front for several years, is survived by his wife, once a screen actress, and two children, whom she supports. They live in Larchmont.

WATCH RKO-RADIO NEXT SEASON!

RKO-Radio made remarkable strides during the last three years and we believe that 1933-34 was the greatest year they ever had. Those who still have their SRT issue of Aug. 26th, 1933, will find that we said, "Keep an eye on Radio Pictures next season . . . we will be very surprised if they fail to live up to the promise . . . their new product holds out."

Our judgment, apparently, was pretty accurate for this company when we analyzed their product for the season now drawing to a close. They were headed, to all appearances, for a big year and those who played their pictures will testify that they achieved what they were going after.

So much for the announcement book of the new 1934-35 product. But again we say, "What about past performances? RKO-Radio's was O. K. For two straight years they have delivered strong product. They seem destined to continue their upward stride.

At this stage of the game we are predicting a tremendous year for them.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THERE IS A DRAMATIC STORY behind the recent vote of the Code Authority which resulted in the elimination from zoning and clearance schedules of all penalties against exhibitors engaging in the practice of double bills. It is a story that is a highly flattering indication of the integrity of some people in this business and the sacredness of a gentleman's promise. The vote was a victory for both independent distributors and independent exhibitors.

The story goes back to last summer, when, during the code drafting proceedings at Washington, Robert H. Cochrane, sterling vice-president of Universal, fought the larger companies against the inclusion of any dual bill ban in the code. There were other vexatious questions which arose in the secret chambers of conference, and in many of these Universal's position was opposed to several others of its large colleagues. Universal's agreement was necessary, and so Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, and Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Metro-Goldwyn, pledged their word to Mr. Cochrane that if he would vote their way on the other questions, they would vote his way on double featuring.

When the question of doubles eventually came up again at the recent Code Authority hearing in New York, the promise made by Mr. Kent and by Mr. Schenck to Mr. Cochrane was wholeheartedly recalled by them, and they both redeemed their promises one hundred per cent, voting against the inclusion of any penalties for exhibitors showing two features.

The vote was a close one. Had Mr. Kent and Mr. Schenck voted to penalize duals, the future of some independent distributors and the operations of some double bill theatres would have been in jeopardy.

More than a dozen years ago, the lanky and aging Charles Ray—he's now 43—brought to Hollywood the first English butler, to preside over the domesticities of the Ray household when his home was one of the show places of the movie capital, and Charlie's money bags were well lined with gold. The film folk about town used to sneak up, ring the front doorbell and then hide in the bushes just to see the swankily attired butler open the door. Ray has had some tough sledding since then and now he opens front doors the while trying to make a comeback in Paramount's "Ladies Should Listen," in which he has a small part as a hotel doorman.

Nathan Burkan, general counsel for the American Society of Composers, answered exhibitors' complaints against the Society's publicly announced intention of raising the scale of music royalties, with the statement: "Exhibitors are under no compulsion to use music. If the price is too high, let them leave it alone."

If any exhibitor taking Mr. Burkan's advice literally has any trouble separating the music from the words on the sound tracks of the prints, write to him at 1501 Broadway, New York. He will no doubt be glad to explain how it can be done.

Daily at lunch a group of producers and studio generals foregathers at the eating place on La Brea near Wilshire, known as Ray's Delicatessen (advt.). In the corners, over salami, herring, or cheese cake, the tablecloth linen fills with fancy figures—production costs, star salaries, royalties, dividends, bonuses and whatnot.

We sympathize with the Mexican public. They are becoming a passive people. A few years ago an endless broadcast would have started a revolution. But, then, maybe they're getting some encouragement from the knowledge that the end may not be far.

Old, but clean, and apropos of the effect of the Legion of Decency drive, is the story going the Broadway rounds about an elderly lady who purchased a ticket to see "Cleopatra," celluloid vamp, on the Paramount theatre screen, and was passing the doorman when he noticed that she had a dog tucked in her arm under her coat. "Sorry, madam," he said, "but it's against the rules to bring the dog into the theatre." The old lady sniffed contemptuously. "How absurd," she retaliated. "What possible harm can 'Cleopatra' have on my dog?"

KFWB, and over this its stars regularly advertise Warner pictures. The studio has tied up on commercial programs, always with the proviso that the Warner players "plug" Warner pictures. In the case of Dick Powell and his regular broadcasts Warners insist that he feature music from either his own or other Warner musical pictures. Al Jolson, on the air for the greater part of the season, always manages to get in a word for a Warner film.

RKO Radio's own Hollywood-on-the-Air program every Sunday night uses this time to advertise not only its own pictures and personalities, but the entire industry. The programs are open to any studio wishing to participate.

MGM does not permit its contract players to broadcast, believing, it is said, that this is an imposition on exhibitors' time and is another and alluring form of competition that keeps people away from theatres. Despite this, Jimmie Durante substitutes regularly for Eddie Cantor on his broadcasts, due to prior contractual obligations.

Universal does not object to its players broadcasting and is, in fact, in favor of it "inasmuch as radio takes film personalities into people's homes," which, it believes, is one way to build up talent, especially newer talent such as Margaret Sullavan and June Knight.

Columbia allows its players to broadcast only when the broadcast will offer advantages to a Columbia picture or personality. In this case, Grace Moore has been the focal point, having appeared on the Fleischmann's Yeast hour, when she featured some songs and part of the story of "One Night of Love."

20th Century pictures will not permit its players to broadcast. The only experience it had in this line was when Constance Bennett appeared on Louella Parsons' corset program. In that case, the songs from "Moulin Rouge" and a definite plug for the picture was the price of the studio's consent. It was reported that Miss Bennett thought the interview "rather silly."

Samuel Goldwyn has never made a definite statement on the question of player broadcasts. Of course, he has only Anna Sten and Eddie Cantor under contract and to date there has been no occasion for a Sten appearance. In the case of Cantor, the star "plugs" Goldwyn and Cantor pictures with the consent of his sponsor, Chase & Sanborn coffee. Cantor being an established radio personality who makes 26 broadcasts a year and only one picture, Mr. Goldwyn is said to believe that "his radioing keeps him in the limelight." Cantor starts a new contract with Pebecco on January 1.

Fox-Wilson Theatres Taken Over on the Coast

The Fox-Wilson theatre properties at Fresno, Calif., have been taken over by the newly organized Fulton-Stanislaus Company, following foreclosure proceedings.

The Fulton-Stanislaus Company, whose directors are Charles H. Turner and William H. Noble, of San Francisco, and William A. McKee, of Oakland, was formed for the express purpose of taking over the property. Foreclosure of the trust deed was ordered when the L. W. Wilson Company, which erected the theatre building, defaulted on its bonds. The Wilson company also filed an assignment of all leases to the new corporation.

Corporate Identity of First National Ended

Certificates terminating the corporate existence of First National Productions Corporation, First National Pictures Distributing Corporation and Vitaphone Distributing Corporation were filed in Albany, N. Y., on Tuesday in the office of the secretary of state by Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc.

This action has no bearing on the operation of the company in production and distribution. The subsidiaries named above are wholly-owned by Warner and their elimination is in line with the current Warner policy of consolidation of such corporations for simplification of the tax structure. Last week the various Stanley theatre companies were merged into the Stanley Company of America.

Independents Are Back of Clean Pictures Drive

Independent producers have "fallen solidly into line" behind the drive for morally clean pictures, W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, and a member of the Code Authority, said Monday in Seattle.

The independents, at a late hour last Wednesday, finally agreed to accept the code certificate and machinery of the Production Code Administration, headed by Joseph I. Breen.

Members of the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association have agreed to combine their strength to maintain right moral standards with the MPPDA members and to this end they last week appointed I. E. Chadwick as official representative of the independents to sit with the Production Code Administration at all times.

Mr. Breen's department has approved 73 feature pictures of all companies since the reinforced formula became operative under his administration July 13. Eighty short subjects and six serials likewise have received the approval seal. In New York, Vincent Hart, eastern assistant to Mr. Breen, has approved 11 features, 92 shorts.

Johnston Given Luncheon During Tour of Exchanges

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, touring Monogram exchanges, was tendered a luncheon this week at the William Taylor Hotel in San Francisco, attended by leading circuit operators and independent exhibitors. Floyd St. John, western district manager, arranged the luncheon. From San Francisco Mr. Johnston is touring the Sheffield exchange system in the west.

A. G. Edwards has joined Monogram as manager of the Denver office in the Sheffield exchange system. James R. Keitz and J. H. Sheffield have been named salesmen working out of the Denver office and F. W. Sheffield will act as booker.

Columbia Dividend

Columbia Pictures, Inc., has declared a regular quarterly dividend of 25 cents on its common stock, payable October 1.

Status of Fox Theatre Circuit Still in Doubt

This week's principal development in the Fox Theatres bankruptcy situation was the filing of a petition requesting the removal of the corporation from receivership in order to reorganize under Section 77-B of the new Federal bankruptcy laws by three of the corporation's creditors.

In U. S. District Court, New York, Louis L. Seidman presented claims for $35,000, the Theatre Builders' Corp., Inc., claimed $400,000 for alleged breach of contract, while the third creditor instituting the petition, Merriam Rogers, claimed $430,941. The petition was filed by Charles L. Kelby, New York attorney.

The creditors asked that the company be removed from receivership on the ground that it could be more economically operated under a plan of reorganization and that it would be faced with fewer difficulties than under a receivership.

The petition of the trio listed current assets as $1,050,751 and set the book valuation of the stock of $17,045,152, with $10,465,631 as the receiver's valuation. Total liabilities were listed at $5,774,398 as of December 31, 1933. The current deficit was given in the petition as $25,842,846.

Three other creditors this week filed an answer to a petition questioning its good faith, opposing the petition with the allegation that debts of Fox Theatres aggregate $40,000,000 and that current assets are virtually without value. The answer alleges that any reorganization is impossible.

Alleging that its ownership of all of the capital stock of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses constitutes a valuable claim against that corporation, Fox Theatres on Tuesday filed an answer to the involuntary petition for reorganization.

The creditors who filed response to the petition are Newsprint Publishers, Inc., Baldwin Piano Company and R. C. Cherry.

Meanwhile, new short-term operating contracts for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, on a revised basis, are being negotiated in New York with Skouras Brothers and Randforce by the circuit's bondholders' committee. The new contracts are understood to provide for a six-months' operating arrangement to cover the period of the Fox Metropolitan reorganization under the new bankruptcy laws.

The future status of the Fox Metropolitan circuit is still undecided. So far there have been no further bids for the 87 theatres in the chain, although it is expected Warners may make another offer for the Fox New Jersey houses, in which territory Warners have considerable interest.

Other theatre deals in the New York territory included the acquisition of two more theatres by Harry Brandt, thus increasing his total local holdings to 26 houses.

Si Fabian's remaining interest in the Stanley, Jersey City, was sold last week to the Stanley Co., a Warner subsidiary.

Under the terms of negotiations completed this week arrangements have been made for the merging of the Brill circuit of nine Staten Island houses with the Paramount, St. George.

Paramount and Warners last week concluded a pooling arrangement binding together the Paramount and the Strand, Brooklyn, and making available to both houses the product of each company.

Denver Police Stop Lotteries

Denver theatres indulging in the practice of lotteries and other give-away devices last week received a setback when the local police department ordered an immediate cessation of such activities. A letter addressed to Harry Huffman, exhibitor, by the department, similar to letters sent to all local owners, follows in part:

"Our attention has been called to the fact that you are conducting an automobile lottery in your group of theatres. This is in violation of the laws of the state of Colorado and the ordinances of the city and county of Denver. Therefore, we wish to advise that if any such lottery is conducted in the future, you will be prosecuted according to law."

Within the past nine months, the Huffman group of eight theatres has given away 31 Ford cars, with a value in excess of $22,000.

Wisconsin Amusement Plans Acquisitions

Acquisitions planned by the Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises, Inc., Milwaukee, on operating agreements, include the Paradise and Allis theatres in West Allis; the Fox and Strand theatres in Marinette; the Lloyd in Menominee; the Rex in Oshkosh and the theatre in Menasha.

Gene Phalen will serve as resident manager of the West Allis houses, while Martin Thomas is slated to preside over the Marinette and Menominee theatres. The Rex in Oshkosh has been operated by Etta Weisner. Charles Loewenberg, advertising and publicity manager for the circuit, will supervise the circuit's state houses, and Robert Frenzel, who recently joined the organization, will serve as supervisor of suburban theatres.

Receiver Is Named for Two Cincinnati Houses

Ben L. Heidingsfeld, Cincinnati attorney, has been named by the U. S. district court at Columbus as receiver for the Shubert-Cox Theatres Company, Cincinnati, upon petition of Trebuha Realty Company, New York. The petition indicates that, while the company's assets exceed liabilities by nearly $500,000, it is not in a position to meet maturing obligations.

Creditors will be enjoined from bringing suit to satisfy their claims in order to prevent dissipation of the assets. Assets are listed at $1,500,000 and current liabilities at $1,149,107.88. The Shubert and Cox, legitimate houses, also play pictures during the regular season.

More Theatres Joining Detroit Booking Group

Tom Lancaster, operating the Grande theatre, Delray, Mich., and the Lancaster, River Rouge, has joined Ray Moon's Co-operative Theatres of Michigan, formerly Midstates Theatres, in Detroit.

The booking combine is moving to larger quarters in the Fox Theatre Building, new accounts and additional business making the move necessary. The eight Sam Brown theatres are now being booked by the combine.

NEW WAR BREWING OVER DUAL FEATURES

California Owners Threaten to Take Their Fight Against the Practice to the President

Ben Berinstein's powerful southern California exhibitor group will take its fight against the double bill practice to the President, if necessary, in order to retain penalties against dual shows in code clearance schedules. The Code Authority recently ordered that all penalties for double feature theatres be removed from the new schedules.

Mr. Bernstein was en route to New York from the headquarters of his Associated Exhibitors organization in Los Angeles, with orders from his independent theatre members to carry the fight to a "last ditch stand."

The Code Authority's recent ruling that theatres playing double bills must not be penalized in clearance schedules, was based on the point that the motion picture code does not make any mention of duals as a trade practice and, therefore, clearance boards stipulating penalties for theatres indulging in the practice are exceeding their authority.

Golden Attacks Dual Ban

In Atlantic City, at a convention of Allied States Association, Edward Golden, sales manager for Monogram Pictures, launched an attack at the exhibitor organization for cooperating with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in its fight to eliminate duals.

"The time is coming shortly when there will be a showdown. If you conspire with the MPTOA on elimination of duals you are destroying the independent," Mr. Golden said.

Mr. Golden told the convention that the MPTOA's agitation against double bills is the most destructive force in the fight of the independents for their salvation.

Meanwhile, Mr. Berinstein, passing through Kansas City, declared that if the Code Authority rejected the California exhibitors' demanded provision for penalizing duals in clearance schedules "we will take the fight directly to the President, because relief is imperative in view of the dual bill situation involving both circuits and independents."

Believes Code Authority Will Shift

In commenting on the Code Authority's resolution invalidating double bill penalties in the recent Milwaukee board case, Mr. Berinstein said he anticipated the Authority would reverse itself.

"If the Code Authority is playing politics, we want to find out about it," he said. "Elimination of duals was agreed to by all but 22 theatres in the Los Angeles territory, independents preponderantly favoring the ban, while the circuits are holding out. California exhibitors have been threatened by women's clubs with single feature legislation unless duals are eliminated, because of their effect on children."

At the Code Authority hearing, scheduled for Thursday, the Berinstein group will set forth a demand for clearance penalties for film theatres showing vaudeville in conjunction with pictures.

The double feature situation in other sections of the country during the week involved the threat of a campaign against the practice in Buffalo by the local Legion of Decency. The Buffalo group cited three reasons why duals should be done away with: (1) Double features usually mean at least one bad picture and people who want to patronize a theatre to see the good one hesitate to do so because they wish to avoid the other; (2) Double feature programs are too long and tire the audiences, and (3) They make a double demand in the industry for product, which must fill in the gap with "cheap trash."

In Kansas City dual bills were abolished at all first runs on Friday, according to prearranged schedule.

In Milwaukee, the scene of the Code Authority's clearance ruling, Warners' Strand first run was slated to reopen September 1 with a dual feature policy. Indications are that before the end of the year 75 per cent of the houses in Milwaukee county will be playing double features.

In St. Louis, another duals fight was brewing, with the decision of three first runs—the Missouri, Ambassador and Fox—to cut prices and feature two pictures on one bill. These houses are operated by Fanchon and Marco, and their decision to return to twin bills is considered to definitely end all attempts to ban duals in that city. Warners is the only holdout on the agreement signed by all other theatres and Fanchon and Marco, charges that Warner is responsible for cutting the prices and the return to duals.

DeMille Hits Censor Boards at Luncheon

The general public does not want censorship, Cecil B. DeMille said at a luncheon in his honor at the National Press Club in Washington last week. Mr. DeMille intimated that censor boards were too much concerned with the formality attached to their jobs to function with much real efficiency.

"The public wants clean pictures, not censorship," the director said. "The churches have done the industry a great service in forcing the deletion of inexcusable vulgarity from the screen."

Mr. DeMille deplored the mass of misinformation now purveyed to the public through the screen. If produced in good taste, he said, any subject can be filmed and producers lacking such taste will be automatically eliminated through the "inherent decency" of audiences.

Form Merger Company

Tri-Consolidated Corporation of New York City has been chartered at Albany with capital of 20 shares no par value stock. Broadcast Pictures has also incorporated, to exhibit. The Tri-Consolidated Company covers the joint operation of the Consolidated Circuit, operated by Lawrence Bolognino, and the Springer and Cocalis houses.

Famous Canadian Takes House

Famous Players Canadian, with headquarters in Toronto, has purchased the Capitol Theatre, Welland, Ont., from the S. L. Lambert Estate, for $60,000. It is indicated the circuit is in the market for acquisitions.

Lewis Jones, An Eastman Official, Dies in Rochester

Lewis B. Jones, vice-president of the Eastman Kodak Company, and a Rochester, N. Y., civic leader for many years, died suddenly last week at his country home near the city of a heart attack. He was 68 years old. Though apparently in good health when he left his office to go to his country place, Mr. Jones had been suffering from a heart ailment for some time. His body was found in one of the barns at his farm, indicating the swiftness with which death had struck.

Born in Dansville, N. Y., in 1866, Mr. Jones attended Dansville School, the Fairfield Academy and the University of Rochester. He came to the Eastman Kodak Company in May, 1892, as advertising manager, and in 1918 was named vice-president in charge of sales and advertising, a position he held at the time of his death. He was regarded as the one individual in the organization, with the exception of George Eastman himself, who was responsible for the international popularity of the Eastman Kodak name.

It was Mr. Jones, who, finding little advertising being done when he came with the organization, developed that phase of Eastman Kodak promotion. He was active in developing foreign distribution and the establishment of stores in all parts of the world. He was director of the audit bureau of circulations and consequently his name was widely known.

Personally, he had a great interest in cattle breeding, and operated a large dairy farm, giving personal attention to his most modern equipment. He was also one of the most prominent members of the Rochester Yacht Club, and was the owner of the schooner Naomi III.

Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Horace S. Thomas, and a son, Robert F. Jones, a broker, and three grandchildren. His wife, Alice French Jones, died a year ago.

Mr. Jones was a member of the Genesee Valley Club, Country Club, Rochester Chamber of Commerce, Phi Upsilon fraternity, Rochester Historical Society and Association of National Advertising.

Mrs. Felix Feist Dies; Was Author

Mrs. Bertha E. Feist, wife of Felix F. Feist, general sales manager and director of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, died late last week at their New York home, after an illness of several months. She was 48 years old. The funeral, held early this week, was attended by numerous film executives, headed by Nicholas M. Schenck, president of MGM and Loew's.

Mrs. Feist was the author of numerous children's books, including "Grunty Grunts Indoors," "Grunty Grunts Outdoors," "Smiley Smiles Indoors" and "Smiley Smiles Outdoors," which met with considerable favor. She was also an authority on sports, and wrote several articles on golf, including some for "The Metropolitan Golfer." Her poetry appeared in many leading magazines, and she was also a talented painter, several of her portraits having been exhibited in local galleries.

She was a member of the Mount Vernon Club and the Metropolitan Country Club. Surviving, besides Mr. Feist, are a daughter, Mrs. Myron Nast, and a son, Felix, well known in Hollywood production.

Warners' Mother Passes; Aged 76

Mrs. Benjamin Warner, mother of the Warner Brothers, died on Monday of this week at her home in Hollywood of a cerebral hemorrhage. Seventy-six years old, she had just celebrated her fifty-eighth wedding anniversary with her husband. At the bedside when death came were one of the four remaining brothers, Jack L., and his sister, Mrs. Louis Halper. David, Harry and Albert, en route by chartered plane from New York, which they boarded when informed of the serious condition of their mother, arrived after Mrs. Warner had died. With them were two other sisters, Mrs. Harry Charnas and Mrs. David Robbins.

Mrs. Pearl Warner was born in Poland, and came to America with her husband, Benjamin, after her son Harry, now president of Warner Brothers, was born. In Youngstown, Ohio, at the home of the mother, the brothers' entrance into the motion picture business was decided upon 27 years ago. A fifth brother, Sam Warner, who had been in the bicycle business in Youngstown prior to the motion picture venture, died several years ago.

From her home in Beverley Hills, where they had lived for the past 10 years, Mrs. Warner had in recent years interested herself in various charities, of which her favorite was said to have been the clinic of the Los Angeles Sanitorium.

Funeral services were to be held Thursday at B'nai Breth Temple, Los Angeles. Simultaneous services were to be held at the New York Warner office, which was to be closed for the afternoon. Interment was to be in the Warner mausoleum at Home of Peace Cemetery, Los Angeles.

Griffith, Falls Plan Circuit Gain to 103

Within a short time R. E. Griffith and Horace R. Falls of the Griffith Amusement Company, R. E. Griffith Theatres, Inc., and Consolidated Theatres, Inc., operating in Oklahoma, Texas and New Mexico, plan to increase the circuit from 97 to 103 theatres.

Recently they have opened the New Lindsay, Lubbock, Texas; New Rex, Hobbs, N. M.; New Cactus, Carlsbad, N. M. A consolidation was recently effected between Griffith and Hodge in Midland, Texas. The six houses to be acquired will be in Texas and Oklahoma.

Takes Fourth Theatre

Louis S. Bach has leased the Ponce de Leon theatre in Atlanta, which will be remodeled and refurnished immediately. Mr. Bach operates the Hilan, Alpha and Bankhead theatres in Atlanta.

Universal Plans More Production In Hungary City

During a recent visit to Budapest, Carl Laemmle, president, surveyed Universal's Central European production and appeared so greatly satisfied with the results of Joe Pasternak's producing activities, in Budapest particularly, that he intends to concentrate European production in that city increasingly in the future. Expenses, Mr. Laemmle declared, were about 50 per cent lower than in most other available places and more advantageous even than in Vienna.

Of the 22 German films and one Hungarian picture produced by Universal during the last four years, there has been a profit of 30 to 40 per cent. This average has been reached mainly since Francesca Gaal, Universal's Hungarian star, started work in German pictures, of which "Miss Paprika" and "Farewell Veronica" as well as "Scandal in Budapest" have been lucrative hits.

Mr. Pasternak's latest production with Miss Gaal, "Spring Parade," was previewed by Mr. Laemmle in Budapest and judged so satisfactory that he intends to have an American version made in Budapest with American actors next spring. The next picture scheduled for production is an adaptation of a Hungarian one-act play in which Miss Gaal had a huge success on the stage. It is called "Little Boy in Big Shoes" and is to be done in German and Hungarian versions.

Joseph M. Schenck, United Artists executive, was also in Budapest recently and arranged for establishment of an East European distributing center locally, where all prints for Roumania, Yugoslavia and Poland will be made and titled, for reasons of economy.

Four Theatres Pooled In New Cleveland Deal

The Allen theatre, until recently Cleveland's only independently operated first run, will be operated by a local committee under a pooling arrangement between RKO and Warner. Affected are the RKO Palace, the Allen, Warner's Hippodrome and Warner's Lake. All are downtown first run houses.

It is understood they will share losses and profits. Warner, Fox and Radio pictures are to be played. The booking committee for the four houses will include Nat Holt, RKO; Nat Wolf, Warner, and Herbert Greenblatt, local RKO branch manager. The Allen will reopen early in September.

RKO Leases More Space

RKO Radio Pictures has leased additional space in the RKO Building, Rockefeller Center, New York, in order to afford adequate mailing facilities for various departments.

Warner Java Firm Chartered

Warner Brothers-First National Pictures (Java), Inc., has been incorporated at Dover, Del., with a capitalization of $10,000.

Warners Launch "America" Series

Some 100 government officials, film executives and others gathered in Washington on Tuesday to attend a preview of the first four motion pictures in the Warner series entitled "See America First," followed by a luncheon held at the Mayflower Hotel. The subjects were photographed by E. M. Newman.

The reception and showing was attended by cabinet members, army and navy officers, officials of patriotic societies, educators and others. Among those who attended were: Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper, Lewis T. Brauninger, president of the Kiwanis Club of Washington; Dr. Stephen C. Kramer, superintendent of schools of the District of Columbia; Honorable Faye Bentley, Judge of the Juvenile Court; Brigadier Frank T. Hines, Administrator of the Veterans' Bureau; Brigadier Alfred P. Smith of the Military Intelligence Division of the War Department; Clarence McDonough of the Public Works Administration; Col. James A. Moss, President-General of the United States Flag Association; Major General Amos A. Fries of the National Society of Sons of the American Revolution; Fleming Newbold, publisher of the Washington Evenue Star; Joseph Melia, business manager of the Washington Post; Mrs. William Smith, former president of the Parent-Teachers' Association, and others.

The "See America First" series comprises 13 one-reel Vitaphone shorts each one based on an historical period in American history, the entire series covering the founding of the country and important events leading up to present-day America. The four films shown at the national capital were "Pilgrim Days," "The Boston Tea Party," "Hail Columbia" and "Dixie Land."

Germans Censored 221 Films; 68 Were American

Germany censored 221 feature films during the 1933-34 season, according to a report to the United States Department of Commerce from trade commissioner George R. Canty, at Berlin. Of the total, 117 were German, 68 American and 36 other foreign pictures.

In the 1932-33 season, 205 were censored, including 133 German, 43 American and 29 other foreign films. The 1931-32 season found 237 censored, of which 139 were German, 62 American and 36 other foreign films. During the past season foreign films accounted for 37 per cent of the total as against 35 per cent in the previous season and 42 per cent in the 1931-32 season.

Seattle Circuit Changes

Frank L. Newman, Jr., former manager of the Fox in Seattle and more recently manager of Evergreen State Amusement Company houses in Spokane, has assumed direction of the Mt. Baker and American theatres in Bellingham, Wash. He succeeds Arthur Hile, resigned. Morrie Nimmer, assistant to Harry Woodin, of the Paramount, replaces Marc Bowman as manager of the Liberty in Wenatchee.

MGM Renews Brown Contract

Clarence Brown, director, has signed a new three-year contract with MGM. He leaves shortly for a European trip, in search of stories and screen personalities.

INVESTIGATION OF CODE IS DEMANDED BY ALLIED

Independents Sitting on Local Code Boards Urged to Resign, as Eastern Convention Ends

Allied States Association brought its three-day eastern regional convention to a close at Atlantic City over the weekend with a demand for a thorough Congressional investigation of the motion picture NRA code. At the same time it was urged upon the independent exhibitor members and upon all unaffiliated units to withdraw from any participation in the code and that all such members sitting on Local Grievance or Clearance boards resign.

The Allied's resolution demanded that Congress "look into all phases of negotiation, drafting and administration" of the code and that, in its enactment of legislation extending the NRA, "it provide for negotiation for a new and fair code for the film industry with the aid and assistance of fair and unbiased representatives of the government." Allied's tirade against the code was not a new one.

Myers Calls for Action

The convention pledged itself to work "unceasingly" to this end and called upon independent exhibitors throughout the country, whether affiliated with Allied or not, to join that organization in its fight for Congressional investigation of the code.

Last Thursday, at the meeting, Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board and general counsel, called upon the nation's exhibitors "to rise up in arms against their enemies."

"Action must be taken," said Mr. Myers, "if the independent exhibitors are to survive. They must roar like lions."

Mr. Myers asserted that the motion picture code had been imposed upon the independent exhibitors and that they "must never again allow themselves to be ravished in this fashion."

A second resolution pledged the independents to seek revision of the copyright law, "which will neutralize the arbitrary and destructive power possessed and exercised by such combinations as the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and restrict copyright owners to privileges and protection reasonably contemplated by constitutional grant."

Asks All Independent Support

A third resolution asked for the unified support of all independent units, while a fourth urged that further erection or licensing of dog racing tracks be stopped, that no giveaways be distributed and that the racing season be limited to four weeks, with betting restricted and racing be confined exclusively to afternoons.

Sidney E. Samuelson, president of the national Allied, was re-elected president of Allied of New Jersey, at a salary of $5,000 annually. This is the first time that that post was made to carry a salary.

During the session considerable discussion was given to the sales practices of three companies which were said to be insisting that exhibitors buy all short subjects and pay for them on a weekly basis regardless of the number played. Heretofore, payments for shorts were made only when the subjects were played. The three companies accused are Fox, Paramount and MGM. The convention registered its protest unanimously, charging violation of the code, and insisting that some action be taken to halt the practice of tying in shorts with features.

Little hope was seen by many Allied members of effecting a single feature policy in New Jersey. The original starting date of a dual ban in Jersey—agreed upon by the state unit for September 3—already has been set back to September 20. The Skouras Circuit, which signed the agreement, has double bill bookings already dated until October 16.

Discuss Double Features

The double feature question was discussed at the banquet on Thursday night by Edward Golden, Monogram sales manager, who accused Allied of cooperating with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America policy of "driving independent producers and distributors out of business" by favoring elimination of doubles.

Mr. Golden hit the MPTOA's agitation against duals as the most destructive force in the fight of independents for their own salvation.

Aaron Saperstein, head of the Chicago Allied unit, proposed a plan which would set up six district appeal boards under the code to hear and dispose of appeals in territories covered by these special boards, the idea being to eliminate much of the current delay involved when appeals are sent by the field boards to the Code Authority in New York. Only in the event an exceptional case comes up for final decision should the Authority be concerned, said Mr. Saperstein.

Would Provide Special Boards

The Chicago leader's plan would provide for appointment of special boards to be represented by exhibitors and distributors from surrounding territories. One man from each of the following localities—Chicago, Iowa, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, St. Louis and Indianapolis—would, for example, make up the Chicago district board. Districts should be set up in the west, north, south, east, middle west and probably New England. Each board would sit once weekly. Decisions should be final, but where there is a difference of opinion and the vote is divided, the Code Authority would be the final arbiter.

In addition to being re-elected president of Allied of New Jersey, Mr. Samuelson was named business manager. Jerome Kridel, East Orange, was named a fourth vice-president, and Louis Levin, Newark, assistant treasurer. W. C. Hunt, Wildwood, and R. Wilkins, Pittman, were re-elected directors for a three-year term, while Frank P. Gravatt, Atlantic City, replaced P. Mortimer Lewis on the directorate. Other officers were returned to office.

The next eastern convention of the Allied units will be held, possibly next month, in Boston.

BRITISH CENSOR SEEKS ANIMAL FILM CONTROL

Annual Report Stresses Need For Action; More Scripts Are Submitted; Newsreels Defined

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Two points of special interest to American producers are obvious in the report of the British Board of Film Censors for the year ending December 31, 1933, which has just made its somewhat belated appearance. The delay, it is probable, has been due partly to the difficulty of arriving at a satisfactory policy on one of the matters which concerns Hollywood, the permissibility of "animal films" which reveal or suggest cruelty. No less than 6½ of the 23 pages of the report are devoted to this problem.

The final conclusion of the Board is that international action is the only method by which a complete control of animal films can be established, and it is therefore convening a conference of interested organizations. In the meantime, the policy of the B.B.F.C. is to allow no incident to be screened which either depicts cruelty, or which can reasonably be assumed to have involved cruelty in production. On the other hand, it is expressly declared that the board has no power to prohibit a film on the grounds that cruelty has been employed unless the fact is revealed on the screen.

Board Congratulates Itself

Another feature of this section of the report on which some rather pungent criticism may be expected is the self-congratulation in which the authors (Edward Shortt, president, and J. Brooke Wilkinson, secretary) indulge in regard to the number of objectionable scenes which have been eliminated.

"The Board is judged by what is seen in the cinemas throughout the country, but it is a little unfortunate that it cannot also be judged by what it saves the public from seeing," they remarked proudly—and somewhat naively. The objection to the animal film is not that it shocks the public, but that it hurts the animal. Censorship which conceals the abuses of this type of production while allowing the producer to retain his profits and his reputation is not likely to meet the desires of the animal welfare organizations of England.

The board's references to this question are, in general, far behind public opinion in this country, as well as being slightly disingenuous, but the fact that they go so far as they do should carry its own warning to Hollywood.

American Firms Submit Scripts

The other outstanding feature of the report is the indication of the extent to which producers are submitting scripts to the board for approval before production. "Three years ago," it is stated, "it averaged about one in every four or five weeks, whereas today it averages three a week and the number is steadily rising. American producers have also become alive to the advantages of this system, with the result that more and more scenarios are being submitted from overseas." Out of 139 scripts submitted during the year, 32 were regarded as being definitely unsuitable for exhibition, it is stated.

A more rigid definition of newsreels is another feature of the report. As a result of legal advice, the board is to regard as outside the newsreel category (and therefore subject to censorship) any combination of old newsreel scenes which have been strung together with a commentary in order to provide a "story." It is incidentally revealed that the inclusion of a commentary in any newsreel legally removes it from that category and renders it liable to censorship. The point is of considerable future interest, owing to the tendency to use "news" films for propaganda purposes, but the board does not at the moment intend to ask for a general censorship of newsreels which include commentaries.

An interesting part of the general statistics regarding censorship is the revelation that in 1933 only one silent feature film was certificated. Of 673 features passed, 253 obtained "universal" certificates and 420 "A" or adult certificates. Totally rejected subjects numbered 23, out of 504 to which objection was taken in their original form.

Reasons for Rejections

"Things the censor does not like" are indicated in the following list of reasons for rejection:

Offensive burlesque of the marriage service.
Procuration.
"First Night" scenes.
Maternity homes and intimate details thereof.
Matrimonial complications coming within the prohibited degree.
Comic suicides.
Extreme vulgarity and suggestiveness.
Cruelty to animals.
Crime methods capable of imitation.
Industrial unrest and violence.
Physiological arguments treated too frankly.
Promiscuous immorality.
Bestiality.
Misrepresentation of the British Empire.
British officers in reprehensible situations.

New W. E. Studio Installation

A significant indication of the extent to which American producing concerns are expected to use British studio space in 1935 is to be found in the announcement that the Worton Hall Studio, Isleworth, is to be re-equipped by Western Electric. It will be the fourth British studio to install W. E. recording equipment, and, according to the managing director of the owning company, Mr. E. R. Gourdeau, the expenditure is being incurred with a direct view to placing the studio on a "service" basis.

There is a possibility that MGM may use the Worton Hall plant in connection with its expected policy of making films here for full world release.

In the English Studios

Marcel Varnel is to direct Somerset Maugham's "The Tenth Man" for B. I. P. Frederick Kohner is writing the adaptation.

Stanley Lupino is starring in "All's Fair in Love" at B. & D. for Allied Film Productions, Ltd., who have secured distribution through United Artists.

Girl of the Limberlost

(Monogram)

Drama

The talking version of the famed classic novel by the late Gene Stratton Porter comes to the screen with all the down-to-earth, homely dramatic elements of the story intact, thereby making of the picture something which the exhibitor, especially in the smaller situations, definitely can sell. It is certain that the hosts of readers of the original novel form a large potential audience for the film, and these should not be ignored. Drama, some comedy and many tears characterize the narrative.

Adults will remember the story well, and likewise the silent picture version of some years back. To these the showman has to offer a version, which in its use of the talking medium should add new interest to an old and tried story. Also, in the fact that the film, under the current circumstances, most certainly would meet with the complete approval of the most strait-laced community, there is a selling point. It is a picture for the entire family, an important item to stress in the campaign.

As far as the younger generation is concerned, many of them will have read the story; most of them at least will know of it. Selling the story strongly should have the effect of attracting that classification of the patronage to the theatre. This requires, and should get, no circus ballyhoo, but rather a dignified and quiet, but emphatic campaign, designed to harmonize with the type of production offered. Mother-love, or the lack of it, is of course a dominant theme, that and the struggle of a young girl, disliked by her mother for no reason of her own, who, with the aid of kind neighbors, makes her way to happiness and security, and eventually, into the love of her mother, whose bitterness evaporates when she learns the truth of a situation of the past.

The cast, though not particularly strong in marquee drawing names, is none the less highly competent, the leads being taken by Louise Dresser as the mother, Ralph Morgan as the neighbor, who is like a father to the girl, Marian Marsh in the title role. Helen Jerome Eddy, Edward Nugent, Betty Blythe and H. B. Walthall take minor roles satisfactorily.

The story must be too well known to require detailed recounting. Briefly, in opening prologue sequences is told the story of the perfidy of Miss Dresser's husband, and his drowning just before the birth of their child. Unaware of his duplicity, she somehow holds the child accountable for his death, feeling that but for her condition she might have saved her husband.

The girl, years later, is the badly treated child whose efforts to go to school, to better herself are harshly frowned upon by the embittered mother. She finds her comfort with Morgan and Miss Eddy, childless neighboring couple, and later, when they help her with her school costs, with Miss Blythe, wealthy woman who takes an affectionate interest in the young girl. She meets, and loses her heart to Nugent, nephew of Walthall, the community physician, but learns that Nugent is engaged.

Then follow heartaches and home difficulties, until eventually, when the money which Miss Nixon had saved for her college course is stolen, and Miss Dresser goes to retrieve it from a suspect, she suddenly learns of the duplicity of her husband. She begs forgiveness of her child, and the romance of Nugent and Miss Nixon is finally completed.—AARONSON, New York.

Charlie Chan's Courage

(Fox)

Mystery

The wholly engaging and delightful Mr. Charlie Chan, Chinese detective from Honolulu, and otherwise known as Warner Oland, once again comes to the screen, this time uncovering the nefarious activities of criminal practitioners in and about San Francisco. In that he offers the well developed solution of a crime and protects a valuable necklace, provides pleasant humorous relief by his indulgence in his now famous aphorisms, and on the side, watches and lends his aid to a subordinated romance, the exhibitor has pleasant and attractive entertainment to sell to his patronage.

In addition the fact that the film is the screen adaptation of the late Earl Derr Biggers' novel, "The Chinese Parrot," is worth exhibitor attention, since many thousands undoubtedly have read that particular adventure in the series of Charlie Chan investigations. The selling, obviously, will take the line of the mystery picture, with the emphasis, of course, on the fact that here is another in the Charlie Chan series, again with the suave and capable Oland in the leading role. In support of Oland are Drue Leyton and Donald Woods, attractively maintaining the romance, with Woods as unofficial assistant to the investigation of Chan.

Warner Oland, as Charlie Chan, needs no introduction to the patronage. In all probability mere mention of his name in the story connection, should serve as sufficient drawing power. The development of the yarn itself should hold the attention of the audience without difficulty, and though the mystery is not particularly involved, at least in the later stages of the investigation, the film as a whole is entertaining, and for the most part will defy ready solution.

A very valuable necklace is sold to Paul Harvey, wealthy San Francisco business man, by Woods' father, jeweler, acting as agent. Charlie Chan is the messenger who brings the necklace from Honolulu to its owner in San Francisco. Harvey orders it delivered in New York on a specified date, but a later phone call, in Harvey's voice, orders the necklace brought to the Harvey ranch, located in a deserted part of the western desert. Chan is commissioned to deliver the necklace safely, and to no one but Harvey. Woods goes on ahead to make certain there is no complication, since suspicion dawns early that all will not be smooth in the closing of the necklace deal.

Woods arrives at the ranch in the company of Miss Leyton, who is location agent for a motion picture company, seeking Harvey's permission to shoot scenes at the ranch. They are mutually attracted to one another. Chan arrives, disguised as a cook out of work and is employed by Murray Kinnell, claiming to be Harvey's secretary. Chan and Woods discover evidence pointing to the murder of a visitor to the ranch, and when Harvey's Chinese-speaking parrot, capable of divulging important information to the willing ears of Chan, is found poisoned, and the former cook at the ranch is also rapidly disposed of on his return, the mystery takes a more active turn.

From that point things move rapidly until the revelation, worked out by Chan, that the man posing as Harvey is in reality his double, working in cahoots with Kinnell, to obtain the necklace. The real Harvey is discovered kidnaped and a prisoner in a nearby deserted mine, where also is released the kidnaped Miss Leyton. Chan solves the mystery and Woods and Miss Leyton complete the romance.—AARONSON, New York.

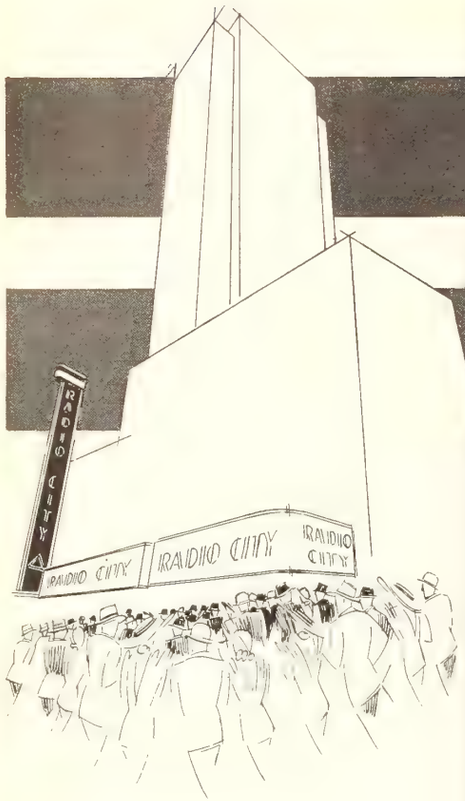
Chained

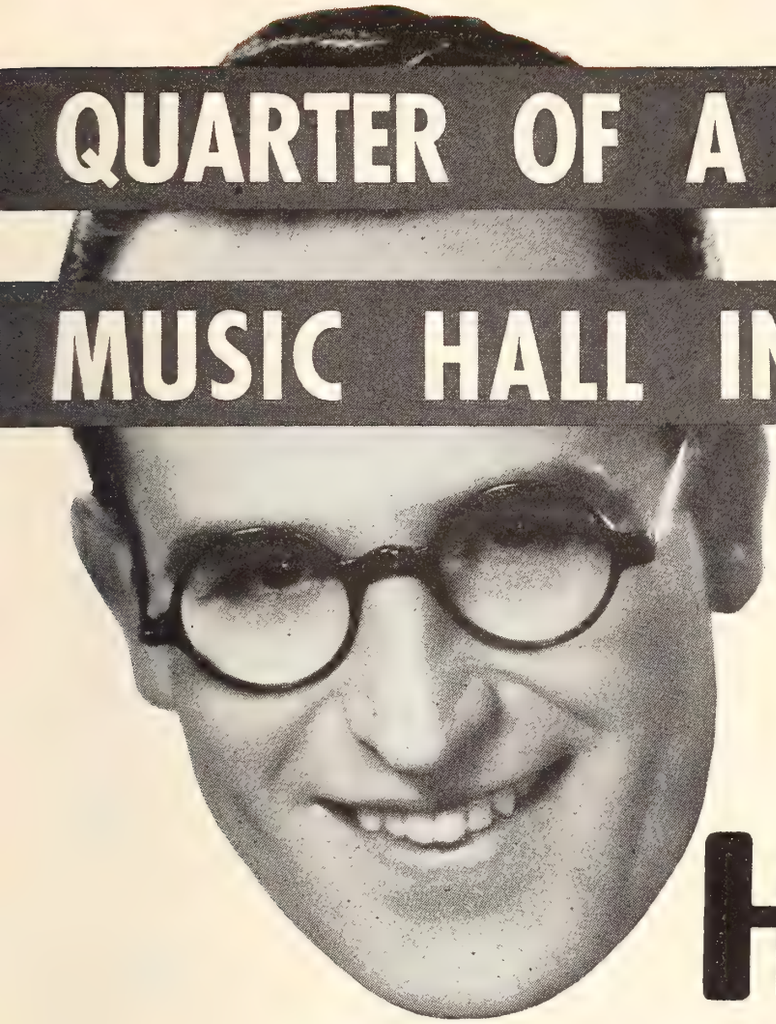
(MGM)



Drama

The showmanship value of the entertainment elements with which this picture deals is long and solidly established. The leading players, Joan Crawford and Clark Gable, are among the foremost exponents of the type of romantic theme which is its motivation.

"Chained" is the love story of one woman—and two men. Elaborately and colorfully presented, it includes many salable assets in addition to name and story quality. Modernly timed, the locales being New York, shipboard, a ranch in Argentina, New York again and an Adirondack hunting lodge, it concerns itself with a condition that is peculiarly modern.



Treating the now delicate subject of divorce, no effort is made at justification or condemnation. In its triangle, which has a fourth angle, a man prevails upon his wife that he might marry another woman. As complications arise, the woman is sent on an ocean voyage to South America. Aboard ship she meets another man. At his ranch she falls in love with him. To play square with the first man, she returns to New York to tell him of her new love. This man, now divorced, sweeps her off her feet and only a curt note tells the second of their marriage.

A year passes. The now married woman again meets the second man. Although both combat it momentarily, the old affection flames. The woman, realizing her folly, insists that her husband take her to his mountain lodge immediately. The man, no longer willing to deny himself of what he thinks is rightfully his, follows. In a dramatic sequence the two men meet; the girl corroborates the story that the second man tells her husband. Although unwilling to surrender that which is his, the hus-

Of the value of the lead names and the story, it is only necessary to remember that they, personally, and similar yarns, have been the occasion of sensational box offices.

Under the current circumstances, the film's moral significance is one that only a thorough understanding and appreciation of local temper can evaluate. Selling it for what it is, a modernly premised romance drama, without succumbing to any temptation to make it a challenge of any viewpoint, appears to be the most logical means of presenting it to the public.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

She Was A Lady

(Fox)

Drama

A down-to-earth story of a girl who had to fight a background not of her own making, in order to prove to herself, as well as to an exacting prospective father-in-law, that she was a lady, despite a lowly beginning, this picture has the elements of attractive entertainment. Romance, drama, comedy have their places in the story, with the locale shifting from the western desert country in the earlier sequences to a circus background, then New York, a touch of England and New York again.

It is a story which likely will have its greatest appeal to the feminine element of the patronage, but the western portions, as well as the active circus sequences, should offer something to all patrons, of whatever sex. A tying-in of the story's theme as indicated with the title should immediately remove any possibility of wrong construction placed on the title line, and at the same time convey sufficient of the theme to make the picture attractive, especially to the women.

Heading the cast is Helen Twelvetrees, with Donald Woods and Ralph Morgan leading the support. Other familiar names are Monroe Owsley, Irving Pichel, Halliwell Hobbes and young Jackie Searl. Since the names are not of the strongest for marquee purposes, the selling should concentrate more on the story itself, with the emphasis on the element indicated by the title interpretation. The fight of the girl to maintain the heritage which her dead father left her offers the way for attractive copy lines in the selling of the picture.

The film opens in a small ranch town in the west, with Morgan, disavowed son of a wealthy English family, living in a state of more than occasional inebriation, with his henpecking wife, who was his mother's lady's maid, and their three children. The oldest child, played by Karol Kay, is the thoughtful, retiring youngster who is the favorite of the father. She develops a background through her father's stories of his home in England, and the study of English classics of literature. As a young woman, some years later, she, an expert horsewoman, obtains a position on a neighboring dude ranch, and there meets the happy-go-lucky, too wealthy Woods. They fall in love, despite the objections of the mother, who warns the girl against marrying out of her class, as Morgan had done. Morgan is killed trying to save a horse in a stable fire, and the girl leaves.

She joins a circus, while Woods, in South America, is making good for her and his father. Enough money accumulated, she goes to England to visit Morgan's mother, as he had wished. There, finding the mother dead, she meets a cold reception, returns to New York, is again approached by the unscrupulous Owsley, whom she had met in the circus. She goes with Woods to meet his father, who registers stern objection to the marriage, claiming the girl's background will not fit the station in life which would be her's if she were to marry Woods. Woods insists on marrying her anyway, but she refuses, without his father's consent. They quarrel, and she becomes a hostess in Owsley's night club. Woods meets her there one night, falls into an inebriated brawl and is taken home by Miss Twelvetrees. As she is about to leave, his father asks her to reconsider her refusal to marry Woods, and a three-cornered reconciliation concludes the film in the expected fashion.

Though the picture is in the main rather more an adult attraction, there is nothing in it objectionable for youngsters.—Aaronson, New York.

The Case of the Howling Dog

(Warner)

Mystery

This is a detective-crime show with several times the amount of mystery ordinarily incorporated in this type entertainment. Romantic love-interest is negligible. The drama, principally because of the manner in which it is handled in dialogue, action and situations by the leading player, a lawyer-detective, provides its own comedy.

Without being a terror picture, it is chockful of wierd and sometimes eerie mystery. As such, it is a novel and unusual attraction for the baffling-crime addicts and satisfactory entertainment for that class of fans who appreciate something a little different in cleverly constructed melodrama.

A dog's howling is the idea on which the yarn is premised. Cartwright, driven mad by the ominous yowling, prevails upon lawyer Perry Mason to do something to stop it. He then writes a will, leaving his property to the woman living next door, the spot where the dog is kept. Suspense, generated at the start, is intensified as Mason takes a strange interest in the case, which leads him into conflict with Clinton Foley, owner of the dog, and Drumm, the district attorney.

As Mason has a date with Foley, his agents having the place "covered," a woman precedes him into the house. She has a short quarrel with Foley. Two shots are fired and the dog and Foley are dead. The woman has vanished when Mason enters. From then on, it is super-detective work. Mason has no difficulty in establishing contact with the mysterious woman. First making himself her lawyer, the situation creating unusual comedy, he tips the police off to her whereabouts. As she awaits trial, he indulges in some hard-to-understand detective work and at the trial succeeds in confounding prosecutor Drumm until that worthy has practically no case.

Demanding that the case be recessed to the Foley residence, he first demonstrates that housekeeper Lucy was in cahoots with the dead Foley and then has the floors of a garage dug up at the spot on which the dog did his howling, to uncover the bodies of Cartwright and his wife, whom Foley had stolen from the frantic victim of the dog's howling sometime previously. The case being dismissed, it appears that the audience will never know who Mary Astor is and who killed Foley and the dog. But it's done in a way that puts a smart kick in the story.

Supplementing the usual exploitation features adapted to mystery pictures, the fact that the original was both a published novel and a Liberty Magazine serial, the readers of which constitute a potential audience, should not be overlooked in introducing the attraction.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Good Luck—Best Wishes

Entertaining

Featuring the Pickens Sisters, popular on the radio, this musical subject has considerable entertainment, with Ferde Grofe and his orchestra also of importance in the lineup. One of the sisters is engaged to a young man whose father is the partner in business of the girl's father. The latter, to save the expense of a large wedding, stages a fight over the marriage with the partner, hoping the couple will elope. It works, but the plan is almost spoiled by the inadvertent actions of the butler. An entertaining subject, with the sisters singing several numbers.—Running time, 21 minutes.

The Orphans' Benefit

(United Artists)

Good

As Mickey Mouse entertains a crowd of orphans at a benefit show in this animated, Papa Disney takes the opportunity to introduce a new cartoon character to his public, Donald Duck, who recites in quacking fashion, becomes angry very easily, and is wholly enjoyable. An adagio by Miss Cow, Mr. Horse and a third party, and an operatic rendition by Miss Cluck, the large hen, are amusing parts of Mickey's show. The subject is certain to meet with approval, especially of the younger set.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Picnic Perils

(Universal)

Fair

Featuring the gangling Sterling Hollaway, this comedy is productive of a few laughs, but in general it rates little better than fair. For those who have a fondness for the comic antics of Hollaway, however, it may be found more enjoyable. Sterling and Sylvia Picker are secretly married, attempt to keep it from her folks, and plan a picnic just for the two the next day. But mama and papa go along with the beau mother has cut out for Sylvia. They run into bandits, there is considerable excitement in an empty house, and the folks change their minds about Sterling when he wins a reward.—Running time, 21 minutes.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

ZANUCK IN PRAISE OF ENGLAND
SIDNEY KENT SCOTCHES REPORTS
NINE FILMS START, SIX FINISH

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

Names carry the news out of Hollywood this week.

Darryl Zanuck, just back from hunting lions, elephants, and rhinos in Africa and traveling over twelve thousand miles by aeroplane, birdseye-viewing all of Europe, visiting the film capitals and getting first-hand the film facts on the continent, said:

"England is the 'white hope' of the film business. The English, today, are as movie-minded as the Americans used to be. Admission prices are high and British producers show profits from distribution in the British Isles alone.

"Twentieth Century, with eight pictures of last season suitable for release in England, will take out over five million dollars from the British Isles, exclusive of Canada, New Zealand and Australia. Ronald Colman and George Arliss, big favorites there, are largely responsible for that figure.

"Some English films are grossing close to a million dollars in native gross. English producers do not need to depend on their foreign business for profits.

"If it weren't for our foreign business, every American company would show losses. Something must be done about raising American admission prices to make American films self-sustaining in America.

"We'll get $200,000 out of Italy on 'Rothschild' alone—that's like found money.

"My first three pictures for Twentieth Century for this season will reflect life in England, France and America. 'Clive in India,' with Ronald Colman, is a sort of 'Cavalcade' of India. It's being adapted from the stage play now running in London. 'Folies Bergere' is our French contribution. Wallace Beery in 'The Great Barnum' will cover America.

"We plan to make 10 this season, and have entered into an exchange agreement with Korda films for plays and players.

"My hunting trophies are being stuffed and shipped here for final taxidermy. No, I don't intend to display them in the lobby of the Chinese."

United Artists To Release 21

Joe Schenck, another international traveler, scouted the recurrent idea that Mary and Charlie may not make further films for United Artists, by his flat statement that their contractual obligations are such that all films they appear in are for that company's release.

Inasmuch as all the United Artists owner-members are now in Hollywood, with Doug and Mary holding secret conferences, Schenck will call the annual meeting as soon as Chaplin gets back from his vacation.

For next season, United Artists expect to release 21 and maybe 22 films. Twentieth Century will provide 10, Samuel Goldwyn three, Reliance two, Korda three, British Gaumont two, Chaplin one, and if Doug Fairbanks finishes his Chinese production in time his will be the twenty-second.

"Chaplin's film is promised for January, 1935," said Mr. Schenck, "or it may be 1936."

Kent Denies Rumors

Sidney Kent, here for about three weeks, is working out current studio problems, getting pictures started, and giving production units value of sales and theatre contacts. He said he was not going fishing, which story was spread locally.

Commenting on his reported resignation from Fox and his taking over another unnamed organization, he said: "The entire fabrication is a series of vicious lies without the least foundation in fact. These stories were palpably circulated for the purpose of creating trouble, but have been unsuccessful in shaking the morale of this organization. I emphatically deny all the scatter-brained effusions being broadcast here by agitators.

"The statement that Fox intends distributing through Paramount or vice versa has never been discussed in either the Paramount or Fox councils. We are pleased with our distribution, and I feel certain that Paramount is with theirs.

"Fox today is distributing at a cost lower than at any time in its history. There are more accounts on our books today and more being added each week than at any time since Fox started in the business. Facts such as these give the lie to any intended distribution mergers."

With rumors rife, Adolph Zukor scotched the one about Manny Cohen's resignation in blunt fashion by stating:

"Rumors such as this crop up every day and I am sure I would like to put an end to them by stating definitely and finally that Paramount does not want to lose Mr. Cohen, and I am sure Mr. Cohen does not want to leave Paramount."

News Flashes

Both "Chained" and "The Green Hat" were previewed by MGM for the press without the Code Committee passing them first.

In both cases the response from the preview audiences suggested "added scenes." Both films were later cleared and Code seals granted.

Following several sessions during which the Independent producers argued the pro and con of code seals, they finally agreed to get their picture okays from Joseph I. Breen. For a while it looked like there would be a split in the independent ranks on this matter. However, I. E. Chadwick is now firmly ensconced at a Breen desk on a salary, to aid in the quick issuing of seals. In view of Mr. Chadwick's long activity as an independent, the appointment constitutes formal recognition of that sector of the industry in the Breen office.

Nine Pictures in Work

Nine pictures were started and six completed during the past week. Currently there are 39 pictures in work as compared with 43 during the same period last year. Paramount and Warner have two of the newly started pictures; singles being credited to Universal, MGM, Columbia, Liberty and the newly formed Beacon Productions. Of the finished product, Warner has two, with one each at MGM, Radio, Universal and Paramount.

Of interest in the new product at Paramount is the actual starting of the long deferred "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." The cast includes Gary Cooper, Henry Wilcoxon, Guy Standing, Colin Tapley, Monte Blue, Katherine DeMille and C. Aubrey Smith. Second feature is "Limehouse Nights," teaming George Raft and Jean Parker in the leads, with Anna May Wong, Montagu Love and Billy Bevan heading the support.

At Warner, "Babbitt," adapted from the Sinclair Lewis novel and featuring Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon, Glen Boles and Maxine Doyle, was put before the cameras. Another one started for James Cagney, "Perfect Week End," with Patricia Ellis, Allen Jenkins, Robert Barrat and Dorothy Dare.

Universal's new one, "Tailspin Tommy," is a serial, featuring Maurice Murphy, Patricia Farr, Noah Beery, Jr., and Grant Withers.

Beacon Productions makes its bow with a western, "Thunder Over Texas," in which Big Boy Williams and Marian Shilling are featured.

With "Evelyn Prentice" starting, MGM continues the "Thin Man" team as William Powell and Myrna Loy are starred. Columbia's new activity is "Police Ambulance," with John Mack Brown, Sally Blane, Bradley Page and George Meeker heading the cast. Liberty Pictures started "Without Children," with Bruce Cabot, Marguerite Churchill, Evelyn Brent, Dickie Moore and Cora Sue Collins as the important players.

Finished at Warner are "The Firebird," featuring Veree Teasdale, Ricardo Cortes, Lionel Atwill, Anita Louise, Spencer Charters and Dorothy Tree. Also "Gentlemen Are Born," in which Jean Muir and Franchot Tone are starred, and Ann Dvorak, Margaret Lindsay, Charles Starrett and Marjorie Gateson are featured.

MGM finally completed "Sequoia," a story of California wild animal life, featuring Jean Parker and Russell Hardie, but with a deer and mountain lion being the actual stars. Radio completed and previewed "The Richest Girl in the World" this week. Leading players are Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Henry Stephenson and Fay Wray. The completed Universal feature, "What Ladies Dream," has Binnie Barnes starred with Neil Hamilton, Paul Cavanagh and Grant Mitchell in support. Paramount's "Lemon Drop Kid," teaming Lee Tracy and Helen Mack in the leads, with Baby LeRoy featured, winds up the list of completed pictures.

SEQUOIA

MGM

Adapted from a book by Vance Holt, noted author of animal and nature stories, this is an unusual kind of outdoor picture. Fundamentally it is the drama, comedy, thrill, danger and the peculiar human interest attached to the struggle of wild creatures in native habitat. Adaptation was by Ann Cunningham and Sam Armstrong, with dialogue contributed by Carey Wilson. Direction was divided between Chester Franklin and Edwin Marin.

Two animals, native of California's High Sierra Mountains, the locale, are the principal figures. The humans who are a part of their story interpretation are Jean Parker, currently in "Caravan" and "Have a Heart"; Russell Hardie, seen in several MGM pictures of which "Men in White" is most recent; Paul Hurst, Samuel Hinds, Ben Hall, Harry Lowe, Jr., Willie Fung and Edward Brophy.

First demonstrating that natural enemies can become friends as Jean Parker, finding a cougar cub and a fawn, raises them to maturity in companionship, the animals are released again to the redwood forests. When danger comes to the doe, the cougar saves her. As her mate is killed, the doe leads her fawn to Jean Parker's cabin with the protecting cougar tagging along. When hunters, rounding up a herd of deer, would kill the deer and fawn, it is the vicious lion that rushes to their rescue.

Accompanying these features is a human interest love story between Jean Parker and Russell Hardie. For spectacle, there is the beautiful photography of the wild Sierra Mountain country, the excitement of animal conflict and the spectacles of nature as it is unleashed in blizzards, thunder and lightning storms, forest fires and floods. One publicity feature that should not be overlooked in connection with this is the recent radio address made by President Roosevelt calling attention to the national park.

THE FIREBIRD

Warner

An advance consideration of this indicates it to be one of the most dramatic and unusual subjects to be utilized for screen purposes in some time. It is adapted from a play that was sensational in Europe and as produced by Gilbert Miller in New York a popular metropolitan success. The screen play is by Charles Kenyon, recently credited similarly on another continental vehicle, "Dr. Monica," and previously "Journal of a Crime," "Mandalay" and "I Loved a Woman." William Dierterle, originally trained in Europe, but maker of "Adorable," "Grand Slam," "Fashions of 1934" and "Fog Over Frisco," is the director.

The cast is composed almost entirely of well known screen names. Verree Teasdale, Lionel Atwill, Ricardo Cortez and Anita Louise are the featured principals. In support are C. Aubrey Smith; Hal Dawson, a stage actor seen in MGM's "Another Language"; Spencer Charters, Hobart Cavanaugh, Etienne Giradot, Helen Trenholme, Robert Barrat, Russell Hicks, Florence Fair and Nan Gray.

Modernly timed, locale is Vienna. In theme, the ultra modern story reveals the secret love of a young girl, who, shielded by her conventional aristocratic family, creates a situation charged with dramatic tenseness by falling in love with a man who has been spurned by her mother. As the man is murdered, the mother not knowing of her daughter's relations with the man, confesses the crime, only to have the daughter, who has been long repressed, acknowledge her responsibility. Court trial proving that the killing was accidental, and actually justified, the daughter casts off the family shackles and announces that she will live her own life.

The value of the story, its situations and moral, indicate the type of applicable showmanship.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD

Radio-Macgowan

This picture is adapted from a stage play of the same title which had a successful New York run. It is a modern dramatic study of a poignant social condition. Its principal character is a boy, the son of divorced parents whose life is bereft of all home influences, and the effect this circumstance has on his character and nature. The screen play is by Willis Goldbeck, recently credited with the screen play on "Murder on the Blackboard." The director, John S. Robertson, made "One Man's Journey" and "Family Man."

Frankie Thomas, who created the legitimate stage role, but who is unknown to picture fans, has been brought here to play the lead character. The chief supports are Karen Morley, featured in "Gabriel Over the White House," "Dinner at Eight" and "The Crime Doctor," which Robertson directed; Edward Arnold, whose work in "Sadie McKee" made him definitely known to many who passed him without notice previously, and Robert Shayne, a newcomer, who was seen in a bit part in "Keep 'Em Rolling."

In character, the story indicates a strong appeal to mothers and fathers, yet being rather deep, possessing a quality, because of the boy, that should interest juveniles. The boy, shown every kindness by his mother and step-father, thinks only of the happiness he could have with his real father who forgetfully disappointed him on some little association he had planned. Sent to military school, his life is not the vibrant exciting thing of his playmates. The father, visiting him, sees and understands, takes him home, deciding never to marry again and keep his love undivided for the boy.

The father love theme has long been a standby entertainment element. Thus, while there is certain value to cast names, the story and its moral is the outstanding showmanship feature.

KENTUCKY KERNELS

Radio

In this, the familiar comedy Wheeler-Woolsey antics which continually get them in and out of fun provoking troubles are enacted against a different background. Authors of the original and screen play are Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby, whose adeptness in comedy is attested to by "Duck Soup," "Hips, Hips, Hooray" and "The Circus Clown." George Stevens, long experienced in handling comedy subjects such as "The Boy Friends" series of shorts, "Cohens and Kellys in Trouble," and the current "Bachelor Bait," is directing.

Principal supports to Wheeler and Woolsey are "Spanky" MacFarland, seen in the "Our Gangs" and also the child who taught Baby LeRoy those funny tricks in "Miss Fane's Baby Is Stolen"; Mary Carlisle, now in "Handy Andy"; Noah Beery, last with W. and W. in "Cockeyed Cavaliers," and Lucille LaVerne, seen recently in "Pilgrimage" and "Beloved." Additionally there are scores of character players and extras.

Music and girl glamour being eliminated in this yarn, the story is straight comedy drama. While the title suggests something with a political twist, the picture is rather the exciting adventures of the pair getting mixed up in one of those gory Kentucky mountain feuds. Their adoption of a child, Spanky, whom they eventually learn is the scion of the wealthy, but quick-on-the-trigger Milfords, puts them right in the line of fire of the battles which they generate between the Milford and Wakefield clans. The possibilities for novel comedy being evident, there is of course an accompanying light romance that becomes complicated, but its outcome establishes peace between the wild-warring factions. One of the adaptable showmanship running gags in the story, supplementing the natural Wheeler-Woolsey draw, is the delight with which Spanky smashes any kind of glass he comes in contact with. At this time, the story looks to be one of the best vehicles which the fun pair have had.

WHAT LADIES DREAM

Universal

This story, second American picture for Binnie Barnes, is a modern comedy romance. The yarn of an exotic female jewel thief, it is tinged with light but exciting drama. It is modernly timed and located in a continental city. Production is commensurate with the color of the story. Screen play is by William Hurlburt, who did "Secrets of the Blue Room" and "Ladies Must Live," with added dialogue by Samuel Ornitz. Ernst L. Frank is the director.

Miss Barnes, one of the principals in "Henry VIII," who made her American screen debut in "There's Always Tomorrow," is the star. In support are Neil Hamilton, Paul Cavanagh, currently in "The Notorious Sophie Lang"; Grant Mitchell, now in "The Cat's Paw" and Eugene Palette in "Dragon Murder Case";

The story pursues the trail of a fascinating woman, who steals valuable jewelry just for the pleasure of stealing it. In her wake she carries both clever and dumb detectives, a super-crook and, of course, romance. The film flashes with humor, is gay with love interest that is both intriguing and deceptive in the love interest of a woman who will take anything she can lay her hands on but keeps her heart for herself. To the tune of these, it builds to exciting drama. These elements, combined with the production the story is being given in sets and backgrounds, plus the unusual number of ultra-stylish gowns worn by Miss Barnes, suggest a type of showmanship that should capitalize upon both entertainment quality in the story and the value of the personalities interpreting it.

READY FOR LOVE

Paramount

In this story, the motivating element—an innocent girl crucified by small town gossip and later subjected to the torture of narrow minded Puritanism—is not only illustrative of its quality, but vividly indicative of the manner of showmanship that can be adapted to its selling. Based on a published novel, titled "The Whipping" by Roy Flannagan and Eulalie Spence, it was adapted to the screen by J. P. McEvoy, noted humorist; Virginia Van Upp and William Slavens McNutt, a trio which individually and in association have worked on many Paramount pictures. With drama, which does not ignore dialogue and situation comedy or romantic love interest, predominating direction is by Marion Gering, who made most of the Sylvia Sidney pictures.

The story gives Ida Lupino, young British actress seen in two Paramount's "Come on, Marines," in which she was teamed with Richard Arlen for the first time, and "Search for Beauty," a chance to definitely establish herself inasmuch as everything revolves about her. Arlen is making his first appearance since "She Made Her Bed." In support are Marjorie Rambeau, Trent (Junior) Durkin, Beulah Bondi, Esther Howard, Ralph Remley, Charles Sellon and Fred Santley.

The modern story has a definite entertainment and showmanship merit in its premise. As a punishment for running away from boarding school Miss Lupino is sent to her small town aunt by vaudeville star mother Marjorie Rambeau. Because of the circumstance and relationship, malicious tongues start to waggle. As Editor Arlen falls in love with her, the town wants to banish her and he is none too enthusiastic in her defense as the fanatic women give the girl an old-fashioned ducking-stool treatment. The incident and Arlen's reporting of it make both famous, and as she leaves him temporarily for a stage career, both get together again for the expected happy ending.

ORCHIDS AND ONIONS

Columbia

Something new in the line of exciting modern comedy looks to be on the fire in this production. In story content, the character personalities and the atmosphere of its motivation, it appears to be of the quality of "Lady for a Day," the picture which zoomed May Robson to stardom.

Original story is by Dwight Taylor, author of "Today We Live" and "Long Lost Father." Screen play is by Jo Swerling, who did "Man's Castle," "No Greater Glory" and "Sisters Under the Skin." David Burton, maker of "Let's Fall in Love" and "Sisters Under the Skin," is directing.

Carole Lombard, currently in "20th Century" and "We're Not Dressing," has the lead, sharing the spotlight with May Robson. Included in the support are Roger Pryor, now in "Belle of the Nineties"; Walter Connolly, currently in "Whom the Gods Destroy" and "20th Century"; Arthur Hohl, in many Warner pictures and now in "Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back"; Raymond Walburn, in "Monte Cristo" and "Great Flirtation," and Kathleen Howard, seen in "Death Takes a Holiday" and "You're Telling Me."

Farce comedy motivating, Miss Robson is cast as a frowsy hag whose continued appearances in police court finally land her in the old ladies' home. Miss Lombard is a fan dancer whose press agent-inspired brazenness has also made her a public nuisance. On Mother's Day as a publicity gag, the p. a., Walburn, sells Carole the idea of adopting a mother and reforming. Miss Robson, for whom Carole has formed a bond of attachment, is selected. As they get along fine, Robson starts a romance between Miss Lombard and Pryor. The former would do a little golddigging with wealthy Pryor and when the affair goes on the rocks, Miss Lombard would go back to fan-dancing only to have her adopted mother fake an arrest, the sentence for which is marry Pryor or go to jail.

The showmanship and exploitation of this show can be keynoted to the two principals and Miss Robson's cast name.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD

Fox

This is a different kind of story about Hollywood. While it has much behind the scenes material, it is more a topical romantic drama than a satire or burlesque of the town and its folk. Yarn is based on a book of short stories by James Starr, well known syndicate columnist. Screen play is by William Counselman and Henry Johnson, recently teamed on the "Handy Andy" and "She Learned About Sailors" scripts. Direction is by George Marshall, who made "She Learned About Sailors" and "Wild Gold." Music and lyrics, featuring two numbers for Alice Faye, "Yes to You" and "You're My Future Star," are by Richard Whiting and Sidney Clare. Girl dance sequences are directed by Sammy Lee.

The principal players are well known screen personalities. Alice Faye, previously seen in "Scandals," "Now I'll Tell" and "She Learned About Sailors," is starred. James Dunn, last in "Baby Take a Bow,' is the hero. Fox's new comedy team, Mitchell and Durant, seen in "She Learned About Sailors," are featured, as are John Qualen, seen in "Servants' Entrance," Grant Mitchell in "The Cat's Paw," John Bradford and Frank Melton.

Given a comedy motivation, the while not ignoring romantic love interest, being colorful in action and situations, yarn deals with a passe star. Becoming the professor of a screen training school, story dips into the manner in which the film-struck potential stars are given the works as long as their money lasts. He has for his pupils Miss Faye, Mitchell and Durant, ice men, but nevertheless embryo headliners, and Bradford. A would-be producer roped and taken for a sucker, ostensibly, but with Dunn keeping a watchful eye open, a picture is made and shown to a big exhibitor. All is okay but the climax. Dunn showing the star how it should be done is photographed in the part and upon its preview, he is again acclaimed a great star.

Story is one making possible all that familiar and colorful ballyhoo associated with Hollywood-based pictures.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS

MGM-Thalberg

Consideration of this production, what it is, who's in it and those who are behind it, should establish its potential entertainment quality. The original story is by Sir James M. Barrie, author of "Peter Pan," "Kiss for Cinderella," "The Admirable Crichton" and "Sentimental Tommy," and as popular here as in his homeland. The screen play is by Monckton Hoffe, who did "The Mystery of Mr. X," and John Meehan, responsible for the scenarios on "When Ladies Meet," "Sadie McKee" and "Let's Talk It Over." The director is Gregory LaCava, who made "Gallant Lady" and the current "Affairs of Cellini."

Helen Hayes, the star of "Sin of Madelon Claudet," "Arrowsmith," "White Sister," "Another Language" and "Farewell to Arms," is the central figure. Opposite her is Brian Aherne, who was with Dietrich in "Song of Songs" and now is in "The Fountain." Included in the cast are Madge Evans, "Stand Up and Cheer" and "Grand Canary"; Lucille Watson; Dudley Digges, now in "Caravan"; Donald Crisp, recently in "Vergie Winters"; David Torrence, Henry Stephenson and Boyd Irwin.

Fundamentally the story is one of potent appeal to woman. Located in Scotland, it deals with a woman who knew she didn't have "it" and consequently philosophically accepted the manner in which men passed her by. However, as a result of a family business deal she marries. Her mate, a rabid egomaniac the object of her inspiration, encouragement and sympathy, climbs political heights. So effectively does the woman remain in the background that he considers that he has accomplished everything himself. Even when he would dally with the elite, his wife permits, knowing full well what the result of his self-centered rantings will be. When it is revealed to him that his wife has managed everything he did, he rages, but even in that she is able to bend him to her way.

From provocatively valuable title tone, through story merit to the prestige of the star and principal players, the potential merit of this production is evident.

MENACE

Paramount

This is one of those suspense-packed mystery thrillers. Many things in connection with it indicate that that element is going to be developed to the limit. Its author, Phillip MacDonald, wrote "The Lost Patrol" and "Charlie Chan in London." The screen play is by Anthony Veiller, who did the current "Notorious Sophie Lang." It is being produced by Bayard Veiller, who wrote "The Trial of Mary Dugan" and "Within the Law." The director, Ralph Murphy, recently made "Private Scandal" and previously "She Made Her Bed" and "Great Flirtation."

In the cast Gertrude Michael, the menace of "Murder at the Vanities" and recently teamed with Paul Cavanagh in "The Notorious Sophie Lang," is again featured with Cavanagh. In support are Henrietta Crosman, Berton Churchill, Montagu Love, John Lodge and Halliwell Hobbes.

A disarming opening prologuing the story's real character, a young construction engineer, building a dam in the jungles, is invited to a social gathering. A storm comes up, the engineer is notified that the dam is weakening. Taking a plane, he is lost in a storm and killed before reaching his destination. Time elapses. Then the principals at the party get notes from the brother of the man that he holds them responsible for the tragedy, and that he will be revenged. Eventually all are gathered in a house, the avenger gives them but an hour to live unless the one whom he believes is responsible for his brother's death confesses.

Therein is both the entertainment and showmanship of the picture. As it is worked out, it promises something new and different in the line of mystery thrillers inasmuch as the climax and revelation is something that even the shrewdest crime-sleuths will have difficulty in anticipating.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 238.—(A) How would you calculate the amount of keystone distortion, projection distance and projection angle being known? (B) How would you determine the amount of distortion due to side view of screen, angle of view being known? (C) How would you calculate the added height of screen image due to projection angle, projection distance and projection angle being known?

Answer to Question No. 232

Bluebook School Question No. 232 was: (A) What is the speed of light per second? (B) In an electrical formula, what do the letters E, I and R represent? (C) Suppose $\frac{E-20}{I}$ I wrote, what would it mean? (D) Suppose I wrote .125÷7, how would you solve it? (E) In a common fraction what does the horizontal line mean? (F) What is the "rule o' thumb" and how is it applied to Ohm's law calculations? (G) What is the length, in fractions of an inch, of one mil?

Knight; G. Thompson; B. L. White and I. H. Lifton; G. Lathrope and N. L. Tomlinson; D. U. Granger; R. G. Crews and T. T. Davidson; N. M. Hall; G. N. Guidotti and F. L. Savlor; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; D. D. Davis and L. Thomas; G. L. Hutchinson; H. L. Smith; F. Ferguson and D. Lally; T. R. Roache.

(A) D. Danielson says that light travels at a speed of 186,360 miles per second in air. I believe modern scientific research has altered the figures somewhat. C. Oldham says it travels 186,380, very many say approximately 186,000, and J. J. J. Dal puts it at 2.9989×10^{10}, which figures out approximately 190,000 miles per second.

Well, gentlemen, I'm not going out and count 'em, but as Danielson says: "Quite recently new figures, differing somewhat from the formerly generally accepted ones, have been set up." Exactly what they are I have as yet been unable to ascertain, save by newspaper statements, which I would not regard as sufficiently reliable to be quoted.

(B) In stating this question I inadvertently stated it as E, C and R. It should have been E, I, R. I therefore alter the "C" to an "I" in the answer. So many hundreds answered correctly that it would be unfair to single out any one of them for publication. I therefore will reply to Section B myself, as follows:

In electrical formulas the letter E represents electromotive force, or voltage; I represents current flow, or amperage; and R represents resistance, in ohms.

(C) S. Evans and C. Rau say: "The equation $\frac{E-20}{I}$ means that after 20 has been subtracted from the applied voltage the remainder must be divided by I, which is the current flow in amperes.'

L. J. O'Melia says $\frac{E-20}{I}$ would mean that after 20 had been subtracted from the voltage represented by E, the remainder is to be divided by the current in amperes, the latter being what is represented by I.

(D) S. Evans and C. Rau say, "To solve this problem it would be better to make both divisor and dividend whole numbers, which would be accomplished by making the dividend 125 and the dividend 7,000 (multiplying each by 1,000). We then have 125÷7,000, which carried to four decimal places, would result in .0178."

D. Danielson gave .01785714285714285 as the result, which is wrong, for he omitted the plus sign! However, he gave proof by multiplying that mess of figures by 7, which resulted in .12499999999999, and so on ad infinitum if the division be carried forward.

G. E. Doe says, "To multiply a fraction, say .125, by a whole number, say 7, we divide the 125 by 7 as in whole numbers. Then in the dividend affix a decimal point as many figures to the left as the decimals in the dividend exceed those in the divisor; in this case, regardless of how far the division be carried, the point would come before one cipher placed to the left of the left-hand figure. It really is exactly the same as with whole numbers, except for affixing a decimal point. The answer is .01785+."

J. J. J. Dal says, "To divide .125 by 7, I would divide .125 by 7. It might be written $\frac{1}{8} \times \frac{1}{7}$, which would equal $\frac{1}{56}$, or .017857142+."

And that is that. My idea was to have the exact method of making such a division set forth, and Brother Doe came much the closest to doing that.

(E) The answer to this one was unanimous. The horizontal line in a common fraction signifies that the number above it is to be divided by the number below it.

(F) C. Umphrey answers thus: "The rule o' thumb is designed as a convenient guide to memory in applying Ohm's law. It is written $\frac{E}{I\ R}$. If one desires to know one of the factors, one covers the letter representing it up and what remains tells how to obtain it. For example, did I wish to know the resistance I would cover up the R, whereupon I would see that E (voltage) divided by I (current flow in amperes) would be the answer. Were it voltage I wished to calculate, I would cover the E and see that $I \times R$ would produce the value of I."

L. J. O'Melia answers, "The rule o' thumb as applied to Ohm's law is $\frac{E}{I\ R}$. In the event one desires to calculate one item, it may be done by covering up the letter representing it and proceeding according to the directions of the formula. Covering E we see its value would be equal the current in amperes times the resistance in ohms. In using the formula, all that is necessary is to cover the letter representing the desired quantity and proceed. However, in making calculations in which the projection light source is involved, a change must be made, as follows: $\frac{E - \text{arc voltage}}{I\ R}$.

(G) Again the answer is unanimous, as follows: One mil is equal to one one-thousandth (.001) of an inch.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

Say Ezra, and you too, Gertie, how would you like to sit in your B.V.D.'s and write this colyum when it was 90 in the room and no breeze and while you were having the intestinal flu and felt like a dishrag? Well, that's our case, and we had resolved not to write this colyum at all, knowing that there would be so little sense in it that you would get along as well without it, but knowing also that if we didn't write it Ernie would be sending us a special air mail letter wanting to know how the fishing is and when we expected to go back to work.

Yes, we are right in the midst of the intestinal flu, on top of everything else we have had, and for 15 days the mercury has ranged from 90 to 100 between the hours of 10 a.m. and 10 p.m. and it has not rained enough to lay the dust for three weeks and it looks like it wouldn't rain until after the ducks started south.

Can't Raise Enough for Chickens

Listen, people, this long protracted dry and hot spell has played — with the crops out here in the breadbasket. In most places they won't raise enough to feed a chicken. The corn has about all dried up and is practically dead, except in a few spots, and the farmers are getting rid of their cattle because of the scarcity of feed and the people are pretty generally broke, or badly bent, and if you can see any very brilliant outlook for the theatre business in this kind of a condition you have better eyesight than we have, and this condition we are told covers the most of Iowa, Missouri and Kansas and just about all of Nebraska outside of the irrigated districts. Then there is South Dakota, but she can tell her own story, if we'd tell it you wouldn't believe it anyhow. We are holding night schools teaching one another the history of Job.

Supporting Clean Pictures

A few weeks ago we called on a lady who is operating a theatre in a town that is composed mostly of Catholics. They have a local priest and a Catholic school of importance and, of course, her picture audiences were made up mostly of Catholics and because the Catholic ladies were instrumental in forming the "Legion of Decency" she became very much excited because she thought they were going to ruin her business.

We asked her if she wanted to play sexy, dirty and suggestive pictures and she said she didn't. Then we asked her what she was kicking about, that that was just what the Legion was going to try to prevent.

We called on this same lady last week and asked her if the Legion of Decency had put her out of business, and she said, that on the contrary, her business had improved because the Catholic father was cooperating with her and that he was urging his congregation to support decent pictures and that she had eliminated the off-color ones as far as she could ascertain what they were and that, on the whole, she thought her receipts had increased and would increase so long as she played clean pictures.

That's the answer to objectionable pictures in this spot. We don't know what it will be in other places, but we do believe that it is not the intention of the Legion to hurt the picture business, but rather to help it, as they see it, and we believe that it is their intention to support clean entertainment just as this Catholic father and his congregation do in the town we just mentioned.

Sometimes we get unduly excited and can't wait for the train, and we are apt to forget that the train seldom comes in ahead of schedule, but it comes in. Sometimes we thought we saw a nigger in the woodpile when it was only Jake splitting kindling for the morning fire. Prevention kills more bedbugs than flea powder.

George Couldn't Remember

According to a report in the press today, Mrs. George Bancroft has brought suit against George Bancroft, the film star, for $1,000 a month as temporary alimony pending her divorce action. It seems to have developed that George had a former wife whom he had neglected to divorce before taking on the second one.

On examination it developed that George's memory must have had some holes in it since he said he could not remember to whom he was married and when and where they were married, but he did remember that he had secured a divorce from her previous to his second marriage. His first wife must have been a dinger if George couldn't remember her.

If Reno doesn't watch her step Juarez, Mexico, is liable to take first place as a popular divorce center. The press today carries a report from Hollywood that Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Nagel have been separated by divorce brought by Mrs. Nagel in Juarez on the grounds of "protracted absence" by her husband. It seems that this couple were the ones generally known in Hollywood as "the ideally married couple" and the report says that they have agreed to always remain "good friends."

We are glad to know that they are going to remain "good friends," it sounds so good and sensible to the public to know this. Usually one or the other has given sufficient cause for the court to grant a separation, and that cause is most generally such as to prevent them from remaining "good friends." As we see it, if they are going to continue to be "good friends" why not continue to be husband and wife. If the stars want to obtain and hold the confidence and respect of the public there is a better way of doing it than through the divorce courts.

Paying a Tax Twice

The current issue of the HERALD reports that the Society of Authors and Composers have determined to increase the tax heretofore imposed upon the exhibitors. It seems to have dawned upon this Society that there are a few exhibitors yet able to bear another increase in taxation.

The most of the distributors impose a score charge on the exhibitors, which score charge is said to be the tax they are required to pay this music society for the use of the music used in their films. This is probably just and fair, but on top of it this Society exacts ten cents a seat from all theatres using their music in addition to the score charge. This makes twice the exhibitor has to pay the tax and now we understand that this Society contemplates raising their tax as high, in some cases, as 1,000 per cent, but raising it as against all theatres using their music in proportion to seating capacity and number of performances weekly.

If the N.R.A. means anything to the public, and if Mr. Johnson means anything to the N.R.A., it would seem that here is an opportunity for another "investigation" in the interest of justice and fairness. Outside of the big houses in the cities there isn't one-half of one per cent of the theatres using any music in their theatres except that on the film, so why penalize those not using their music at all other than what is on the film and for which they have already paid. We are a little curious to know what the N.R.A. will do about it.

Public Must Be Entertained

Just how the theatres can keep open and running out here in this dried up district is more than we can understand, but they do, and in some cases we are informed that business is a little better. It probably is accounted for by the fact that the public must be entertained, especially during depressing times, and for the further fact that the moving picture has been, still is and most likely always will be, the best and cheapest entertainment that can be found for the price, and we know of no place the public could go to get as much enjoyment for two bits as it could from the moving picture theatre. Perhaps that's why the theatres are doing so surprisingly well under such adverse conditions out here among the "Indians and Cowboys."

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Claudette Colbert, Clark Gable—I can probably add nothing new to a report on this one as it was very well liked here, but we do thank Columbia for their pictures this year. Played Aug. 11-12.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—This one is a peach. Buy it, play it, advertise it, and then see them walk out really entertained.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

MAN'S GAME, A: Tim McCoy, Evalyn Knapp—If you want action this is it. McCoy better in this type than he is in a western. Good business two days.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. Small town patronage.

MAN TRAILER, THE: Buck Jones, Cecelia Parker—Good action western. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE: Jean Arthur, Donald Cook, Richard Cromwell—A very good picture, but how a mother could keep away from her son and not let him know who she really is, besides the hired help, is beyond me. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 5-7.—Albert McCormick, Rialto Theatre, Hot Springs, New Mexico. Small town patronage.

ONE IS GUILTY: Ralph Bellamy, Shirley Grey—Fair program picture. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PARTY'S OVER, THE: Stuart Erwin, Ann Sothern—Very nice little picture. Did a marvelous business on bargain show nights, Wednesday-Thursday, Aug. 15-16.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. General patronage.

PARTY'S OVER, THE: Stuart Erwin, Ann Sothern—What a flop. I have had more kicks on this show than I have had in the last six months. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Aug. 12-14.—Albert McCormick, Rialto Theatre, Hot Springs, New Mexico. Small town patronage.

POLICE CAR 17: Tim McCoy, Evalyn Knapp—Lots of favorable comments on this picture. Pleased everyone. Ideal for family night or Friday-Saturday. Play it.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

TWENTIETH CENTURY: John Barrymore, Carole Lombard, Walter Connolly—This picture did not draw or give satisfaction and I came to the conclusion it was not so good. Possibly over our heads. Anyway, it was a loser in this town. Played Aug. 12-13.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly—A fine sea story, good action and an interesting piece of entertainment. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Friday and Saturday, Aug. 10-11.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. General patronage.

What the Picture Did For Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

1790 Broadway, New York

First National

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—I believe this to be Joe's best picture. If Joe means anything in your locality, then shoot the works to get them in. It cannot fail to please. Joe does some flying trapeze work that is good. Patricia Ellis was sure equal to her part and did some fine flying, too. The picture finishes with a kiss and a laugh when Joe leaves his face paint on Patricia's nose in the last fade out. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Aug. 2-3-4.—V. W. Fisk, Blue Water Theatre, Kincardine, Ont., Can. Small town and country patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—The best that Joe has turned out in a long time. Drew above average Friday and Saturday. The kids will go wild when you give them this one. Running time, 64 minutes.—E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, S. D. General patronage.

FOG OVER FRISCO: Bette Davis, Donald Wood, Lyle Talbot, Margaret Lindsay—Good picture. Action, thrills, love interest. It has all that is necessary to furnish an evening's entertainment. Good picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

FOG OVER FRISCO: Donald Wood, Bette Davis, Lyle Talbot, Margaret Lindsay—A mighty good crook story, well acted and gave good satisfaction to them that like action pictures. Played Aug. 14-15.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MANDALAY: Kay Francis, Ricardo Cortez—Good picture with fine music but a little too hot. Ricardo Cortez does some fine acting. He's coming back. Played Aug. 12-14.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich.

MERRY FRINKS, THE: Aline MacMahon—The story of the Frink family, their joys and sorrows. Full of good, clean fun. Should be ideal for Friday and Saturday. We used it Sunday.—E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, S. D. General patronage.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI: Richard Barthelmess, Ann Dvorak—Fair picture, but not up to Barthelmess' standard. This star not so hot recently.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

REGISTERED NURSE: Bebe Daniels—A good action picture with nothing to recommend it. That's why I fail to understand why we did such a big business with it. The star is no draw but they came anyway. Oh, well, that's why this business is a lot of fun. Played July 28.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

RETURN OF THE TERROR: Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor—Very common. Poorest attempt at a thriller for long time. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Friday-Saturday, Aug. 17-18.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. General patronage.

SIDE STREETS: Aline MacMahon—Excellent program which pleased. A real story of a forgotten woman. Running time, 64 minutes.—E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, S. D. General patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers—Pat O'Brien walks away with the honors, and Mills Brothers, Ted Fio Rito's band score a hit. Did not draw as we expected. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 22-23-24.—Fred E. Johnson, Cardington Theatre, Cardington, Ohio. Town and county patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers, Pat O'Brien—One of the best musicals I have every played. By far the most complimentary remarks from the patrons of any show for a long time. They said, "Sweet," "Very good," "Best show for a long time," "Let's have more like that." Played Aug. 5-6.—H. M. Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Farmer and small towr patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers, Pat O'Brien—The entire cast seemed to enjoy making this picture and our cash customers enjoyed it, too. One smash song hit. Don't pass this one. Running time, 90 minutes.—E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, S. D. General patronage.

WONDER BAR: Al Jolson, Dick Powell, Ricardo Cortez, Dolores Del Rio, Kay Francis—Very good, with good box office draw. The picture could have done without Jolson. No one would have missed him. Played July 29-31.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Fox

BOTTOMS UP: "Pat" Patterson, Spencer Tracy, John Boles—Note that other exhibitors are rating this one high. I say it is not so hot and I believe I'm right. Program caliber.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

CALL IT LUCK: "Pat" Patterson, Herbert Mundin—A very fair race track story that pleased but did not bring in the customers. Plenty of hokum in it but they liked it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Aug. 5-6-7.—Fred E. Johnson, Cardington Theatre, Cardington, Ohio. Town and country patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Nice picture. However, don't think as good as previous ones. Gaynor always good for me. Fair attendance with bad weather two nights. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Aug. 12-13-14.—R. W. Corbin, Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Drew fair at box office. Pleased a very few Many disappointed in such a weak story for this star. Not a special.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—All reports on "David Harum" are pretty much the same. The picture gave us the best receipts in two years. Everyone paid an advanced admission willingly. Played July 26-27-28.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—Will Rogers is a sure hit. Pleased 100 per cent. Played Aug. 9-11.—Albert McCormick, Rialto Theatre, Hot Springs, New Mexico. Small town patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—In point of numbers this old one outdrew "David Harum" but not so many dollars. A typical small town feature with its country scenes and homely comedy. Folks came in strong from country. You can't go wrong on a Rogers. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Aug. 10-11.—Fred E. Johnson, Cardington Theatre, Cardington, Ohio. Town and country patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, George White, Alice Faye, Jimmy Durante—Being in a Catholic community, and playing this on a Sunday-Monday-Tuesday, it ruined me.—A. G. Miller. Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

HEART SONG: Lilian Harvey, Charles Boyet—Pay for it if necessary but do not play it. It is absolutely the worst picture I have ever played in my ten years in the show business, and I had more walkouts on this picture than I have ever had. I had from forty to fifty walkouts which is very unusual for this town, which seldom has even one.—Abe P. Werbner, Princess Theatre, Lewiston, Ill. Small town patronage.

LAST TRAIL, THE: George O'Brien—Very different from the general run of westerns. One of O'Brien's best. It gets them in. Played Aug. 12-14.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory—Proved a good draw though rather old. Local pictures of folks about town helped bring them in. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 20-21.—Fred E. Johnson, Cardington Theatre, Cardington, Ohio. Town and country patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Warner Baxter, Shirley Temple, Madge Evans, Jimmy Dunn—Fox does not have the knack of keeping a musical running smoothly. They drag in too much stuff that does not really belong in the picture, where they repeated song after song. In "Scandals" they drag in two acrobats that don't have a thing to do with the picture and neither did the sequence of Stepin Fetchit and the penguin as Jimmy Durante. Durante is a pain to 90 per cent of our audiences and this penguin doing Jimmy's stuff did not help any. To cap it off, the story is preposterously silly. Something wrong with their direction. They had a chance to make a real picture with the cast. Boles with his marvelous voice and Shirley Temple. The possibilities were there but it missed fire with the audience and Fox missed through dragging in too much stuff that did not belong in the picture in any way. The thing that bored them most was the penguin and Fetchit. Top price picture and not worth it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Majestic

WORLD GONE MAD, THE: Pat O'Brien, Evelyn Brent—Fair picture, good cast. Something short in these pictures; what is it? Recording not so good either. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Aug. 10-11.—R. W. Corbin, Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

MGM

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: All Star—Not much of a party; too many stars, and no entertainment. Mickey Mouse was very good. Durante seems to be through or at least my customers feel that way. Just a fair program picture. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Aug. 4-5.—Wm. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

LAUGHING BOY: Ramon Novarro, Lupe Velez—We read somewhere that the church had condemned this show and after seeing it we agreed with them. Recording not so good. Show dragged in places. Do not care to run this type of picture. Many dissatisfied patrons. Played Aug. 17-18.—H. M. Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Farmer and small town patronage.

LAUGHING BOY: Ramon Novarro, Lupe Velez—This is another picture that should make Leo bow his head in shame. If Metro is trying to kill Novarro, this is one way of doing it. Entirely too sexy even for adults and all of my patrons were displeased. This could have been a great picture with a few changes, but the great Metro does not care to please the public. Played on bargain day to poor business. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Aug. 17.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LAZY RIVER: Jean Parker—Leo didn't holler much about this one. Hardly took in film rental for one day. I coudln't sit through it myself. Pretty bad for Leo's reputation to make them like this one. Played Aug. 7.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, William Powell—Excellent topnotch acting. The kind of a picture that in the old days would have meant standout business, but those days are past. What with the drought and the farmers with no money and not much feed for their cattle to carry them over the winter, it is slowing down business in the small towns. But you can't make the salesmen believe that.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, William Powell, Myrna Loy—This is certainly a great picture. Big story and handled in a big way. Satisfied them all.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, William Powell, Myrna Loy—An excellent picture that should please the masses. It is a drama, located in New York, and is a human story of two boys. It is modern, romantic and presents many bits of comedy and is good entertainment for the whole family. Powell turns in the best performance and steals the entire show. Both Gable and Miss Loy are wonderful in their roles. Business below expectation. Running time, 95 minutes. Played Aug. 13-14.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, William Powell, Myrna Loy—A rather unusual sort of plot but it is so skillfully unfolded that it does not seem unreasonable. The acting is superb and the play holds their undivided attention to the end. Far above the average in merit and drawing power. Running time, 95 minutes. Played Aug. 10-11.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, William Powell—We played this two days after Dillinger saw it and accordingly cleaned up. It's a swell show with good drawing power and everything it takes to make one. Business excellent. Played July 25-26-27.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

FIVE ARE ADDED TO CONTRIBUTORS

The reportorial staff of the "What the Picture Did for Me" department continues its rapid growth, as five new contributors send in their initial reports this week. The new and welcome reporters are:

R. W. Corbin, Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo.

H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C.

E. W. Kundert, Ryan & Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, S. D.

Albert McCormick, Rialto Theatre, Hot Springs, N. Mex.

Abe P. Werbner, Princess Theatre, Lewistown, Ill.

MYSTERY OF MR. X: Robert Montgomery—Montgomery was fine in this one. Why don't they give him more down to earth stories similar to this. Fine picture. Played Aug. 1-2.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

OPERATOR 13: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper—A fine production and I think that it is the best that Miss Davies has done since "Marianne." It has about everything for entertainment. Romance, a little war as its setting is the Civil War. "Sleepy Head" with the Mills Brothers is the high spot in the music. These boys are good. Popularized over the radio and one of the teams that really mean something to the public, which is the exception.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

OPERATOR 13: Gary Cooper, Marion Davies—Good picture. Good cast. Good story. Good sound. Good business.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

RIPTIDE: Norma Shearer—This picture is one of the reasons the censors are in the air. I don't blame them. It's so immoral it smells. Played Aug. 5-7.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone—This is a splendid picture. Fine story. The star always fine, and a great cast. They all liked it and told us so as they walked out. Played Aug. 5-6.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford—A good picture except for Franchot Tone. MGM thinks he is a second Gable, but the customers don't. Who's right, Leo? The picture did a big business, though, and that's all there is to say. Who cares how good a or how bad it is if it brings them in and pleases when they get there. Played Aug. 1-2.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan—Drew well and patrons seemed pleased. But many said "Overdone," "Impossible." Played Aug. 10-11.—H. M. Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Farmer and small town patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Here is a picture that will please. Good story, acting and everything it takes to make a dandy show. Did not hear a word of complaint and they stopped at the box office to tell how good it was. Hot weather hurt attendance. 42 days of 100 to 113 degrees temperature. Southern Iowa just has to take it this year; no crops of any kind. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Aug. 11-12.—Wm. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: Myrna Loy, William Powell—One of the cleverest we have seen in some time. Moves right along and the high spot of this is the dog with the lamp posts and fire hydrants. This sequence is very funny. I suppose that will be out when the purity league has its way. Myrna Loy is coming along fast. Every picture that we have had of her has had a great performance. She is right in every role for all she is worth.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

THIS SIDE OF HEAVEN: Lionel Barrymore—Good cast, good story. Very well received. Played Aug. 10-11.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

VIVA VILLA: Wallace Beery—So many adjectives have been used up by reviewers of this one that it seems hardly worth while to add to them. Whether I, personally, care for this type of show or not, it is the kind that causes you to refuse to sell more tickets before it is time to start the show, because there is no room for more people, and that is the sort of show the exhibitor needs. Running time, 112 minutes. Played Aug. 17-18.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

VIVA VILLA: Wallace Beery—A great picture despite its extraordinary length. We did a pretty good business on it for three days in the hot weather and that is saying something in these times. Played Aug. 8-9-10.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

Monogram

BROKEN DREAMS: Randolph Scott, Buster Phelps—A very nice, clean family picture, the kind you can boost and know everyone will agree with you. Only fair business but it sure pleased. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 29-30.—Fred E. Johnson, Cardington Theatre, Cardington, Ohio. Town and country patronage.

CITY LIMITS: Ray Walker, Sally Blane, Frank Craven—A very good program picture. Lots of action and interesting story.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HE COULDN'T TAKE IT: Ray Walker, Virginia Cherrill—Another very mediocre picture from Monogram. I don't for the life of me see what Monogram sees in this fellow Walker. Sound very bad on the print we received. Business below average. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Aug. 7-8.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

LUCKY TEXAN, THE: John Wayne—A western with more than the usual amount of action in it. Pleased the Saturday crowd. Business average. Monogram westerns would be okay if they were about 5 to 10 minutes longer. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Aug. 11.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

MANHATTAN LOVE SONG: Robert Armstrong, Dixie Lee—Above the average Monogram picture. Recording also better than the ones we have had lately from this company. Not an outstanding picture but it will get by as acceptable entertainment. Business slightly below average. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Aug. 16-17.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

MONTE CARLO NIGHTS: Mary Brian, John Darrow—This is a fair program picture that will please the average picture fan. It is the story of a young man who, though innocent, is accused of murder, tried and sentenced to the penitentiary, but escapes and proves his innocence by trapping the real murderer. The scenes in this are not concise and do not connect thoroughly, but otherwise okay. Business good for one day. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Aug. 15.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MOONSTONE, THE: David Manners, Phyllis Barry—Not very good. Too much repetition and slow dialogue. Just as well not use this one. Running time, 68 minutes.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. General patronage.

MYSTERY LINER: Noah Beery—Fair mystery picture but failed to draw in the customers. Guess they are fed up on mystery pictures. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 12-13.—Fred E. Johnson, Cardington Theatre, Cardington, Ohio. Town and country patronage.

SAGEBRUSH TRAIL: John Wayne—Dandy action western for your Saturday crowd. Pleased everyone.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

SWEETHEART OF SIGMA CHI: Buster Crabbe, Mary Carlisle—Not an extravagant show, but a clean little show that will have your customers complimenting you and asking for more like it, as they leave. The best showing in the box office for some time. An honest, clean, true to life picture. Played Aug. 19-20.—H. M. Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Farmer and small town patronage.

Paramount

GREAT FLIRTATION: Elissa Landi, Adolphe Menjou—Not an extra good play. Not much to it. Adolphe Menjou does his best, but even with his good acting the play was a flop. Running time, 62 minutes. Played July 24-25.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

GREAT FLIRTATION, THE: Elissa Landi, Adolphe Menjou—This is very poor entertainment and one of the worst pictures of the year. The few patrons we did have either walked out or just stayed to see how sorry a picture could be. Not one favorable comment on this one. It is just a waste of time, money and talent. Why Paramount ever made this will always remain a mystery. Played one day to worst business in twelve months. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Aug. 16.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE GROOM: Jack Haley—Funny play. Jack Haley was comic. He is a good comedian and should be in more plays. The supporting cast was good. This is an all around good play and everyone should see it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 31-Aug. 1.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE GROOM: Jack Haley, Patricia Ellis—Hit low mark with this and glad of it. Nothing to the plot. Hero posing as a husband, when the real husband walks out, believing bride's father has lost fortune. Some "double meaning" conversation, of which we were ashamed. Haley sings one good song. Played Aug. 5-6.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE GROOM: Jack Haley—A nice little program picture that pleased most everyone. Nothing to rave about but you won't lose by running it. Business average. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Aug. 9-10.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

KISS AND MAKE UP: Genevieve Tobin, Cary Grant—Nothing bad, but pretty weak story of the male beauty doctor and his matrimonial troubles, when she marries his prize patient. Cary Grant wasted on this kind of junk. Played August 10-11.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple, Dorothy Dell, Adolphe Menjou—They fell for this bewitching little lady in a big way. Business was good and everyone went out smiling. All were capable and the story, one of Damon Runyon's, was good even without Shirley. Played Aug. 8-9.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple—This is one of the finest pictures that I ever had the privilege of offering to my patrons. I can't imagine any location where it would not please. Business was above average. Many thought it necessary to thank me personally for their splendid evening. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Aug. 13-14.—V. W. Fisk, Blue Water Theatre, Kincardine, Ont., Canada. Small town and country patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Adolphe Menjou, Dorothy Dell, Shirley Temple—Here is a real show! Shirley Temple, the greatest kid actress the screen has even seen, in our estimation. Business good. Played Aug. 15-16.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple—My first picture with this little bundle of heaven. I did not advertise it big, but it did an excellent business and pleased all who saw it. This little Shirley Temple already is established. The picture is very good and my advice to every exhibitor is to advertise it big and it will do the business. Congratulations, Paramount, you gave me a good picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple—This one brought them in and pleased them too. Monday was good, which is unusual. But Paramount makes so many flops they don't even average up with a good one like this. Played Aug. 5-6.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Guy Lombardo, Burns and Allen—Nice picture, wonderful music, good comedy. Audience reaction good. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Aug. 8-9.—R. W. Corbin, Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: George Burns, Gracie Allen, Guy Lombardo's Band—Clever comedy, but without much rhyme or reason. Clean fun. Gracie turns her Pa's store into a bird sanctuary and he ships her to Hollywood, where she does some more crazy things. Guy Lombardo's band furnishes some wonderful music. Played Aug. 12-13.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Gracie Allen, George Burns—This picture is funny. The audience laughed most of the way through and were still laughing when they came out. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Aug. 6-7.—V. W. Fisk, Blue Water Theatre, Kincardine, Ont., Can. Small town and country patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Burns and Allen—A foolish line of chatter all through it and it was just what you can expect of this pair. Our patrons enjoyed it and went out of their way to say so. Running time, seven reels.—E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, S. D. General patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Lanny Ross, Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland—"Melody In Spring" has enough of that illusive something called "it" to make very pleasing entertainment. Lanny Ross has a nice voice. Charlie Ruggles is extra good in his part. Played Aug. 2-3-4.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theare, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Lanny Ross—A very pleasing production. Business a little above normal. Played Aug. 1-2.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Kitty Carlisle, Victor McLaglen, Jack Oakie—Good play. Good singing. Carl Brisson, Victor McLaglen and Jack Oakie were the ones who really put this play over. We had several comments on their good acting. Good play and good business. Running time, 82 minutes. Played August 4-5.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Kitty Carlisle, Victor McLaglen, Jack Oakie—Would call this a good picture, yet after showing the big musicals from Warner will say that there was something left out. Running time, 90 minutes.—E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, S. D. General patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—This picture to me was not up to the Fields standard of entertainment in spots and failed to please the younger crowd as some of the previous ones did. However, it is very acceptable entertainment and did average business. Nice clean show and no kicks from that source. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 12-13.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie, Ben Bernie—Pretty good picture. Oakie does well in his part and it's a fair story with music. No kicks.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—A rather thin story, but it is a nice little program picture with Miss Sidney doing a dual role. Clever photography helps a lot. They will like it if you can get them in on a story of a mythical kingdom that is after a bond issue and the princess campaigning for the issue. We have had better and we have had worse.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

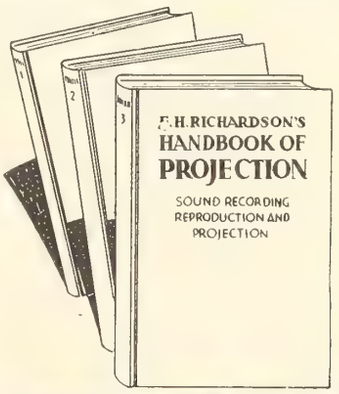
WITCHING HOUR, THE: Judith Allen, Tom Brown—Very good program picture which did not draw rental. It is very interesting, well directed and acted. Running time, 70 minutes.—E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, S. D. General patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard—A mighty fine show and one that pleased my audience. Leon Errol and Ethel Merman exceptionally good. Crosby better than in most of his shows. There is one bad mistake I think producers make in most of these semi-musicals. They take a good cast, fine acting and then hurt it by lack of continuity, jumping from one situation to an other with no explanation whatever. The picture does not show an orchestra at any time, but every time Bing sings one comes on. For instance, they are shipwrecked on a tropical isle, the audience is interested and living the scene, partly forgetting that it is just a picture, but the minute Bing starts to sing, a 10-piece orchestra breaks out, and the effect is spoiled. If the guy has to have an orchestra to sing with, then why not shipwreck an orchestra with them? Nevertheless, it's a good show and the above is no fault of the actors, but shows lack of brains in direction and story, which seems to be quite common. Played August 12.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard—Good picture, good songs, good acting. Would like to have more of the kind. There is only one fault to find with Bing: he spoils our chances with the girls for weeks after. As for Carole Lombard, hm, hm—such women are dangerous. Guess the girls, too, didn't have many chances with the local boys for some time after this showing. Played July 22-23-24.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

RKO

ACES OF ACES: Richard Dix—Personally I did not like it, but it surely pleased the Friday-Saturday crowds and that's all that counts.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.



COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Starts out as though it would be light opera with the cast singing their dialogue better than their last two, but audience divided on this pair and they appear to be wearing out with the public. Average business.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is a satisfactory Saturday night show. Pleased most of regular patrons. Business slightly above what we have been receiving on Saturday nights. Played August 18.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MAN OF TWO WORLDS: Francis Lederer, Elissa Landi—Some good acting, but did not appeal. The few that saw it were dissatisfied.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. Small town patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN: ZaSu Pitts, Port Kelton—Fair comedy. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RIGHT TO ROMANCE: Ann Harding, Nils Asther—A good program picture that gave general satisfaction. The star always fine. Story good, but our business was rotten. No fault of the picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

QUIGLEY BOOKSHOP

SCARLET RIVER: Tom Keene—A very good horse opera. The western fans liked it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SCARLET RIVER: Tom Keene—A very nice western that should please any audience who enjoys this type of picture. Has plenty action and comedy and is somewhat different. Played August 16.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

SPITFIRE: Katharine Hepburn—Did not give satisfaction on account of the talk. I would rate this as only fair entertainment. Running time, 88 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

STINGAREE: Richard Dix, Irene Dunn—Very good program picture. Irene Dunne's singing was wonderful. Running time, 76 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WE'RE RICH AGAIN: Edna May Oliver, Buster Crabbe, Marian Nixon—Mighty good program comedy drama that drew and pleased. Edna May Oliver runs away with the show, as the polo playing grandmother. Played August 3-4.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

WILD CARGO: Frank Buck—"Wild Cargo" is a true picture of the daring feats that Frank Buck went through to capture these wild animals. Pleasing picture that any one would be glad to see. Running time, 96 minutes. Played July 28-29.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

WILD CARGO: Frank Buck—Much the same as the last one, and as it followed closely that synthetic picture that Fox put out, "Devil Tiger," that was so apparent in the faking with its rubber python and the poor story dragging sex into an animal picture. "Wild Cargo" did not do the business it deserved, for it was good. Then there is the old cycle thing coming in. There is a question, on such pictures as "Bring 'Em Back Alive" and Radio's pictures dealing with "Kong," if two of them are not one too many. I think they are. Frankly I think that another of Buck's pictures will not go over at all. The decreased business on "Wild Cargo" to what "Bring 'Em Back Alive" grossed bears out my contention. Anyway, I would not run another. There is too much similarity in the pictures.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

United Artists

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN: Lee Tracy—Fair newspaper story with gang angle. Not worth the money we paid for it. Good Friday-Saturday booking. Played August 1-2.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Very good picture that did not click at the box office. We came out even on this one. Running time, 92 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BROADWAY THRU A KEYHOLE: Russ Columbo, Constance Cummings—Very fine picture with excellent music and fine singing.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Spencer Tracy, Jack Oakie—A very funny program picture, good entertainment, but did not draw film rental.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MOULIN ROUGE: Constance Bennett—Another picture from United Artists not suitable for the average small town. This is okay for New York, London, Paris or Berlin, but if you live in the average small town it's just a pain in the neck. Beautiful sets, wonderful gowns, lavish production, poor sound and poor story. Acting okay.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Monepelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

PALOOKA: Jimmy Durante—Good. Plenty of action and laughs. Children went for it. Played August 3-4.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CATHERINE, THE GREAT: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Elizabeth Bergner—Absolutely worthless in a small town. The sooner the distributors stop pushing these English pictures down the small town exhibitors' throats, the better off both will be. Running time, 93 minutes. Played August 5-6-7.—R. W. Corbin, Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

CATHERINE, THE GREAT: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Elizabeth Bergner—Another Korda production made in England. All the characters except Fairbanks speaks with a broken dialect, which is almost impossible to understand. Miss Bergner may be okay for foreign audiences, but she has no appeal to the average movie fan in America. Pictures of this type have no entertainment value here, and as a result we played to the poorest business in two years. I could well afford to pay for pictures of this type without using them, and be money ahead. My losses were heavy, not because of film rental, but lack of patronage. This film did not draw 50 per cent average business, and pleased less than 10 per cent of those who came. United Artists have some wonderful pictures, such as "Roman Scandals," "House of Rothschild," "Palooka," "Kid from Spain," "The Bowery," "The Gallant Lady." My advice to every exhibitor is to run the above named pictures. On the other side of the ledger the following pictures have been from fair to poor, and very poor: "Blood Money," "Sorrell and Son," "Bitter Sweet" (I paid for this without using it), "Emperor Jones," "Advice to the Lovelorn," "Nana," "Private Life of Henry VIII." Where does this company get the idea that their product is worth twice the price of any other. As a group they have never been above average for me, and I think this holds good for every small town theatre. They are not made for small towns.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

APPRECIATION FROM CANADA

From Douglas Miller, of the Rex theatre, Taber, Alberta, in Canada, comes a brief word of appreciation of "What the Picture Did for Me" Department:

"I surely appreciate the HERALD, especially the department called 'What the Picture Did for Me'. I never have contributed to this department because I am in a small town and not able to get them so early. However, I want you to know that this department means a lot to me and I hope that it grows."

We suggest to Mr. Miller that reports from him would be welcome even though he gets his pictures late.

Universal

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—This picture was bought special to satisfy requests, and while business was all right, I can't say that there were many that enjoyed themselves. In fact, it aroused the ire of our local editor of the paper so much that he saw fit to write an editorial on "Misleading Movies" with "The Black Cat" as his theme song. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 10-11.—V. W. Fisk, Blue Water Theatre, Kincardine, Ont., Canada. Small town and country patronage.

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—Good entertainment. Liked by about 50 per cent of our audience. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—A foreign story. Poe readers complained it did not follow the book at all. Drew average. Running time, 65 minutes.—E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, S. D. General patronage.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS: Chester Morris, Marian Nixon—An extra good program picture. Interesting story well acted. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HALF A SINNER: Joel McCrea, Sally Blane—Very good. Above average crowd on this one. Played Aug. 9-10.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HALF A SINNER: Joel McCrea, Sally Blane, Berton Churchill—We thought this a clever comedy drama and business was above average, so patrons must have agreed. Built on plot "Alias the Deacon." Played July 29-30.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HALF A SINNER: Sally Blane, Joel McCrea—This is an average program picture. Berton Churchill steals the show. Played July 19-20-21.—Rubel Hutchings, Allen Theatre, Allen, Neb. Small town patronage.

HALF A SINNER: Joel McCrea, Sally Blane—Here is a very clever comedy which pleased 100 per cent. The title did not seem to attract our patrons, so business was below standard. Played August 11.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

HALF A SINNER: Joel McCrea, Sally Blane—A mighty good program picture. The actor that played the deacon stole the picture. A very funny picture. Played August 2-3.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Stuart, Roger Pryor—A very good picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—Pretty good program picture. Running time, 76 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW?: Margaret Sullavan—We did better with "Registered Nurse" for one day than with this special for three. No draw to the star and nothing to pull them in. They don't read novels in small towns. Played July 29-30-31.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

LOVE CAPTIVE, THE: Nils Asther, Gloria Stuart—Fair program picture. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MADAME SPY: Fay Wray, Nils Asther—Pleased about 80 per cent. Business normal. Played August 4.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

ONLY YESTERDAY: Margaret Sullavan, John Boles, Reginald Denny—A wonderful film. Denny with his piano playing added much to the show.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

POOR RICH, THE: Edna May Oliver, Edward Everett Horton—As good a comedy as I have shown in some time. Is well put up. Moves fast and gets a lot of laughs. Clean show. Played August 9.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard—A good western that pleased every one and brought lots in. Personally I can't sit through a western, but the customers pay for it, so what do I care. Played Aug. 3-4.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

Warner

DR. MONICA: Kay Francis—The ladies enjoyed this very much, and it did a good business for three days. Kay Francis is very popular here.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charlie Ruggles, Ann Dvorak—Extra good comedy. This is the type picture for the average American audience. It's full of life and appeals to the whole family. I call it good entertainment.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GAMBLING LADY: Barbara Stanwyck—A fair picture with the leading lady at her prettiest. Our straight laced citizens, though, don't seem to care for pictures like that. The gross showed they didn't take a chance. Played July 21.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy—Good clean comedy. Pleased all. Running time, 66 minutes. Played August 2-4.—Albert McCormick, Rialto Theatre, Hot Springs, New Mexico. Small town patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy—A great picture for a small town. This one was a palooka on Broadway. After that wonderful Warner trailer they came in droves for two days. It is a good show, clean and wholesome with plenty of laughs. The burlesque on the seriousness of love is well brought out in the trailer and that is assuredly what brought them in. Played Aug. 3-4.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney—Another big one from the Warner "Horn of Plenty." Contains everything to make American entertainment. It shows the U. S. Fleet in target practice, the giant Macon and contains plenty of comedy, romance and thrills. Warner Brothers and the entire cast are to be congratulated. Running time, 83 minutes.—E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, S. D. General patronage.

HI, NELLIE!: Paul Muni—Best newspaper story we have ever run. Very well done. Good business. Played August 5-7.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HE WAS HER MAN: James Cagney, Joan Blondell—Not so hot. Cagney out of place and miscast. Just a fair picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

KEY, THE: William Powell, Edna Best, Colin Clive—Not the kind of story that goes at the present time. Did fairly well on bargain nights, but the English players didn't help it any. Business average. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 14-15.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

KEY, THE: William Powell, Edna Best, Colin Clive—The poorest William Powell picture ever made. Irish revolution for a plot and what a mess poor old Bill makes out of himself trying to act like a soldier. Miscast. Missed at the box-office. Running time, 71 minutes.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. General patronage.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO: Glenda Farrell, Margaret Lindsay, Donald Woods—A wow. Many pleasing comments from patrons. Short but full of laughs. Played August 12-13.—H. M. Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Farmer and small town patronage.

MODERN HERO, A: Richard Barthelmess—A poor

picture. Because Warners are letting Barthelmess go they ruin him with a piece of junk. This picture is dirty and has no redeeming feature. The circuits passed it up including Warners' own theatres. That tells the story. Played Aug. 11.—Robert Wile, Granada Theatre, Pearl River, N. Y. Small town and suburban patronage.

PERSONALITY KID, THE: Pat O'Brien—Just another program picture and poor draw. Pleased the men. Too much boxing in it for ladies. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Aug. 3-4.—Fred E. Johnson, Cardington Theatre, Cardington, Ohio. Town and country patronage.

UPPER WORLD: Warren William, Mary Astor, Ginger Rogers—This is an extra good program picture. The whole cast fine. Gave good satisfaction. Played August 9-10.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WRONG BOTTLE, THE: Tom Howard—About the poorest we ever had the misfortune to run. Not a laugh in it. You have to have a comedian to make comedies. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. W. Corbin, Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

Fox

FOLLOWING THE HORSES! Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—Very interesting. You see real happenings, not staged stuff. Running time, 10 minutes.—R. W. Corbin, Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

BIG IDEA, THE: Musical Revues—This short subject was well liked. The three radio rogues are good. Running time, 16 minutes.—Wm. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

DIRTY WORK: Laurel and Hardy—Fine. Very good. Would like to play more of these. Everybody satisfied. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Unique Theatre, Bricelyn, Minn. Farmer and small town patronage.

MIXED NUTS: All Star Comedies—This is a very good comedy that pleased all of my patrons. It is a mixture of slapstick and musical and should please any audience. Many laughs and here's hoping there will be more good shorts on this series. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RHAPSODY IN BREW: Colortone Musical Revue —Fair.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

VITAL VICTUALS: Oddity—This is just another short that should never reach the screen. It is not entertainment, but just a waste of time and our patrons did not like it. There should be something done to stop the producers from making such trash as this.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 9—This is the poorest Parade we ever ran. Recording awful and stars mostly engaged in drinking beer.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

LAZYBONES: Screen Songs—Good song reel with half cartoon and half Minnevitch and his Harmonica Rascals, with Reis and Dunn singing.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

WILD ELEPHINKS: Popeye, the Sailor—Pretty good. Running time, 10 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CONTENTED CALVES: Blonde and Red Head Series—Nothing to it. This is the first comedy we have played which bore the stamp of approval of the new organization. If this is a sample of the inanities we are going to get, all I can say is I'm sorry for the audience. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

GAY GAUCHO, THE: Cubby, the Bear Cartoon— The old Spanish twist which pleased them all.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

KICKING THE CROWN AROUND: Clark and McCullough Series—A better than average comedy that brought down the house with laughter. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Aheatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

OLD MAID'S MISTAKE, THE: Headliner Series— A very clever comedy that pleased. I presume that I liked it for the same reason that every other theatre man would like it—we've had something just like it happen. Of course not as bad as that, but you'll get the idea. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

Universal

Vitaphone

BEAUTY AND THE BEAST: Merrie Melodies— Good clean corored cartoon.—Albert McCormick, Rialto Theatre, Springs, N. Mex. Small town patronage.

BEAUTY AND THE BEAST: Merrie Melodies— This is an excellent one-reeler all in beautiful color. It is a good one-reel cartoon comedy and will especially please the kids and also the adults. The color adds 100 per cent to the entertainment. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BOSKO'S KNIGHT MARE: Looney Tune—Good, with a prince charming and everything.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

EAST INDIES: Musical World Journeys—This is another interesting and education travelogue, showing many beautiful and interesting scenes of the inhabitants of the East Indies, their ways of living and methods of earning a living. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

EDDIE DUCHIN AND HIS BAND: Melody Masters—A fine Melody Master. This series is always good, but this one has some skating that is fine entertainment.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

FOILED AGAIN: Ben Blue—This is a very good comedy starring Ben Blue. It is full of laughs and pleased my patrons. This is the kind of shorts the public wants to see. It is one of the best from Blue and here's hoping there will be many more. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patranoge.

Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

"FEW FILMS WARRANT 'A' RATING"

PUBLIC WILL NOT PAY FOR "A" FILMS

To the Editor of the Herald:

Why all the hullabaloo of A and B runs, when the past two seasons have not had ten per cent of pictures that were even approaching the A classification—at least we have not had them to date.

The fact remains that the public today are not driving to the larger centers for their entertainment as they did when money was plentiful and will not pay the prices that the A pictures would demand.

Further, the movie public will resent this method of protection. Most of them are loyal to their home town theatre, because they are taxpayers and because the money that comes into the box office stays in town, with the single exception of the film rentals.

This idea is not so new. Always there have been roadshow pictures that have been held out on the subsequent run until the water has gone over the dam on them.

The grand old man of the Herald, J. C. Jenkins, was in this week, the only sane and evenly balanced man that views this business from the exhibitor's angle.

I suggest that all of the producers find other J. C.'s and send them out into the sticks (so-called) to find what it is all about in this time of decreased business, so that they could produce the pictures that would go in small towns.

If the producers can make enough money on the A runs, all well and good, but I have never seen the time, when the buying season comes 'round, that they are not anxious to sell any and all of their pictures.

They are plumb crazy to think that the exhibitor will go for a bunch of clucks to play in his house and let them get away with all the gravy—not if he is in his right senses.

Further, I have found that when you do not play a certain producer's product for two or three years, the public forgets all about the line.

There was a time in this industry when the public would call for a certain star, but no more; they do not care who is in it, if the picture is good. There are a few exceptions, but not many.

The stars that pulled some two years ago are as dead as a doornail in these small towns. It all resolves into this: when you have an outstanding picture, they will come, but they have been disappointed so many times in the last three years that they have got cagey.—A. E. Hancock, Manager, Columbia City Theatre Company, Columbia City, Ind.

LONG MAY JENKINS WAVE, SAYS WESELY

To Mr. J. C. Jenkins:

Sorry to say I have not met you personally, but have read your "Column" in the Herald from the beginning, as I am a very old subscriber, beginning almost with the first issue.

Was an "exhibitor" in the early days—sold out just in time about 12 years ago. I operated three small theatres in three small towns in west central Kansas. I made fair money in the game. The parties buying me out did well for a time but now the places are all closed. Well, I am starting to write a history—that was not my object in writing. I want to tell you that I appreciate your "Column" in the Herald above anything else. Your good work for the cause of "clean pictures" is fine—and more power to you. Enclosed am sending some clippings, showing which way the wind blows. [The clippings were of newspaper articles in which was voiced an appeal for higher standard pictures.—Ed.]

Raising your voice in behalf of the small exhibitor and the industry in general is another fine act. I know it's hard to get proper credit for this kind of work in this material world, but am sure it's making up for a full paid admission ticket to the place where St. Peter stands at the Gate of the One Grand Theatre, where gold standard, silver or scrip will not buy an admission ticket.

Although I have been out of the industry for a long time and may never have the chance to re-enter it, I am with you in heart and spirit. When you are in Wichita on one of your trips I would be pleased to have you call and I would appreciate very much. With best wishes and "May you live long and prosper."—F. A. Wesely, Wichita, Kan.

CALLS EXCLUSIVE POLICY ONE-SIDED

To The Editor of The Herald:

It appears to me, after listening to several arguments about exclusive run houses and pictures, that this proposition is too one-sided, because the independent man can never compete in buying exclusive runs on account of the limited buying power, and therefore it is the syndicates that will again be able to take the cream of everything, by being in this enviable position to tell Mr. Exchange Man where he comes off and must have their material exclusive or else.

If the door were left open for every buyer and a certain price placed on this material, also a demand made to charge a certain price of admission, it would be plausible to get things lined up, so that the independent exhibitor might have a chance to give his patrons a chance to see the good pictures in his house a little later at a moderately reduced price of admission, which should not be so low as to put the feature in the second class line.

On the other hand, there are many patrons of picture shows that cannot stand a 40 or 50-cent admission charge, but would spend 20 cents or 25 cents even if they did see the picture a little later. This would eliminate class legislation.

HERE'S A BOW FOR "BABY TAKE A BOW"

To the Editor of the Herald:

We played "Hollywood Party" on a double bill with "Baby Take a Bow."

If we had a lot more pictures like "Baby Take a Bow," as clean and with heart and home interest, we would not have much trouble with the Legion of Decency, and after seeing Eddie Quillan in "Hollywood Party" I am wondering why we don't see more of this talented young performer. Instead of having a "bit" in the picture, he should have been starred.

Let us have more of Eddie Quillan!—C. S. "Doc" Crews, Manager, Fox Cabrillo Theatre, San Pedro, Cal.

FILM SERVICE UP TO 62 PER CENT

To the Editor of the Herald:

It is amusing to note some of the smaller eastern exhibitors complain that their film service runs up to 25 per cent of gross box office receipts. They should be doing business in this district, in order to appreciate how well off they are.

This is how it works with us. The average service has not been less than 47 per cent for more than a year, and up to 62 per cent. This isn't a case of a program here and there selected to make this showing; it's the average for the full month, and many of our mid-week programs don't gross the film service.

We have taken in to the distributors statements showing the business, right to the nickel. All we have got is a diplomatic horselaugh. We are compelled to buy all the shorts and news they make, whether or not we need them, and they cost plenty.

Although it's unavoidable, we should accept part of the responsibility, as every one of the smaller houses shows two features because two or three won't agree to anything. Then, we have some ten cent houses, also double featuring, together with the usual shorts; of course they show old stuff, and not of the major product. But that doesn't seem to matter, just so it's "cheap."—P. O. Uter, Long Beach, Cal.

NOTES VALUE OF BEST SELLER LISTS

To the Editor of the Herald:

I am taking this means of advising you how valuable the statistics and data on box-office pictures, best selling books, legitimate plays, programs of the year's outstanding road-shows, sales of songs, etc., are to myself and others in the legitimate, motion picture and newspaper world, which your July 7th issue contained.

It is the consensus of opinion that these records will be of invaluable assistance from time to time. After carefully examining them, the only omissions we have been able to find are: in "Outstanding Road-shows," "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and Denman Thompson in "The Old Homestead," and on the total copies of songs sold the omission of "Silver Threads Amongst the Gold."

Taken all in all, however, it is as near accurate a record as it is humanly possible to gather and Mr. Fred Ayer must have spent considerable time in its compilation.—Joe Lee, 154 West 46th street, New York City.

Paul Lukas Sued

Paul Lukas, actor, has been sued for $5,025 by a Hollywood law firm, in behalf of Ben Blumenthal, Budapest theatrical man, and the Theatre Betriebs of Hungary. It is claimed Mr. Lukas borrowed 207,772,000 crowns and paid back 672,000 crowns.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Local exhibitors have suddenly evinced an interest in putting their houses in first-class shape and a number of spots are or will soon undergo rejuvenation. Out at Kedzie & Lawrence Robert Templar is making a first-class house of the old Capitol, which was originally a theatre and later a billiard hall. Harry Balaban will put plenty of money into remodeling the Windsor on Clark Street. Then there is the LaSalle on Madison Street which Jones, Linick & Schaefer are going to convert into de luxe style. Not to mention the remodeling of the Midway by Gollos Bros., Warner has a brand new theatre scheduled for erection in the Beverly Hills district. Aaron Saperstein is remodeling the Lexington at Harrison and Crawford. Schoenstadts are doing likewise with the Shakespeare. Dave Dubin, it is understood, is rejuvenating the Logan Square to open under the name of the New Rio.

Pathe Reel Has Exclusive Films of Dionne Children

The first newsreel pictures of the famous Dionne girl quintuplets, born a few months ago in a backwoods Canadian village, were taken by Pathe Newsreel, by special appointment with the Canadian government. The clips appear in the Pathe reel of the current week.

Dr. A. R. Dafoe, who officiated at the delivery of the unusual brood, had refused to permit photographs of the quintuplets. The Canadian government assumed control of the situation when demands for photographs became insistent, and named Pathe Newsreel to take the pictures. The Dionne scenes run eight minutes, occupying all but two minutes of the reel, which is Number 9.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

What's Wrong With Business?

A RECENT visit from one of the old time, long experienced exploiteers with years of fruitful endeavor on small town and big city campaigns, in circuit and independent theatres, brought out the disquieting fact that for many months he has had to exist on part time assignments. As anxious as he is to attach himself to a regular payroll, that more eager is he to place his hard won knowledge at the disposal of those theatre executives who cry and cry again for "manpower." He knows most of the answers, is ingenious, a hard worker and has excellent publicity contacts.

But no one seems to want him.

In Jim Cunningham's "Code Question Box," issue of April 18, page 42, query No. 60, an assistant manager writes that when the code went into effect, orders from headquarters were given that assistants should be listed under "General Utility," and were to work the same number of hours at 40 cents per hour that their original salaries called for.

However, this complainant states that actually he is working the same number of hours as he did before the inception of the code, performing the same duties including taking charge during the absence of the manager, sometimes for days at a time, still at 40 cents an hour.

He asks if this is not an evasion of the code, and if he is not entitled to back pay, concluding with the information that a sign in the box office states that the theatre supports the provisions of the motion picture code.

Answering, Cunningham, in part, has this to say:

"The situation described in the question above wherein the assistant's classification was changed to that of general utility worker, might be a subterfuge to effect evasion."

We were discussing salaries across the lunch table, and one of those present, a manager who has been doing a whale of a big-time job and whose word we have no reason to doubt, stated his assistant, a very able and dependable worker, was paid the princely wage of $11 weekly.

Another fast-stepping showman who usually works from early in the day to late at night and clicks consistently in putting over his attractions, is authority for the statement that he has never had a regular day off in his present assignment. When he feels the imperative need of a day's rest, this relief must be obtained through a request to his superiors and is granted only after a lot of needless red tape.

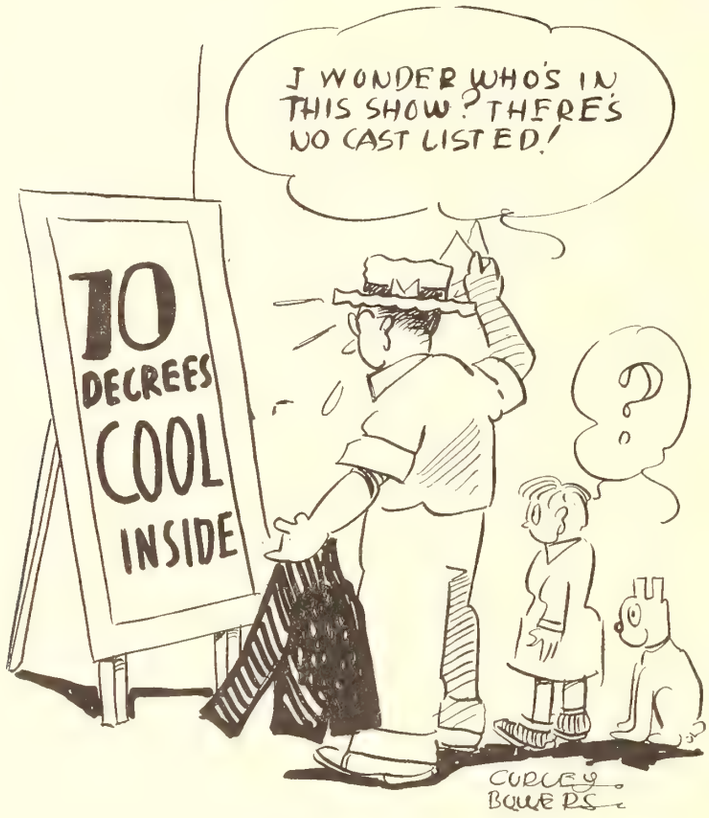
These few instances are offered as pertinent answers to the universal question—"What's wrong with business?"

They are significant straws that show which way the wind is blowing. Worried executives and bankers who ponder far into the night need go no further for solutions to some of the theatre's urgent problems.

The discarding, for one or all of a score of trivial reasons, of seasoned, productive theatre manpower is one of the most serious indictments against the industry. To toss aside showmen with years of experience and knowledge is a terrific waste that needs immediate correction.

Apparent evasion of the voluntary obligation to pay what the code makers have set as living salaries for theatremen, is another charge to be squared before there is any general occasion for hair tearing due to bad business.

A competent assistant is a valuable property, and even though the inadequacy of his code-set salary is open to question, placing him in the classification of utility worker in order to save a few dollars is a short-sighted policy that is proving as ruinous as bringing down the manager's salary to the unfair figure set by the same unsatisfactory code.



And as guilty are those who turn a deaf ear to the necessity of a regular day off for the manager. They are guilty not only of "working a willing horse to death," but also stand convicted of contributing to the loss suffered therefrom at the box office.

No man can go on, seven days a week, month after month, without running down. There can be no permanent improvement in grosses until these sweatshop conditions are alleviated.

Good pictures are not alone the cure for whatever is wrong with this business. Consideration for the well being of those entrusted with the stewardship of the theatre and the proper exploitation of the product shown therein, is another unfailing remedy recommended highly in many very important quarters.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

"Mouse" Club Party Clicks for La Rose

Although many of the Mickey Mouse Clubs are being encouraged profitably by showmen in many spots, Manager Joe La Rose, Eastown Theatre, Detroit, Mich., is doing an outstanding job in keeping the interest in this organization at a high pitch in his sector. A tipoff on Joe's success is that with a seating capacity of over 2,200, on Mickey Mouse days he fills his house completely one hour after opening with plenty of standees.

One of the most potent stunts La Rose puts on in conjunction with his neighborhood newspaper is a cartoon coloring contest. Paper has been running a series of two-column line cuts of the cartoon favorites such as Mickey Mouse, Popeye, Betty Boop, etc., taken from ads in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and 50 guest tickets are given to the youngsters who color these most artistically. The accompanying photo shows one of the five panels displayed in the lobby of some of these entries.

La Rose's Panel of "Mouse" Entries

Featuring the club meetings is a Mickey Mouse cartoon party in which an hour's show of the animated shorts is given before the regular performance. Much neighborhood activity is stirred up what with brass bands to welcome the children, street parades and other gags.

Joe says that the cartoon parties have been so successful that they are being continued indefinitely, one a month, and indicates that if other members are interested in the stunt he will be glad to furnish any further needed details.

Maizlich Borrows "Du Barry" Coach for Society Event

Smart advance stuff was the stunt put over by Harry Maizlich, Warner West Coast Theatres ad chief, who borrowed from the Warner studios the coach used in the production of "Madame Du Barry," and sold prominent San Francisco socialites on planting it on program of swanky horse show.

Equipage was spotlighted in the proceedings carrying leading social folk in costume and driven by coachman, also costumed. Papers covered the party breaking a lot of copy and photos.

Nice Break for Lamm

It seems that while Louis Lamm was vacationing in New York with brother Julius and families, the national "Riptide" contest judging committee selected one of Louis' patrons to receive the second prize of $250. Mayor of Elyria, Ohio, did the honors from the stage of the Capitol and papers ran stories. Slogan that won the second prize was "Crest of Emotion."

Curtis Receives Car At Farewell Party

by DUNCAN MACINNES
Special Correspondent

More than 150 of the motion picture fraternity in Montreal gathered at the Mount Royal Hotel on August 20 at a banquet in honor of Gene Curtis and Harry Dahn. Curtis is leaving to assume new duties as director of publicity and in charge of sales for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation in Toronto. Mr. Dahn has returned to Montreal as manager of the Capitol Theatre, a position which he formerly held.

The meeting was presided over by George Rotsky, veteran manager, who is now back at the Palace Theatre. Mr. Rotsky contributed largely to the success of the evening.

Following the dinner, Mr. Rotsky opened the meeting by stating that while the business of the evening was to say goodbye to Mr. Curtis and to welcome Harry Dahn, they were also there to have a good time. "We are all familiar," he continued, "with the achievements of Mr. Curtis as manager of the Capitol, and then as guardian of the Palace Theatre. We are all proud that he has brought great lustre and fame to the motion picture industry in Montreal.

"I now take pleasure in presenting Mr. Curtis with the keys to his new Hudson eight, a token of the high esteem with which he is held by his colleagues, employees and the many friends he has made during his stay in Montreal."

Mr. Curtis then responded to the speech and thanked the members of the industry present for their kindness. In remarking on his work at the Palace Theatre during the past eight or nine months, Mr. Curtis paid high tribute to his assistant, Ken Finlay, whose hard work and ability as a publicity man had contributed largely to the success of the theatre during that period. Mr. Curtis stated that he expected that Mr. Finlay would also go to Toronto to work with him.

Among the prominent guests present were J. A. Hirsh, president of the Consolidated Theatres, and George Ganitakos, managing director of the United Amusement Corp., Ltd., and the managerial staffs of the theatres and exchanges in Montreal, together with many local newspapermen.

Lloyd Assists On "Cat's Paw" Opening

Quite a lot was done by Hazel Flynn and Jim MacFarland to put over the New York opening at the Radio City Music Hall of Harold Lloyd's "The Cats' Paw," their campaign featured by a raft of publicity breaks and spot photos tying in the bespectacled star in person. For the Harold Lloyd Corporation, Monte Prosser and Marc Lachman cooperated ably.

Among the stunts, were appearances with Babe Ruth and Mickey Cochran at the Yankee ball park, meeting Doug Fairbanks on his arrival from abroad, with additional breaks secured on Lloyd's visit to Atlantic City where he received the key to the city from the Mayor. Many other exceptional newspaper stories were reported on the date.

Featured metropolitan tieup was made with Macy's where Lloyd visited various departments, this occasion stopping store traffic as the event was plugged in store ads, windows and counter announcements. Leading Broadway haberdashery shops also cooperated, as did millinery manufacturers on Una Merkel tiein.

Also clicking was a special showing the day before opening for the Chinese Consul-General, his staff, and high officials of the Chamber of Commerce, netting strong endorsements that were used in the campaign.

Best Seller Authors Write "Cellini" Series

Another departure in newspaper publicity is credited to United Artists on "Cellini" whereby six leading name authors were engaged to each write on an episode in the career of that historical personage. Together, the completed series has been made available to papers to run in advance of local showings. Dailies no doubt will go for this, as the authors comprise John Erskine, Konrad Bercovici, Richard Halliburton, Faith Baldwin, the late Thorne Smith and Ursula Parrott. Hal Horne has also put out a series of free one and two-column promotion mats for use by papers, with generous space for title, theatre and date.

For the advance in the New York Metropolitan district, the serialization has been planted with the Mirror, and also with two of the leading Italian dailies. In Philadelphia, the Daily News has also inaugurated this feature.

FALL SEASON SPURS BATTLE FOR AWARDS

Thursday Deadline Still Allows Time for August Campaigns; New Product Peps Managers

by A-MIKE VOGEL

On Monday, Aug. 27, in a ceremony at his New York residence, 820 Park Avenue, Governor Herbert H. Lehman, of New York, presented to Charles W. Curran, of the New York Strand, the Quigley Award for July, for his campaign on "Here Comes the Navy".

Complete story and picture is carried in the news section of this issue.

As announced in last week's Club section, the deadline for August entries is midnight of Thursday, September 6. Campaigns must be at committee headquarters before or at this time to receive consideration for the August Award.

Thus, there is still time to get that campaign into headquarters as there is almost a week remaining. For the information of those few who perhaps are not familiar with the Quigley Awards, complete rules and information are again carried in column to the right. As is noted, managers everywhere in the world are invited to enter the competitions, now recognized universally as the greatest step forward in the history of the industry to obtain proper recognition of the efforts of talented showmen.

New Season Stimulates Entries

On the threshold of September, the coming of cool weather and stronger box office attractions should spur managers on to greater efforts in the remaining months of the Quigley competition. The response over the hot summer months has been gratifying, for in spite of the obvious difficulties the quality of entries in the Quigley Awards during the heated spell have maintained a high standard.

Some great exploitation pictures have already been released in the past few weeks and many more will be soon available, and showmen who have not previously entered into the Award competitions perhaps of their unwillingness to send in campaigns unless on first rate attractions, may now get aboard with some ace campaigns.

We look forward to a keen battle for September—so let's go.

Kassul's Trick Season Pass

Lindy Kassul, Valley Theatre, Spring Valley, Ill., used the old "don't let the season pass without seeing . . ." card with a little different twist. At the bottom of the card where copy read "Admit Two," Lindy had printed in smaller type "things: Our shows are great, our prices reasonable."

Kassul reports great success with his Saturday afternoon kiddie club. Acts are put on by the various members and those attending ten consecutive performances, are presented with a "Lindy" glider.

McManus Plugs "Drummond" With Radiogram Contest

That team of Johnny McManus, manager, Loew's Midland, Kansas City, Mo. and William Bernfield, U. A. exploiteer, went to work on "Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back" with the thermometer hovering around 108. Among their highlights was a newspaper contest consisting of a mysterious radiogram, the secret code using numbers instead of letters. Each number represented a letter of the alphabet and there were ten words in all which, when translated, read "See Ronald Colman in Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back at Midland." Winners received photos of Colman.

Tying in with a chain drug company, all stores lettered windows plugging Bulldog Drummond Limeade and Loretta Young Banana Split. Clerks that dispensed the most number of these drinks and splits were guests of the theatre.

Chamber of Commerce held its annual golf tourney simultaneous with showing and McManus arranged for pictures of highlights which were shown at theatre. Mailing list of Chamber made mention of this showing.

Locally Filmed Picture Basis of Ace Campaign

Some sequences of "Murder in the Private Car" were filmed in the section around Dunsmuir, Cal., and this angle was utilized effectively by Manager Walter D. Stevens of the California in that spot, to publicize on the date.

A new highway was dedicated on the opening day of the attraction, and Stevens was invited to speak, as part of the ceremonies, regarding the making of the picture. The same night, one of the leading candidates in the gubernatorial election spoke in town, and in exchange for running a slide to this effect, local party committee had the candidate plug the picture.

Further publicity-purveying was a theatre party to which were invited over 50 local engineers, brakemen, and doubles for the players who had appeared in the filming of the picture. Additional newspaper assistance was obtained with a full-page merchants' co-op display.

Stevens transformed his lobby into a railroad waiting room (see photo) with regular railroad train posters replacing the wall frames. Train lanterns and head lamps were placed all around the marquee, and on opening night, spot from projection booth was planted atop marquee, flooding the surrounding country with light in the manner of a premiere. City Council assisted the opening by requesting merchants to display flags, and wires from the stars, prominently posted, also carried out the idea.

Binstock's Inexpensive Lobby Poster Attracts

From george-raftish Paul Binstock, skipper of the Republic, Brooklyn, New York, comes a description, illustrated in the accompanying photo, of a wall poster on "Virgie Winters" reported to have attracted much of the neighborhood attention.

Six-sheet was cut in two and mounted on two joined-together beaverboards. Letters and figures were sketched in, and cutting machine used to outline the streamers. Colors were light green and white pastel shades. Columns on sides were especially constructed, frame made with furring strips and covered with white muslin. Blue and green bulbs behind heightened the effect. Stills below were transparent, and entire cost, Paul says, was one six and nine flat stills.

For street bally, man in old-fashioned attire accompanied by girl in hoop skirt and long hair drove around in horse-driven sulky. Neighborhood dress shops also gave windows for displays of old-time styles and today's models.

Navy flags draped the front, home-made soap box kiddie cars with window cards tacked on them plied streets, throwaways in newspapers and imprinted navy hats given to kiddies were other slants employed by Hamilton.

Crews Effects Food Market Co-op on "Villa"

A "Viva Villa" food sale was the different angle whipped across by Manager C. S. "Doc" Crews, Fox Cabrillo, San Pedro, Calif., through a co-op page tieup with the local food market, offering special prices on all Mexican and Spanish goods. Store employees wore Mexican costumes, while the boss donned the Pancho Villa garb. One sheets and theatre cards were prominently displayed in all departments of the market, and "Doc" furnished a number of passes for a treasure hunt of bargains, which induced the public to look for sales.

Sufficient ads were sold to pay for 4,000 heralds in Spanish and these were distributed throughout the Mexican settlement and stores. This was effected through Miss Consuelo Rivera, assistant cashier, whom Crews rewarded for her efforts with a theatre party for her friends.

Florist Tieup Attracts On Hartford "Man" Date

To this was attached a giant delivery tag (see photo) with copy. "To be delivered to Margaret Sullavan, star of 'Little Man,' at the Strand," etc., etc.

Local bread tieup netted four-column free ad, stuffers in all bread packages and bannering of bakery delivery trucks all tying in to plug by the star, that the local bread "provided vitality for the 'Little Man.'" Special art stills were displayed in Eastman Kodak branch window, and giant cut-outs of star were used in foyer advance. Universal exploiteer, Al Nathan, helped plant the various ideas.

She was left as security for a gambling debt. Ask for Little Miss Marker."

Henry Riegel at the Maplewood Theatre, took himself off the nut for the cost of a lot of autographed colored stills of the kid star he gave away on the "Marker" date by selling the back space to a nearby store.

A model airplane show stimulated the general draw for Henry Cole, at the Shaw Theatre, and was worked in cooperation with a neighborhood radio shop which gave free lessons in model building to aspirants. Press Book Stresses New Lloyd Character

In the press book on Harold Lloyd's "The Cat's Paw," emphasis has been placed upon the new characterization of the star, whose previous efforts have leaned more to gag comedy. The tag line, "everything new but these"—the last word referring to a cut of the famous Lloyd horn shell glasses—is carried in all ads.

New book also carries exploitation as originated by the Fox crew differing from previous efforts, in which many ideas and suggestions from the field were used. All in all, a worthy job by Charley McCarthy's ad crew in conjunction with Leslie Whelan, who has worked on all Lloyd books since "The Freshman."

OTHER ADVERTISING ANGLES

Theatre Executive Continues His Discussion on Things to Remember in Text of Newspaper Ads

by LIONEL H. KEENE
Loew's Southern Representative

I find the average manager is satisfied with whatever ad mat fits the size space he is using, regardless of copy, and lets it go at that. I appreciate many times, not having seen the picture, you must depend upon what advertising copy you have at hand, but when the picture opens, it is a different story. Merely to mention the title of the picture and the cast of players does not sell your public unless the star is outstanding, or the story a well known successful stage play or book. A catch line will serve to attract the reader's attention. It will give an inkling as to the nature of the story.

If you are selling a star, that should be the main idea of your advertising. There are times when the magnificence of a play or book will even dim the fact a well known star, a famous director and a capable supporting cast are in the picture. Authors often come in for their share of the glory and many times mean a great deal at the box office. Best-sellers that are adapted for the screen have the following of reading millions. They have been advertised nationally in the leading newspapers and periodicals, and it is then the writer's name is important.

Directors—those gentlemen of the megaphone who spend weary hours perfecting the entertainment, customarily receive less of the glory of their work than any other person connected with a picture. Only a comparative few have attained the point where their name will bring returns to the box office. And it is only those few who can hope to share the honors of foremost position in the advertising.

There are times when a local angle in your exploitation of a picture or star will arouse interest in your program. A boy or girl from the old home town who has risen to stardom, or even to be a featured player, will often mean more to you at the box office than the more illustrious and heralded star of the picture. I do not mean that the star should be forgotten, but the local player should receive special mention.

Suggests Varied Ad Layouts

Do not run the same ad layout in the daily papers the same day, or several days in succession. You are buying space. You are privileged to change your copy as often as you please. It is a little more work but worthy of the effort. Secure proofs of your ads, correct them carefully. Arrange all editions of each paper be delivered you to determine your ad is in print—you're paying a rate based on circulation—double check your ad for possible errors immediately. I have in mind a Monday ad which carried the line "Friday," and which made it appear the current picture was not scheduled until the following Friday.

A big circus is scheduled for a street parade, the first one in years. Undoubtedly it would bring thousands to town who could not afford the circus, but might take in a movie. On an occasion of this kind, why not incorporate in your ad "After the circus parade, attend our matinee"?

Take advantage of local situations in a way that creates not only good will but possible box office. A convention is in town—investigation discloses a large number of registered delegates. Top your ad with a "Welcome." Place a special similar card in the lobby. You might even use a "Welcome" trailer on the screen. A clever advertising idea could be printed and by arrangement with the hotel management placed in the delegate's room. True, the convention program may be so complete the visitor would not have time to attend, but the theatre has lost nothing by the gesture.

Gives Other Ideas

A theatre had local screen tests made on the stage by arrangement with one of the producing companies. Considerable publicity had been given them for several weeks in advance. One of the box office angles of the stunt was showing of the completed film which was announced merely with an underline instead of the prominence to which it was entitled. A screen trailer should have been used from the day following the actual "shooting" on the stage until the film was ready for public showing, whetting the appetite of the patrons to see the results. Interest should have been maintained through various mediums of publicity.

If a picture you are advertising has song numbers that have been popularized via the radio, local dance bands and music stores, these should be included in your newspaper ads. There has been music that really has sold the picture more so than the stars or story.

It has long been a question as to just how newspaper advertising should be regulated. After all, at the end of the week, when you add up your expenses, newspaper advertising is a big factor. I believe the budget system the best solution. Remember, if you insist on using big space, the opposition will usually increase their space to meet yours, with the result all are wasting money. But if your advertising is gauged on a normal and consistent budget, the other fellow will not be so eager to bring his space up any larger than yours. You will receive the same amount of display and the same results. I do not feel that trying to dwarf the other fellow's ad brings in enough additional dollars and cents to pay for the difference in its cost. Of course, when you have an outstanding attraction, it is necessary to buy more space than your competitor and he understands this, to the point he will do likewise when he is in the same position.

Study your ads—always try to improve them—see what you may have left out that might have sold another ticket. Never be satisfied. Watch the other fellow's ads—you may learn something.

Decker also had scores of local newsboys shouting the picture title in all sections of the town and further publicity was obtained with the press book memory contest and a series of stories starting 12 days ahead. Numerous window displays were also secured in prominent downtown location.

Howard Berg Greeting Clyde Beatty

HOW BERG DID THE TRICK

Manager of Subsequent Run Books First Run of Serial and Exploits Opening to Ace Results

by HOWARD BERG
Manager, Ohio, Dayton, Ohio

. . . We have a side street, subsequent run "shootin' gallery" with only 336 seats. For that reason it is not practical to spend a great deal of time or money on exploitation or promotion. In addition to our picture program we have a 15-people stage show. This is a stock company presenting short versions of dramatic and comedy successes, interspersed with chorus numbers, musical and dancing specialties and whatever novelty acts we are able to pick up from time to time. We have our own scenic artist and wardrobe mistress, and for that reason, the "opry" that we offer them . . . meaning our contented customers (not cows) verges on a real production standard.

In fact we believe that we give more for 10 and twenty cents than any theatre in the country but then I'm sure you've heard that story before. At any rate we think it's true and for that reason are doing a very fine business in spite of paying NRA wages with regularity.

Big Campaign on Opening

When the opportunity presented itself for us to buy and book the serial "The Lost Jungle," with Clyde Beatty and we found that we could spot it just two days after the circus appeared here featuring Beatty, we got to work at once. We put on what we considered a very comprehensive campaign, considering the size of our theatre and were rewarded with a record breaking week and several record breaking days, including a new high for the theatre from the standpoint of receipts as well as attendance.

I'm bringing out these facts because a great many managers of houses as small as ours will claim that it is suicide to spend what we did on this campaign on the basis that you can't get it back. However, we got it back on the feature part of the serial alone and have ten weeks of subsequent episodes to cash in on. In the first place we put up the 46 feet by six feet sign a week before the picture started. On the following Wednesday we ran this full page tieup in the Dayton Daily News. This didn't cost us a cent except for prizes. All of the ads were sold by the writer and for that reason the News was more than glad to give us the balance of the page gratis.

Beatty Makes Personal Appearance

The following Friday, two days before we opened with the picture, the circus came to town and they very kindly gave us some great cooperation. We had theatre banners on an elephant in the parade and after the parade these banners were hung in the big-top where 20,000 people saw them during the matinee and night performances, and after Beatty's big act, the announcer gave a wonderful sendoff over the P. A. system.

Immediately after the matinee, we held a reception in honor of Clyde Beatty. This was attended by city officials, newspaper representatives and several local "big game" hunters. It was a very nice party and resulted in our getting some very nice newspaper cooperation. Beatty was kind enough to come down to the theatre after the affair to have some pictures made (see photo). That's where the "Welcome Beatty" signs come in. Of course, the parade passed right by our theatre.

Preview Is Innovation

We put out 20,000 pieces of literature during the street parade and at the show grounds 200 one sheets and street car bally. Our preview on Saturday night, which was an innovation here, attracted city officials and so forth. We did not sell any tickets for this affair but made it a purely invitation party.

There are probably a lot of things that could have been done that we overlooked, but the proof of our efforts is the fact that we opened our house at 12:30 and by the time we started the picture at one o'clock, we had 'em standing. Not only that, but the business held up very fine for seven days, where in the past we had alway run two changes a week.

★ STAGE EQUIPMENT WITH A REPUTATION ★

Cream or Skimmed Milk?

It isn't always the largest house in the neighborhood or community that shows the best profit on the investment. Equipment plays an important part in attracting patronage and holding it. How modern is your stage equipment? Are there any novel features that help to display pictures to best advantage? If you have an organ, do you keep the organist hidden or do you have a console lift?

It will pay you to consult with Peter Clark, Inc., and get the ideas of America's foremost equipment specialists as to what can be done to modernize and popularize your theatre.

LEONARD GOLDBERG

is a fairly newcomer to show business, having been in it only a few years, but it didn't take him long to get places, because he is managing the State Theatre in Quincy, Mass. He started as assistant manager of the Auditorium in Lynn, Mass., and then the manager's job at the Pastime in Marlboro. Goldberg is a 32nd Shriner, and if he were to choose all over again, he'd still stick on show to follow.

manages the Pastime Theatre out in Rittman, Ohio, and shows his good judgment by signing on the dotted line and ordering his Club emblem pin at the same time, in order to be sure he's "in." Russ started in this business as an operator, worked his way up to chief projectionist, later was made assistant manager and then prompted. Russ must know his Ohio pretty well, because he was born there and has never handled any houses outside of that state.

in Olean, N. Y., manages the Haven for Warner Bros. Franz started his career as usher at the New York Strand, then promoted to chief usher and later assistant manager. Transferred from the New York Strand in 1928 to open the Stanley in Utica. Later to the Strand in Syracuse and later resigned from Warners to join Skouras-Publix in Roanoke, Va., only to hitch up again with Warners at the Wintergarden in Jamestown, from which he was transferred to his present location.

owns and manages the New Franklin Theatre in Springfield, Mass. Jimmy is still in his twenties, but apparently has had plenty of experience round about the theatre and we'd be more than happy to pass any ideas he may have about theatre management on to the rest of you boys. How about letting us hear from you? You haven't been very active since you joined up.

one of the younger crop to join is managing the Sylvia Theatre in Sylvester, Ga. Frank started as doorman and ticket taker and through hard plugging and diligence worked his way up until he was made manager. You're the only member we have in your city, Frank, so let's know what's going on down there.

we are more than delighted to welcome since he comes from afar. Our good member is part owner of the Excelsior and Globe Theatres in Moulmein, Burma, India. Your brother showmen on this side of the globe are always tremendously interested in hearing how you boys put over your pictures, so we'd appreciate hearing from you as often as you can send along accounts of your activities.

is the assistant manager of the Princess Theatre in Camden, N. J. Joe is aid to J. G. McGee in charge of advertising and exploitation, and started as usher at the Stanley Theatre. He then became assistant chief of service, later transferred to the Lyric as house manager and then to the Princess, where he says he is tremendously interested in his work.

publicity manager of the Avon Theatre, Dubuque, Ia., seems to know several of the members of the club personally and he promises to send in some ideas which he thinks will be of help to the rest of you boys. Come on, Mel, the more the merrier, don't forget your threat, because we're right ready to welcome all ideas for publication in our pages.

manages the Community in Wakefield, R. I., and apparently comes from a family of showmen, at least he says they have been interested in showbusiness for the past fifteen years and that's how come he got into it. Apparently, Hal has done plenty around theatres, because he says he has held position as usher, organist, cashier, doorman, assistant and manager. Well, with the all-round knowledge you have of house operation, you ought to go far in this business and we're rooting for you.

acts as assistant manager at the Warner Shore, Chicago, Ill. Jerry's a long way from home, since he was born in Chattanooga, Tenn., and educated at the Armour Institute. He worked as usher while attending school and as soon as he was through with his education adopted show business as his means of livelihood. Jerry has been assistant at both the Shore and Jeffry Theatres in Chicago.

is the assistant manager at the Midtown Theatre, upper New York City house. Morris helps our good friend and member Sam Chernow out and he couldn't have a better showman to learn the business under. Well, Morris, you're close enough to Club headquarters to drop in and make yourself acquainted, so we'll be looking for you one of these days, what say?

NEW TAX THRILLS AHEAD!

NOW that Labor Day is behind us and the fish stories are all told, it seems necessary to give a thought to work and business and the state of the nation. This brings us most immediately and disagreeably to the subject of taxes, which, now that the country is being saved on the dole plan, promise to loom much larger in the affairs of every individual and every business than ever before in the nation's history.

Municipalities in many sections are currently active with plans for new assessments, many of them directed toward amusements, and very shortly all the states and the national government will be stalking every possible source of tax revenue.

Treasury conferences started this week on schemes to be suggested to Congress along with a demand for $500,000,000 in taxes. The department closed the fiscal year ending June 30 with a deficit of $3,989,000,000.

In view of the astronomical figures with which the administration is redistributing the national wealth, and the national hope of wealth, may we for just a moment smilingly recall that there was some kind of a White House fuss a while back about a baby's salary in Hollywood.

A corps of college professors is engaged in a taxation and currency survey which is presently to report to the Treasury on the all exciting subject of "where can we get it."

The motion picture industry, all aglow with lobby lights proclaiming its seemingly prospering presence everywhere over night, can expect that it will be getting attention considerably more confused than flattering.

Despite the fact that the placer-mining profits and gold strikes of the show world have long since ceased to be conspicuous elements of the motion picture industry, the law givers and the tax getters all too often tend to think of the screen and its operations as expressions of the old time, easy-come-easy-go high stepping and fast spending showman of song and story.

The motion picture cannot afford the luxury of repute of unlimited money and lavish spending. There is little indeed in the balance sheets to support such a fame today.

It will be wholesome to promulgate a wider realization of the fact that the motion picture industry, because of competitions and intensive developments in its field, is distinctly to be rated as an industry and not a gold rush.

Taxes always eventually become a part of the costs. Most authorities on the economics of the motion picture industry are in agreement with the contention that the screen can only hope to hold its place as the dominant amusement of the masses by keeping to mass prices, on the average. Happily alike for the industry and its customers the motion picture need not cheapen its wares for mass distribution. The machine of mass production takes up its work in the print laboratories after the artists have made their creative contributions to the negative. Increased tax burdens placed upon this mass traffic are taxes to be laid on the multitudes, tending to reduce the availability of the product at a price, invading the status of the world's greatest amusement at the expense of the consumer and invading both the earning and taxpaying power of a great industry.

The box office is not in a position "to put on a benefit" for the nation this season.

STILLS

THE week is brightened by the arrival of the fourth issue of "Modern Photography," ably edited by Mr. C. Geoffrey Holme, London, and published in New York by Studio Publications, Inc., with its annual presentation of achievements in still photography. Most interesting to picture technicians are revelations of the many influences and contributions to the still art that emanate from the great experimental and developmental but younger institution of the motion picture camera. The trend among pictorialists is of course to the use of miniature instruments, which it seems have gained vastly of late through the use of "Panatomic" film, a specially fine grained negative evolved by the Eastman Kodak Company for the screen's special process and background shots. It is of interest to observe that the leaders in still photography are today engaging in frank photographic processes, not in the old endeavor to imitate the classic media.

HISSES

SOME comment has arisen because a Broadway audience took cognizance of a Code seal by hissing. The audience reaction is not surprising, especially in Broadway. It was hardly to be expected that they would applaud. The policeman on the corner is not always a popular figure either, but most good citizens know he is necessary.

Maybe now, that ancient bit of vaudeville backstage patois, "Are you decent?", will become a part of the Hollywood vernacular, with a new meaning.

ONE of our delights is the damning of unnecessary gadgets that multiply the complexities of life and add nothing to it. Today's rage is over the discovery in a Madison avenue window of an automatic changing, magazine loading, self-cocking phonograph mounted in gimbals, like a compass, so that it can grind out its banalities on a storm tossed yacht. Imagine being at sea in a gale with that thing crying out hour after hour.

THIS WEEK - - -

DILLINGER AFTERMATH

In Cincinnati and Seattle last week action was taken to prevent too much enthusiasm in the cashing in on the life and death of John Dillinger by theatres. In Seattle the new censor board ordered street exploitation halted, a lobby wax figure of the bullet-plugged body of Dillinger removed, as Joe Danz's Embassy campaigned on "Bring 'Em Back Dead," Dillinger story. In Cincinnati announcement that the Dillinger family would appear on the Taft's stage was vigorously denied by the operators of the house, despite newspaper advertisements. . . .

LOUISIANA TAX

Passed by the Louisiana state legislature last week was a tax on all amusements of not less than 10 per cent. New Orleans is demanding a straight 10 per cent levy on all motion picture tickets. The theatre owners declared their willingness to do their part but asked more equitable distribution of the tax, urging lower percentage on smaller admissions. . . .

CHEVALIER SIGNED

Signed by 20th Century Pictures' Darryl Zanuck last week was Maurice Chevalier, to play the lead in the film version of "The Red Cat," stage play by Rudolph Lothar and Hans Adler, a European legitimate success, shortly to open on Broadway under the sponsorship of A. H. Woods. . . .

SMPE MEETING

The date set, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will hold its annual fall convention October 29 to November 1, at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York. Planned are technical sessions, featuring symposiums, demonstrations, lectures; an equipment exhibit, an inspection tour to local laboratories, studios; entertainment and sightseeing for visiting members. . . .

EXHIBITOR POWWOW

Of major importance in the schedule of considerations at the annual convention of executives, managers, of the Intermountain division of Fox West Coast Theatres, at the Broadmoor Hotel, Colorado Springs, September 11 to 13, will be the current Legion of Decency activity. About 40 are expected in attendance, with Rick Ricketson, division manager, Denver, in charge of proceedings. . . .

SMOKING

An agreement between city officials and theatre operators successful, smoking will henceforth be permitted in the balconies of Los Angeles Class A theatres. Originally the policy was not to be effective until September 21. . . .

POLISH CINEMA

Only the most striking screen names are wanted in Poland at present, where theatres are suffering in summer slump, according to a report from commercial attache Clayton Lane, in Warsaw. Exhibitors have never been so critical, he says, and American interests are concerned over competition from Austrian producers. The quality of Polish production is improving, as well. . . .

RACING HEADACHES

Racing—canine and equine—is creasing more exhibitor foreheads. At Portland, Ore., the pari-mutuels recorded $1,128,019 in bets in 30 days of the iron rabbit chases. At Providence, R. I., the opening of the Narragansett horse track season at Pawtucket was noted with anything but delight. . . .

MISSOURI TAX

Under a recommendation of Governor Park to the next session of the Missouri legislature at Jefferson City, theatre grosses would be taxed one per cent, in a doubling of the present sales tax of one-half of one per cent. He will also recommend extension of the levy beyond next year, the original expiration. . . .

CHINESE VICTIMS

As Chinese bandits in Manchuria swarmed over a deliberately wrecked train of the Chinese Eastern Railway last week, killing, injuring many, two film men, R. L. Lury, Manchukuo representative for MGM, and E. F. Johansen, Far Eastern employee, were captured, held. J. J. Russell, Tokio MGM sales manager, locked himself in a compartment, escaped. Hot on the trail went Japanese troops, caught the marauders, freed the captive film men, decimated the bandit ranks. . . .

LOEW BUILDING

Already opened are three new theatres in Australia, at Brisbane, Sydney, Melbourne; planned are houses in Calcutta, Bombay, last week declared Harry Moskowitz, Loew's construction department head, returned from abroad. He called conditions fair in South Africa. . . .

LEE MARCUS UP

From direction of RKO Radio's comedy unit to the post of associate producer has moved Lee Marcus, his first feature assignment being "Kentucky Kernels," starring Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey. Through the RKO organization, Mr. Marcus has been successively film salesman, booker, head of Pathe Studios, story editor for RKO Radio, comedy unit chief. . . .

TORONTO VAUDEVILLE OUT

Last week was played the last vaudeville, at least for the time being, in Toronto, Canada, motion picture theatres, as Shea's theatre turned to an all-picture policy. Ten musicians, three stage-hands were affected by the decision of Famous Players Canadian Corporation. . . .

VISUAL INSTRUCTION

Some 45 per cent of the city schools of New York, with a pupil capacity of 450,000, are now convertible into motion picture theatres for visual education purposes, last week declared Miss Rita Hochheimer, assistant director of visual education, in her annual report to School Superintendent Dr. Harold G. Campbell. Slowly but surely the school system is moving more firmly in the direction of expansion of the "learning-by-seeing" method of instruction, the report indicates. . . .

COAST ITO

Electing new officers as part of reorganization, the ITO of Southern California last week at Los Angeles named: H. W. Chotiner, president; C. A. Ferry, vice-president; Jules Wolf, secretary; Irving Callin, treasurer; Lou Bard, Jack Berman, Al Bowman, Rowland Levinson, Harry Popkin, directors. . . .

MORE "FARM CASH" FOR SHOWS DESPITE DROUTH

Farmers as a Class Will Have More Money to Spend in 1934-35 Than in Past Year, Publishers' Surveys Indicate

What is likely to be the effect of the drouth upon motion picture theatre receipts this season in the affected area? (See map on cover). Naturally at this time this question can be answered only by conjecture, but at last there are available reports of some statistical basis, from the drouth districts themselves, upon which can be based calculations with considerable claim to accuracy.

Earlier reports, particularly those published in eastern metropolitan newspapers (with their quick sense of the dramatic in the news), appear to have been, like those of Mark Twain's inadvertent demise, "greatly exaggerated." The farmers will not suffer a five-billion-dollar loss, and there will not be general destitution throughout the poor-crop region.

To the contrary, declares Marco Morrow, assistant publisher of the Capper agricultural papers, the farmers, taken as a class, will have more money to spend during 1934-35 than they had in the year just past.

It is to be remembered, first of all, that relatively high prices are being paid for farm products—much higher than those agriculture has enjoyed for many, many years. The farmers are receiving, moreover, millions from the Government in the "plow-under" campaign. It is estimated that about $36,000,000 will get to their hands during coming months from this source alone. In addition, the drouth itself has brought a Congressional appropriation of half-a-billion dollars, with more due this fall, for the relief of families hardest hit by crop failures, and probably some of this amount should be considered as sure cash, as against merely problematical profits from the sale of farm products.

Assurances from Dealers

Already there are assurances from manufacturers and retailers purveying importantly to the rural market. Surveying this field of merchandising, the publication Advertising Age reports that even in Kansas and Nebraska, which may have been hit most severely, one large commodity distributor is selling just as much as it did a year ago. In regions less affected, the same company reports that its sales have increased over those of last year. In general, farm implements have been in greater demand than last year, even since the middle of July.

In Michigan, according to the Michigan Farmer, it is expected that "the income of farmers from their 1934 crops will exceed that from previous crops," while in Oklahoma, reports the Oklahoma Farmer-Stockman, farm income "this year will be larger than the income for 1931, 1932 or the fairly good year of 1933." High prices and $10,000,000 in Government wheat allotments will more than overcome the effect of the drouth in Montana.

As for the South, particularly the Southeast, agricultural economics are on a much higher level than they have been in years. The Southern Agriculturist declares: "The restricted cotton crop will bring at present prices and including seed and Government payments, about $850,000,000, approximately the same as was received for last year's larger crop and twice as much as the 1932 crop brought. And the whole South expects still higher prices."

The higher value of this year's harvest in Illinois and Indiana is indicated in a compilation of the Prairie Farmer, which places a total value on corn, wheat, oats and hay for those states at $429,960,000, compared with $297,743,000 in 1933. For the same states, Government benefit payments on wheat, corn and hogs amount to $70,428,000.

The drouth, indeed, is looked upon as the probable end of the depression for American farmers by Charles E. Sweet of Capper Publications. He has pointed out to Advertising Age that "almost 100 per cent of the surpluses of wheat, corn, hay and all other crops have been liquidated," and that it seems certain the farmers "will have a greater cash income than they did in 1933," due to better prices and Government benefits.

And so one is permitted to formulate, even now, an answer to the introductory question, first by asking another one: What were theatre receipts last season? They will be as good, and except in the area of extreme drouth, probably will be actually better in 1934-35.

Erpi to Be a Target In Inquiry on A. T. & T.

Electrical Research Products, Inc., will be included in the inquiry of the Federal Communications Commission into activities and operations of the American Telephone and Telegraph Co., it was learned in Washington this week.

A study of the film activities of the A. T. and T. will not, however, be made for some time, as the investigation has only just started. The commission has not yet completed organization of its personnel. The first phase of the inquiry will concern rates and charges of the company.

U. S. Buying More Belgian Raw Stock

The United States is becoming a heavy buyer of Belgian raw stock, the State Department in Washington reported this week, in announcing that negotiation of a reciprocal trade agreement with Belgium is to be undertaken. Purchase of unexposed sensitized films in 1933 was valued at $360,196, three times the 1929 purchases which reached a total of $110,324.

Red Kann Hurt, Wife Killed in Auto Accident

Maurice Daniel (Red) Kann, editor of MOTION PICTURE DAILY, sustained fractures of three ribs, and his wife was fatally injured early Tuesday morning in an automobile accident on the main New England highway near the Yale University theatre in New Haven.

Harry Goldberg, sales executive of Mentone Productions, New York, and a former circuit executive, sustained a broken nose and severe bruises. All were removed to New Haven General hospital, where Mrs. Kann died a few hours later from internal injuries.

Herman Center, Mrs. Kann's young brother, was only slightly injured and was discharged from the hospital almost immediately. Mr. Kann had recovered sufficiently late Wednesday afternoon to be removed to New York. Mr. Goldberg will be confined at the New Haven hospital for several days.

The party was traveling homeward to New York from a weekend holiday on Monhegan Island off the coast of Maine, with Mr. Goldberg driving Mr. Kann's Packard roadster. Early morning fog and rain obscured Mr. Goldberg's vision, and while attempting to adjust the mechanism of the windshield cleaner, he collided with the rear end of a truck.

Mrs. Kann, 30 years old and a native of New York, was Miss Marie Center before her marriage in 1927.

Funeral arrangements had not been completed at press time, with burial probably on Friday in New York.

Will Ask Congress To Retain Ticket Tax

Continuation of the admission tax on at least its present level will be asked of Congress when it reconvenes in January, it was predicted this week in Washington as Administration officials began consideration of new revenue legislation.

With this and a number of other emergency taxes due to be automatically repealed next July, the Treasury has begun a study of the funds needed, the general belief being that a measure carrying at least $500,000,000 will be sent to the Congress at the opening.

STATE-OPERATED STUDIOS PROMISED BY SINCLAIR

California Candidate Would Rent Idle Plants, Establish Theatres by, for Unemployed

By AL FINESTONE
Kansas City Correspondent

The motion picture industry in California —the state's dominant industry—faces the prospect of state-operated studios and theatres if Upton Sinclair is elected governor of California.

Interviewed in Kansas City while en route to Hyde Park, N. Y., for a conference with President Roosevelt, Mr. Sinclair, the Socialist who is sailing under Democratic colors in his California campaign for governor, revealed he contemplates the establishment of a state theatre and a state film industry in California under his scheme to "end poverty in California" in two years.

Would Rent Idle Studios

This will include the renting of idle studios and dark theatres for the production and exhibition of films to be produced by, and primarily for, the unemployed.

"We will make our own pictures and show them in our own theatres with our own orchestras," he said, explaining that the quarter of a million unemployed in California "will need everything from beans to entertainment."

"We don't intend to interfere with capitalistic industry," he added, "but after our people have seen these films, if anyone else wants them we will be glad to release them generally."

His contemplated state-operated film industry, Mr. Sinclair explained, is part of his plan to give every man a job and will absorb Hollywood's unemployed workers, artists and technicians. He said he would place in charge "a man who has not been able to use his ability because of conditions."

Will Go in for Culture

The author of "Upton Sinclair Presents William Fox," a bombshell of last year, indicated that his state film industry will go in for culture in a big way.

"Our pictures, culturally," he continued, "certainly will be superior to those now being produced by private enterprise. We recognize that pictures are in bad taste, and we will try to raise the cultural standards."

"What type of films do you intend to produce?" he was asked.

"Any type, silent or sound, that will be acceptable to our people," was his reply. "And you can be sure there won't be anything Communistic in them."

The studios and theatres, he said, will be rented by paying the owners' taxes and overhead. The workers will be compensated by some system of barter, and he indicated that his plan contemplates the shortening of working hours.

Sinclair's EPIC program will require the sanction of the legislature, but he pointed out if that body proves hostile and attempts to thwart the plan, he could jam it through in from thirty to sixty days after his election by means of a referendum. It was his opinion, however, that should he be elected next November, the legislature would accept his election as a mandate from the people to adopt his program.

Sinclair insisted his program was not radical. He said it was nothing more than what the federal government has undertaken through some of its more recent relief projects.

The candidate has had a brief experience with films as a financial backer of Sergei Eisenstein's "Thunder Over Mexico."

"Mrs. Sinclair and myself went out among our friends and obtained the financial backing," he said. "It didn't bring back one-fourth of what was put into it."

Code Authority Pushes Draft of New Clearances

The Code Authority this week "drafted" the industry as a whole to do everything possible to expedite the drawing up of new clearance and zoning schedules. A special committee, to be headed by George J. Schaefer of Paramount, was appointed and its functions will be to call upon Code Authority members and leading sales and exhibitor heads in New York to analyze all schedules submitted for appeal. Schedules exceeding code limitations will be sent back to local boards for revision.

Executives of sales for 11 distributors comprise the committee and a meeting of the group to draw up plans for assistance of local boards in redrafting clearance and zoning schedules was scheduled for Wednesday night in New York. The results had not been announced up to press time.

Among those attending were: Neil Agnew, Paramount; James R. Grainger, Universal; Al Lichtman, United Artists; A. W. Smith and Gradwell L. Sears, Warners; Ned Depinet and Jules Levy, RKO; Felix F. Feist, MGM; Abe Montague, Columbia; Jack Skirball, Educational; Edward Golden, Monogram, and Harry H. Thomas, First Division.

The Code Authority's move comes as a result of the conflicting opinions among exhibitors over what constitutes basic clearance and zoning principles.

In territories where schedules are returned, exhibitors will be asked to cooperate in working out a "feasible" schedule, and in situations where certain provisions of the code are overstepped the Code Authority will make suggestions as to proper procedure.

The Code Authority announced this week it had found that in practically all cases local code boards had exceeded their authority and, in many instances, had actually inserted clauses which violate the code. Under the committee's guidance exhibitors in all territories will be given the opportunity to protest against provisions in schedules which might work hardships on them, while in zones where no new schedules have been drawn as yet they can ask for changes in present protection ratios and the local boards will decide on the merits of the claims.

Plans to reopen the code assent deadline for the third time—brought about through the insistence of Division Administrator Rosenblatt, who believes no exhibitor should be "out" of the code—this week were reported under way, and if the compliance date is reopened it will be for an indefinite period.

In Washington this week the NRA intimated that until producers and distributors work out a formula for assessments it will not approve any plan for raising $180,000 from this source. Although producers and distributors, in protesting recently on the original assessment plan stated that gross business should be the common denominator for levies, it is learned they will not disclose figures publicly.

The future of the NRA will be detailed by Administrator Gen. Hugh S. Johnson at a session of Code Authorities of all industries at Carnegie Hall, New York, September 14. Methods of code enforcement also will be discussed. All division administrators, including Sol A. Rosenblatt for the film, radio and theatrical codes, will attend.

In Kansas City this week the controversy over the elimination of premiums was still the subject of much discussion, despite the determination of E. S. Young, one of the opposing exhibitors, who demanded a recount of the ballots, that the ban was voted by a sufficient number of theatres. The local ballot was by petition circulated by Jay Means, Independent Theatre Owners president, and was signed by exhibitors favoring this ban, which is effective starting October 27. Mr. Young, on checking the petition, found that 56 of 71 independents in the prescribed premium zone voted for the ban, more than the required number.

In San Francisco this week a 49-day clearance was decided by the local board for subsequent houses charging 30 cents at matinees and 40 cents at night. First runs maintain their 56 days over second runs charging 20 to 30 cents.

More than 800 clearance and zoning cases have been heard by the 32 code boards, the Code Authority announced last week. All the cases have been cleared.

Decisions backing grievance boards in six cases submitted to it on appeal were made public last week by the Code Authority. In a seventh case, a board ruling was reversed.

United Artists' board of directors Wednesday was scheduled to decide whether the company should file suit against the Code Authority in U. S. district court in New York for an interpretation of the 10 per cent cancellation clause in the code. The meeting, originally scheduled for Tuesday, was in session at press time.

RECEIVED by the Circulation Department of Motion Picture Herald this week was the following letter from a theatre owner in the field:

"I am an exhibitor once more and cannot run my theatre intelligently without Motion Picture Herald. Please enter my subscription at once for one year. I have been out about three years and do not know what the subscription price is now, so am enclosing check signed in blank and ask that you kindly fill in the amount for one year's subscription."

BROADWAY STAGE FROM CAMERA EYE

DeCasseres Finds Legitimate Theatre Bouncing Back After Another Long Count; First Plays Reviewed

Benjamin DeCasseres

The ebullient Mr. Ben DeCasseres, celebrated observer of the drama, essayist and man of letters, long a contributor of pithy attentions to the stage in Motion Picture Herald, is back again from the sea and the mountains, looking over Broadway with an ever eager but experienced eye. Surveying his stage evaluations from the point of view of the motion picture camera for last season it appears that he forecast screen possibilities with an astonishing degree of accuracy. Mr. DeCasseres, let us be reminded, is no amateur or theorist in his motion picture speculations. He served long and industriously in film production, chiefly in the Paramount organization. It is not particularly germane, but we always like to recall that Mr. DeCasseres, apart from being the last living descendant of the great Spinoza, is known among "bon vivants" as America's leading authority on cheese, and is the author of a classic monograph on cheese cake. —T. R.

THE SEASON OPENS

Open sesame!—maybe.

Will it be a killing or a majullah party?

Pictures go on forever. They have no "season."

With the stage it's different. It has four seasons: Hope, Headache, Diabetes, Coma.

At least it was so last season, in which 81 per cent of the productions flopped. In some cases Hollywood bought in and saved a few playwrights and producers from grievous self-slaughter.

Oh, the Big Bad Wolf isn't such a bad fellow!

Anyhow, Broadway — Hollywood's grab-bag—is getting its wind again.

My admiration knoweth no bounds for the way in which the same theatrical producers can take it on the chin, in the eye, on the ear, in the kidneys and stay dead until the referee counts 125—season after season.

Many of them after a season look like Carnera after the sixth consecutive licking from Max.

But lo!—and also behold!—in September they weigh in at 175 pounds, are as pink as a tenor's cheek after a dollar massage, and strip for the towel.

As the Schnozzola says, "It's unbelievin'!"

I Joehumphry some of those who have tossed their caps in the ring for the coming season:

The Shuberts, William A. Brady, Aldrich & Liager, Eddie Dowling, Arthur Hopkins, Earl Carroll, Crosby Gaige, Gilbert Miller, John Golden, Max Gordon, the Group Theatre, Jed Harris, Alexander McKaig, Rowland Stebbins, Dwight Deere Wiman, the Theatre Guild, George White, Al Woods—and the new combination of Arch Selwyn and Harold B. Franklin (under the name of Frankwyn Productions), who are laying before the public and potential Hollywood play-shoppers some promising material, including a new Noel Coward opus.

As no one ever throws anything but skunk-cabbage at critics, I appoint myself a committee of one to throw a box of neckties at myself: I picked almost all the winners (as second-night reporter) for Hollywood consumption and approximated a 95 per cent average on my evaluation of no-good-for-picture plays.

But enough egg-warming. Let's hatch.

KILL THAT STORY!

The first comedy of the new season contains many picture angles—potentially. In fact, I have a subtle and well-oiled suspicion that it was written just for that purpose.

The saga is a proof at the big shots and the little shots in the newspaper advertising game, who in this instance have gathered in a "large city" for their convention, which turns out to be mainly a question of Where's the skirts and where's the booze?—with the married men swollen with Frustrations. Harry Madden and Philip Dunning wrote it; staged by George Abbott (Abbott-Dunning, Inc., producing).

The play itself is snaggled, has too many walk-in and walk-out characters, is ponderous and hinge-creaky in its theme-building and depends too much on faked and old-hat curtains.

But behind this bungle I perceive the solid substance of a good program screen comedy-drama of "The Front Page" species.

The audience reaction was, in the main, good so far as the humor went (plenty of laughs and racy dialogue). Where the audience balked was at the implausibility of the dramatic elements.

Spike Taylor (Matt Briggs), a chain newspaper proprietor, attends this convention for no good purpose. He wants to sink another paper for a political boss.

Before the show opens Spike has fired from his Pittsburgh sheet Duke Devlin (James Bell). Duke has been blamed by his wife (who has divorced him) for the suicide of Duke's stenographer. But the fellow who ruined the girl is Big Shot Spike. Duke has the page from the hotel register in his pocket (and Spike is married).

Duke of course smashes all of Spike's dirty schemes, threatens to expose him, and gets his wife back.

Besides this dramatic stuffing, for picture purposes there are, for humor, the advertising convention and the hooey thereof, a raft of Convention Girls and their necking of the birds with the high jack, the high-jinks of the men in the hotel—off the reservation, you know; and, above all, the fine character part of that dead-pan comedian, William Lynn, as a booby delegate. This is a Charley Butterworth push-over—or why not Lynn himself for the job? He, with Matt Briggs, carries the show.

HER MAJESTY, THE WIDOW

Pauline Frederick, who has done such notable work on the stage and the screen, gave personally a fine performance in John Charles Brownnell's "Her Majesty, the Widow" (Wee & Leventhal producing). But the play is—alas!—never hot-cha, League of Decency or solid dramatic meat.

The picture values are along pretty old and threadbare lines.

See if you've heard this one before:

Jane Seymour is a widow (swell Boston suburb). She has a son who is in love with the sweetest little dumbbell you can imagine. But on the boy's trail there travels a vamp, Veronica.

Now fade way back to the time when John Bunny's stomach was still flat. In that

ADMISSIONS RAISED IN FOUR KEY CITIES

Is Subject of Controversy in Two Other Situations; Prices Considered a Local Matter

Admission price increases are under way in four of the largest key territories and in two other sectors the question is the subject of controversy. Labor Day, officially marking the beginning of each new show season, this week brought definite evidence of an upward trend of box office prices in the Detroit, Kansas City, Los Angeles and San Francisco territories, while in Chicago and St. Louis the situation was still in the preliminary stages of debate.

In many sectors the consensus has been that the problem of admission increases is a local one, in spite of the general upward trend of basic commodity prices, vastly improved box office receipts in many situations, greater employment and generally higher wage scales and purchasing power.

It has been emphasized, both in New York and in the field, that the stage of general business recovery to date warrants price raising only in local situations where the upturn has been most pronounced and public buying power has been materially strengthened.

Al Lichtman, United Artists general sales manager, recently advocated a general increase of five cents in admission scales.

This week Mr. Lichtman said that within the next few weeks theatre conditions generally will show a marked improvement, not only for circuits and independent theatre owners, but also for producers.

Referring to his statement of three weeks ago, the United Artists sales chief expressed his gratification "to note that there has been marked improvement and concerted action on the part of some circuits to increase their first-run admission prices."

An Exhibitor's Viewpoint

Changes of any sort in admission scales long have been a controversial subject between the exhibitor and the distributor, and typical of the attitude of many exhibitors is the reply of F. E. McGillick, a Pittsburgh theatre owner, to Mr. Lichtman's proposals:

"Regarding the Lichtman statement, it would be a fine thing for exhibitors to raise admissions and have the benefit for themselves and not for the distributors."

Another factor is the already proved trend of theatre patronage away from the downtown deluxe house to the neighborhoods. In June, it was estimated, gains for the country's neighborhood theatres—based on comparative figures for a month in 1934 and one in 1933—ranged from 5 to 40 per cent.

In Chicago, higher admissions are the subject of a bitter controversy between the exhibitors and distributors. In that sector particularly have prices fallen rapidly in the last few months and this is markedly true in the Loop district where the most recent price cut saw the RKO Palace drop from a 75-cent to a 50-cent top. The Oriental also went to lower prices a few months ago. One plan under discussion currently is the designation of a number of "specials" by the various companies which would command increased admissions at Loop showings and in subsequent runs.

No advance in admissions is seen in the immediate future by Cleveland exhibitors and circuit operators. The current 44-cent top is expected to remain except where a stage show augments the picture, in which case the admission goes to a 60-cent top, including the state 10 per cent tax.

Neighborhood Admissions Up

The zoning and clearance plan for the admissions situation in the Detroit and Grand Rapids sector, approved last week, raises neighborhood admissions from 10 to 20 cents, with no fluctuating prices. Ten-cent bargain matinees are adjusted to 15 cents and Sunday and holiday matinees will be the same as evening prices. Downtown second runs are raised from 20 to 25 cents and bargain balcony prices are dropped.

From Kansas City this week came the report that the circuits' first runs have raised prices and are ignoring the independent suburbans entirely, after having waited for the independents to reach accord on prices. The present price increases by Kansas City first-runs follow the outlawing of premiums in the territory. First-run scales returned to normal last week after 18 months of price-cutting, initiated by Loew's Midland in January, 1933.

In Los Angeles, independent theatres, following the example of Fox West Coast, announced increases in admissions of 5 and 10 cents, on a graduated basis.

Reduced at Milwaukee

Milwaukee is the only key city reported to date as reducing admissions. This week three first-runs—the Wisconsin and Alhambra, belonging to Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises, and the Warner theatre—lowered their admissions.

Although several St. Louis theatres were scheduled to cut admissions last week, this action was deferred until September 7. In so far as a citywide price rise is concerned, the St. Louis situation appears to be uncertain. The proposed cut revolved largely around the double feature situation, with all theatres, virtually, threatening to cut all admissions from 55 cents to 40 cents for evenings and from 35 to 25 cents for matinees.

Admission prices in almost all San Francisco downtown first-runs have been advanced the last few weeks and are back to winter schedules. The most important changes are in the early matinee prices, which have been set at 35 cents in most houses. United Artists reopened the fall season with an afternoon price of 40 cents, and advances promptly were made by the Golden Gate, Warfield and Paramount. Raising of admissions in all first-runs in the San Francisco territory is expected soon.

Frances Marion, Hollywood scenarist, was painfully injured in an automobile accident en route to San Francisco last week.

DeCasseres Tells of Opening Shows

LIFE BEGINS AT 8:40

Both Doctor Osler and Professor Pitkin have had ideas as to what happens to a man at 40. But the Messrs. Shubert and John Murray Anderson announce that "Life Begins at 8:40."

Well, it certainly does at the Winter Garden—in one of the showiest, swiftiest moving and yelpingest musical revues seen hereabout in some time.

This entertainment—with a corking title for a Hollywood buy—was mainly confected by Ira Gershwin, E. Y. Harburg, Harold Arlen and Robert Alton, with the comedy scenes (of which "C'est la Vie" is the finest) by Philip Loeb.

The "music" will not cause a stir in the grave of Beethoven, Strauss or Herbert.

The highlights in this long show are moon-eyed, rubber-face Bert Lahr, who is much better than the sketches Loeb has quilted for him; Ray Bolger, Luella Gear and Frances Williams. Then there are the magnificent group dancing of the Weidman troupe, Earl Oxford, the juvenile whom you may remember in "Rip Tide," "Should Ladies Behave?" and "Sadie McKee," and the usual competent and so-so flotsam and jetsam of such shows.

"Life Begins at 8:40" is a swat of a hit, with Bert Lahr pointing for the films.

Picture value (title and Bert Lahr only), 100 per cent.

SALUTA

The story background in "Saluta," a musical-comedy satire by Will Morrissey, Eugene Conrad and Maurice Marks (Arthur Lipper, Jr., producing), has at this distance a sort of Marxian Approach—not Karl, the father of the Great Confiscation idea, but Groucho and his brothers.

There is a gang of "spaghetti racketeers" who are regular pointers and setters for Culture (which has long been an ancient racket).

Their yearning for the Aesthetic points, of course, to the home grounds—Italy. And when you say Italy you mean grand opera —from anvil chorus to the Sextette. So these fellows kidnap a night-club ringmaster to go to Italy and produce the big stuff.

The Dutch Schultz of this bunch is a tenor. There is also a blonde, daughter of the backer of this nertzy idea. ((You no doubt have remarked, "This is not a Darryl Zanuck script.")

This is, however, the excuse for the antics of Milton Berle and a long list of singers, mockdrunks, and the rest of the featherweight stuff that tickles a brainless laugh out of the most aristocratic of our hard-boiled noodles.

Campaigning For The Motion Picture

Motion picture theatre advertising and exploitation procedure departed last week from the conventional when the Kansas and Missouri properties of Fox Midwest Theatres Circuit embarked upon a campaign specifically designed to counteract, as adroitly as possible, some of the criticism recently leveled at the screen, by bringing to the attention of prospective customers the strides made by the industry in creating a more popular, educational and socially valuable product. By this campaign the circuit management also hopes to return to the parents of young theatregoers the responsibility for the selection of films for children. By shirking their responsibility, the management reflected, parents have made theatre managers "the goat". To this situation Fox Midwest proposes to bring an end.
—THE EDITOR

ENGAGING in the first wholesale territorial broadcast to patrons of the results of the Production Code Administration's machinery in raising motion picture standards, Fox Midwest Theatres are addressing to prospective customers in 47 large and small towns in the Kansas-Missouri belt a series of institutional advertisements stressing the improvement in the moral tone of 1934-35 product and also the specific appeal of certain productions to the intellectual and educational forces among the potential patronage.

Unusual in its character and in the extent to which it is being employed, the campaign immediately began to register for the individual properties and for the circuit as a whole the goodwill of teachers, students, women's clubs and so-called "critics" of the screen. All are being told that "the best screen fare of the new season will be adaptations from books, famous and popular novels and biographies and from other sources favored by the advocates of 'better motion pictures'."

The procedure, as outlined, might well be adapted by other motion picture theatre owners whose properties stand need of community support.

The idea for the campaign and the machinery for carrying it into effect were born when E. C. Rhoden, Fox Midwest division manager, called his district managers together—Lon Cox, L. J. McCarthy, H. A. McClure and Howard Jameyson, and told them that for the new show season the circuit would prepare its fall advertising campaign so that it would not only announce new product to the regular customers, but to also win over, if possible, the critics of the motion picture. Mr. Rhoden amplified his idea by stating that he wanted to avoid entering into any discussion of the present campaign directed against pictures by the church and other groups. From that point on layouts and the like were worked out by Mr. Jameyson and by D. S. Lawler, division publicity director for the circuit.

Combined with a series of newspaper advertisements to appear in each of the 47 cities, Fox Midwest has prepared a leaflet which is directed specifically to the attention of teachers and students of literature and to all persons interested in better films. The leaflet lists many of the popular novels which have been transcribed to the screen for 1934-35 exhibition, as well as historical and biographical material, classical literature, dramatic adaptations, musical plays of the light operetta, and adventure stories.

The leaflet is to be distributed in all intermediate, secondary schools, universities and colleges in the Kansas-Missouri section in which the circuit operates.

Bookmarks listing many of the works contained in the leaflet will be distributed in libraries, the circuit's executives acting in this respect on the assumption that a considerable portion of a library's patronage is extremely critical of the screen.

"It is our opinion that teachers and scholars will be impressed by this impressive list of books that are being made into motion pictures," explained an announcement from the executives of the Fox properties in the midwest. "Our personal acquaintance with educators has brought to our attention the fact that these individuals are crying for films of the type we list on the leaflet. We believe that an announcement of this kind will cause them to forego criticism, for the present at least."

On the general assumption that all pictures cannot be produced for child audiences and with the realization that many films are suited only for adult minds, the Fox Midwest executives regard the classification plan as the only practical solution to the problem of child suitability under present conditions.

They believe that while films may have deserved some of the criticism directed toward them the fault is not entirely with the films themselves, and that a large part of the difficulty lies in the fact that the wrong people see the wrong pictures. People inadvertently stray into a theatre showing a picture which offends them, or one which they should not see. In most cases parents who are interested could easily learn of the nature of the picture being shown, but the usual complaint is that they "never know what kind of a picture is on."

Mr. Jameyson reflected a large part of popular managerial sentiment when he said that whether it is fair or not the responsibility for what children see on the screen rests solely with the theatre manager, who becomes "the goat" for parental neglect and indifference.

"We are not kidding ourselves about the classification plan," he said. We do not expect to see the families flock out en masse to see every family picture. Neither do we expect to see children stay away from strictly adult pictures. We know from experience that parents will bring children to see such pictures.

"But we do believe that if this plan is carried out, thoughtful people will realize we are attempting to do our part in keeping youngsters away from pictures they shouldn't see and we also believe our efforts in this respect will win much goodwill in the community."

By differentiating the releases in the general groups of "family" and "adult," the plan departs from the juvenile classification idea favored by some of the previewing groups, but which has been found harmful by some theatre managers. In general, the "selected motion pictures" leaflet constituting the joint estimate of previewing committees and issued monthly by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, will serve as a guide in determining classifications. The group to which individual films are assigned will be identified in advertisements by an insignia resembling a seal which will be uniform for all theatres in the division. While this has not been definitely decided, it is planned to have the emblem signify that a better films group has approved the picture's classification.

The Fox theatre manager is ordered to inform himself in advance as to the nature of the picture he is presenting and to learn whether it is suitable for the whole family or for adults only. Where there is doubt as to the manner of classification, the theatre manager is urged to "play safe" and use the adult label, or to contact the district manager for advice.

In carrying out the plan, each Fox manager automatically is vested with the duties of a public relations director. He is supposed to contact leaders in the women's clubs, ministers and others who can be of valuable assistance. Since the plan is in accord with the aims of Better Films Councils, managers are urged to cooperate in organizing such groups.

As part of the campaign to impress on critics that the industry has a new and higher standard, and that the discriminating and educated will in the new season find entertainment to their liking, Fox Midwest also plans to distribute to selected patrons and organizations in each community an abridged reprint of the monthly review list issued by the MPPDA. As planned, the pamphlet will be condensed from normal size, usually 16 to 32 pages, to four pages, retaining only the pictures used by the circuit's theatres with the appended estimates of the reviewing committees and excluding foreign pictures and irrelevant matter.

The "book cycle" is the subject matter of practically every piece of institutional advertising included in the campaign. Bookmarks and "book jackets" for distribution among libraries will be employed to call attention to the fact that more pictures adapted from well known books will be shown than in any previous year.

"The Movies Find Their Mission," is the bold display caption heading one of the two-column newspaper advertisements conceived for the campaign.

In connection with the newspaper advertising, one ad is purely intended to take credit for the industry for learning through the success of some motion pictures—such as "Little Women" and "David Harum"—what the public wants. The Fox officials were of the opinion that this line of approach is better than to intimate that theatres and the industry itself were acting as a result of some outside pressure. Said this ad:

"Thanks to 'David Harum' and 'Little Women' for Setting a New Fashion in Motion Pictures—the extraordinary success of these two fine, wholesome movies was a mandate to the producers from the American public . . . starting a new trend in motion picture entertainment and launching the screen on what promises to be its most worthwhile season . . . a season that will see countless other beloved characters brought to life from the pages of the world's favorite books."

Books specifically mentioned by Fox Midwest in practically all publicity in the campaign as contributing material to 1934-35 productions are grouped under four classifications, popular novels, historial and biographical, classical and adventure and miscellaneous, as follows:

Popular—

"In His Steps," "Babbitt," "The Magnificent Obsession," "Tish," "Laddie," "When a Man's a Man," "The Age of Innocence," "A Lost Lady," "Anne of Green Gables," "Imitation of Life," "Old Judge Priest," "Little Men," "Main Street," "The Good Earth," "Ruggles of Red Cap," "Freckles," "That Printer of Udells," "The Forsyte Saga," "The Fountain," "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "The Magnificent Ambersons," "Jane Eyre," "The Little Minister," "Girl of the Limberlost," "The Harvester," "The Painted Veil."

Historical and Biographical—

"Cardinal Richelieu," "Anthony Adverse," "Marie Antoinette," "Men Against Death," "Napoleon," "Joan of Arc," "Sutter's Gold," "The Mighty Barnum."

Classical—

"The Last Days of Pomeii," "Treasure Island," "David Copperfield," "Great Expectations," "A Tale of Two Cities," "The Count of Monte Cristo," "The Three Musketeers," "Dante's Inferno," "Resurrection."

Adventure and Miscellaneous—

"100 Years From Now," "Congo Raid," "The Scarlet Pimpernel," "The Call of the Wild," "Captain Blood," "Oil for the Lamps of China," "Life Begins at Forty," "Black Ivory," "Lafayette Esquadrille," "She, the Enchantress," "Mutiny On the Bounty," "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," "Three Stand Alone."

The first advertisements in the series proclaim that "literature comes to life . . . the movies meet the demand of exacting public taste to produce the finest, most realistic pictures ever made."

With an average of one "book picture" a week promised by the studios for the year, the managers are impressed that they must convey the idea that the producers are turning to new sources for plot material. "Only through this type of contact will you be able to reach thousands of people who have drifted away from our theatres," says the exhibitor manual which embraces the plan.

The timeliness of the campaign in meeting sincere criticism with the view of sidetracking unfair attacks is pointed out in one of the manual's statements:

"We have no quarrel with the honest, sincere critic who objects to the recent trend in movies. We agree with him in most of his criticism and we applaud and welcome his efforts. We are happy that the voice of criticism has at last become loud enough for Hollywood to hear. For a long time we have been complaining, but to no avail.

"However, you must not forget that the honest criticism of sincere people not only gives an excuse but lays a foundation for the savage, unfair criticism of the professional reformer who hates and despises the movies, no matter how clean or wholesome they may be."

U. S. SUES SOCIETY OF COMPOSERS TO DISSOLVE ROYALTY AGREEMENTS

Mills Warns Exhibitors That ASCAP Will Continue to Collect Fees and Will Carry Out Planned Scale Increase

The United States Government struck forcefully Thursday afternoon at the heart of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, filing a suit charging monopoly of popular music, in an attempt to dissolve all existing license-fee agreements for royalty payments made to the society by the large commercial users of music—broadcasters, theatres, producers and others. With these agreements abrogated ASCAP would have little reason for existence.

Coming suddenly at the height of a battle between the society and exhibitors over increased music taxes for theatres, scheduled to become effective October 1, the Government's suit appeared immediately to lend moral support to the exhibitors' cause.

However, the Society, through E. C. Mills, general manager, warned that it would take 18 months, at least, for the machinery of the law to render a decision. Until that time the Society will continue to collect royalties from exhibitors and broadcasters. Nor does the Society's executive board in New York contemplate any changes from its plan to make the higher theatre scale effective.

Whether the decision also would serve to break up license-fee agreements between exhibitors and ASCAP, besides those of broadcasters, producers and others, depends on the extent of the court's findings in the long-drawn-out legal proceedings pending. If the government finds the operations of the society illegal, and obtains an injunction against it, then ASCAP could not continue, in its present form, to collect any fees under the licenses.

Meanwhile the National Exhibitors' Emergency Committee decided Tuesday to press its fight against the Society in spite of the Government's suit, according to Walter Vincent, chairman. A meeting was scheduled for Wednesday to advance plans for collecting penny-a-seat contributions from theatre owners to finance a federal court fight.

Mr. Vincent indicated that while exhibitors welcome the Government's action, they feel considerable time will be required to try the issues involved in that action. Injunctions will be sought within the next few weeks.

Would Bar New Contracts

Basically, the suit asks dissolution of the society, and, further, seeks restraining orders from the federal court to prevent the society and its affiliated enterprises from entering into new contracts or renewing old ones for the public performance of music on a royalty basis unless such contracts and royalties are determined by genuine competition between copyright owners.

The society's spokesmen in New York this week pointed to the fact that ASCAP already had successfully weathered other attempts by commercial users of music to "deprive the society's members of their rights to their own copyrighted music properties."

Mr. Mills said Wednesday that the society is not worried over the suit. He declared it developed from pressure brought to bear against the Government by powers both in radio and motion picture fields.

"The rights of our members who own copyrighted music are rights given to them by Congressional law and by the laws of every large country in the world," said Mr. Mills.

He predicted chaos if dissolution is ordered, declaring the commercial users of music will pay more than they now pay in royalties if they are compelled to deal individually with hundreds of music copyright owners.

In its attempt to break up all license-fee agreements made by the society with commercial users of music, the Government also seeks to abrogate similar agreements concerning all public performances of music written by members of the society, whose 24 directors are described as "a self-perpetuating body," and who are said to control "practically all of the musical compositions demanded by the public of the United States for entertainment purposes." The society is made up of some 969 of the country's leading composers and 97 of its leading music publishing companies.

Three Organizations Named

The suit was instituted by Harold M. Stephens, assistant attorney general, and Andrew W. Bennett and George P. Alt, special assistant attorneys general, on the order of Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, and was filed in federal court in New York.

Specifically named as defendants were: American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, Eugene Howard Buck, president; Music Publishers' Protectice Association (said to control 75 per cent of the nation's copyrighted popular music); Music Dealers' Service, Inc. (said to control most of the popular sheet music); and some 130 publishers and publishing companies belonging to the defendant societies.

The three organizations, it is charged, by interlocking directorates and by agreements have been allied since 1932 in a conspiracy to monopolize the music business in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

By means of this combination, says the Government, "competition between copyright owners in the sale of licenses to public performers of copyrighted musical composition has been eliminated and there has been created a pool or consolidation of individual copyright monopolies in the society by virtue of which the society has the power to dictate the manner" in which radio broadcasting stations and other commercial copyrighted music users may operate in this connection.

Charges Complete Monopoly

In exhibition, the Society demands—and collects—a certain sum a year from exhibitors for public reproduction rights. The Music Publishers' Protective Association collects recording rights on the same music from producers. In turn, exhibitors pay this recording royalty, too, through music score charges collected by the distributors along with film rentals.

The society, according to the Government, has a complete monopoly of the right to license users of music. "Broadcast stations, theatres and public performers are obliged to acquire from the defendant society upon terms and conditions arbitrarily fixed by the society a general license to perform."

Failure of an exhibitor or another commercial user of the music of members of the society almost always results in a suit against the violator under the copyright laws. Further, it is charged in the suit that the defendants forced public entertainment agencies to enter into agreements with them to prosecute under the copyright law, which allows damages to $250 for each infringing rendition.

Government Asks Injunction to Bar ASCAP from Entering Upon New Contracts or Renewing Those Now in Effect

The Government demands a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendants from violating the anti-trust laws, the setting aside of all agreements between the society and its music publishing, composing and writing members, between the society and John G. Paine, as its agent and trustee; between the society and music users, such as theatres, broadcasters and others.

Sees Direct Dealings Needed

It further asks that the activities of the defendants in the granting of blanket licenses to perform compositions of any and all of its 1,000 members on the basis of a royalty charge, determined by the board of directors, be declared illegal and void.

Such a decision, commented Mr. Mills this week, would have the effect of compelling broadcasters and producers and others to deal directly with each individual copyright owner.

Regardless, the Government believes that there should be restraint of any further agreements of such nature on any basis except that predicated upon free and open competition between copyright owners, with royalties fixed at the owners' discretion.

The Government seeks to restrain the defendants from forming an association for issuance of general agreements or licenses unless the facilities of such associations are made available to all copyright owners upon identical basis, this to aid the interests of non-members.

Forms of licenses now issued to commercial users include (1) to radio broadcasting stations not owned 51 per cent by newspapers; (2) to radio broadcasting stations owned 51 per cent by newspapers; (3) to theatres; and (4) licenses issued for general use.

Broadcasters Sue

The Government's charges, denied categorically by ASCAP, are also the principal allegations in an anti-trust suit filed by broadcasters against the society and set for trial in New York in October. The Exhibitors' Emergency Committee, representing 8,000 theatre owners, and organized to fight the increase in music charges to take effect on October 1, planned to incorporate the same basic allegations in a similar anti-trust suit, George Z. Medalie former United States district attorney, having been retained last week by the exhibitors for this purpose. An exhibitor action is expected to be filed shortly by Mr. Medalie in New York.

Exhibitors pledged last week to contribute one cent per seat to finance their fight against ASCAP.

UNITED ARTISTS DOES NOT LICENSE PICTURES IN BLOCK

SINCE the formation of the company in 1919 license agreements for each separate photoplay are negotiated separately and are submitted separately to the home office for either approval or rejection. The home office and producers' representatives examine each contract separately and some are accepted and some are rejected, depending on the individual terms of each individual contract.

So that there will be no misunderstanding in the trade, United Artists Corporation has not changed its policy of selling but will continue to offer pictures to exhibitors individually, and each individual picture will be negotiated on separate terms and on separate contracts.

THOUSAND "JACK RABBIT" CIRCUITS CAUSE LARGE LOSS TO INDUSTRY

Exhibitors Fight Illegitimate Competition of Mediocre Product Reproduced Imperfectly in "One Night Stands"

Hundreds of thousands of dollars are being lost annually in rentals by distributors and in box office revenue by exhibitors through illegitimate motion picture performances put on by so-called "Jack Rabbit" circuits—conducted by persons traveling from town to town with portable equipment for "one night stands."

Pointed out as even more important than the financial loss is the fact that such operations do much to lower the prestige of the industry as a whole through slipshod and dishonest methods, antiquated prints which reproduce imperfectly and by mediocrity of the type of product screened.

"Jack Rabbits" have been a source of great trouble to the established exhibitor for many years, principally in the rural sections. Their development now has reached a point where not a few of the established exhibitors find their business in jeopardy, due to grossly unfair competitive methods employed by the itinerant circuit, which because of low overhead are in a position to charge little or no admission to their performances, staged in empty stores or vacant lots.

Some "Jack Rabbits" operate legitimately, but on the whole the procedure of the "Jack Rabbit" conductor is considered questionable. Both use portable equipment easily transported from one town to another with a minimum of cost, usually by automobile and trailer. While the so-called honest "Jack Rabbit" operator pays for his film and lives up to the terms of his contract with the distributor, frequently acquiring the prints outright, the illegitimate operator "bicycles" prints from one community to another though authorized to use the print for only one showing.

Dozens of Itinerants Operating

According to the Copyright Protection Bureau, operated on behalf of distributors to prevent "bicycling" and other forms of illegitimate showings, there are hundreds of these itinerants operating the year around.

Shortly after organization of the Bureau, some seven years ago, it was estimated that "Jack Rabbits" were regularly operating from one to four days weekly in more than 2,000 towns. The Bureau discovered that thousands of exhibitions were unauthorized and sponsors of these were prosecuted in many cases. In 1928, at the beginning of sound, many more were automatically eliminated. Some of the more ingenious "Jack Rabbits" circumvented this technical problem, however, by using ordinary phonographs, playing ordinary records to give the effect of musical synchronization. Again, in 1929, when the producers changed over completely to sound-on-film, the number of "Jack Rabbit" operators in the country was further reduced.

In 1930, however, when so-called "bootleg" sound equipment flooded the market, "Jack Rabbits" resumed operations and today there are as many as 50 varieties of this type of reproducer, all of them portable, being used by the itinerant showman.

The number of "Jack Rabbit" exhibitors currently operating in this country, principally during the summer months, when business is best, approximates 1,000. Where individual cases have been investigated it is reported that each "Jack Rabbit" showing is attended by an average audience of 200 persons.

It was pointed out that it is this type of exhibitor who does irreparable harm to the industry, and, especially, irks the Women's Federations, Parent and Teacher organizations and other moral influences staked against the industry.

A Question and an Answer

Typical of the attitude of established exhibitors complaining about the inroads being made on their business by the "Jack Rabbits," is the following letter, one of dozens of such complaints received by the "Code Question Box" department of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and which explains another form of "Jack Rabbiting" known as local "Merchants' Shows":

"Is it allowable under the Code for an intinerant exhibitor to come into a town and run entertainment talking pictures (sic) repeatedly on an admission-free basis through a tie-up with the local merchants in competition with an ordinary exhibitor who has been running a moving picture show regularly in that town and paying taxes, etc., for the same? These free shows are run in the street once a week. They are paid for by the merchants of the town where they are run who contribute so much weekly in return for the exhibitor's running their advertising slides between reels. The picture itself is entirely of an entertainment nature and only the slides are advertising. These itinerant exhibitors are organized into some sort of cooperative group buying their films outright so that the ordinary exhibitor's normal means of complaint and opposition — through his local exchanges — is cut off. Thus the Code would seem to offer the only possible chance of relief from this devastating form of competition.

"Although not very well informed on Code matters, I am of the opinion that the Code regulates to some extent the conditions of exhibition for which distributors may rent films. Does it also regulate in any way the conditions of exhibition for which distributors may sell films or has the exhibitor an absolute right to use a film as he pleases once he has bought it?"

ANSWER—The motion picture code cannot prevent a travelling motion picture show from entering a town and giving motion picture performances under normal and fair competitive conditions. But, the fact that they do not charge any admission, operating in competition with another and regularly established exhibitor, is a definite violation of code clause, Section 1, Part 3-E, which says: "No exhibitor shall lower the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for his theatre by giving rebates in the form of lotteries, prizes, reduced script books, coupons, throw-away tickets, or by two-for-one admissions, or by other methods or devices of similar nature which directly or indirectly lower or tend to lower such announced admission prices and which are unfair to competing exhibitors."

It appears, then, that because the itinerant exhibitor does employ a method in this connection that is unfair to competing exhibitors, he stands in violation of the motion picture code and any competitor has a right to file a complaint against him with the Local Grievance Board.

However, in view of the fact, as stated in the question, that the itinerant exhibitor is not serviced by the exchanges, owning prints outright, it is difficult to imagine how any Local Grievance Board could stop the practice, not having any policing powers.

The code cannot prevent a distributor from selling outright any films to whomsoever the distributor chooses, and the purchasing exhibitor has an absolute right to use the prints as he pleases. Although such a form of traveling exhibition would be governed by the fair trade practices provisions of the code, there does not appear to be any method by which a Local Grievance Board finding a violation against such itinerant exhibitor could enforce its order to cease and desist—except through the "policing" and court prosecution channels of the National Recovery Administration itself. If the exchanges were servicing the itinerant exhibitor, then they could be ordered to withdraw service if and when the itinerant refused to discontinue its free-admission shows.

Prints "Bicycled," Sometimes "Loaned"; New Enterprises Discouraged, Entire Industry Loses Prestige as a Result

Pays No Taxes

The "Jack Rabbit" operator pays no taxes, either municipal, state or Federal. The problem of rent is negligible as his theatre is usually where he "sets it up," in the field or in a vacant store. Too, the circuit sponsor usually operates his own equipment.

According to the Copyright Protection Bureau, "Jack Rabbit" shows have discouraged many potential independent exhibitors from attempting to develop or build a motion picture enterprise of their own, because the "Jack Rabbit" operators have either built up a following due to their low admission prices, or have discouraged potential patronage through their shoddy methods.

A typical case of "Jack Rabbiting" is one in New York State. The operator approached an exchange, rented two prints for which he paid about $7.50 each. The exchange was given to understand they were to be shown at a Civilian Conservation Corps camp. The operator hoodwinked the exchange as to the camp's postoffice address and took the prints upstate to a popular summer resort area and proceeded to rent them outright to hotels, for one showing at each hotel, the average rent paid the operator per showing being approximately $40, or a clear profit for the "Jack Rabbit" of $32.50 a show. He sold many hotels before the prints were returned, several days later.

The "Jack Rabbit" exhibitor sometimes finds a "cohort" in the projection room of some regular theatre in a small town who will "loan" him a print overnight for a showing. Film also has been known to disappear from exchange shipping platforms.

It is estimated that as many as 5,000 prints belonging to local distributors are "lost" annually, "duped" many times over by the bootlegger and then supplied to the illegitimate "Jack Rabbit" operator.

Columbo Is Killed In Coast Accident

Russ Columbo, radio singer of great popularity, orchestra leader and a rising screen player, was accidentally killed in Los Angeles last Sunday by the unexpected discharge of a long disused pistol from the Civil War, which he was examining in the home of Lansing V. Brown, Jr., well known Hollywood photographer, and an old friend of the singer. Mr. Columbo was only 26 years old. Six hours after the accident, the young player died in Good Samaritan Hospital. The bullet had lodged in his brain above the eye. A delicate operation, his only hope, was planned, but he died before he reached the operating table.

Mr. Columbo, who had flashed into prominence three years ago with his radio voice, was visiting his friend, and with him was examining Mr. Brown's collection of old pistols. The piece which was discharged was a cap and ball pistol. Mr. Brown was examining it, when the gun suddenly fired. The old fashioned ball glanced from a table top, striking Mr. Columbo over the eye.

The singer, whose real name was Ruggiero Eugenio Di Rudolpho Columbo, met his greatest success on NBC programs as a crooner. Reaching a top of $6,000 a week, his popularity began to fade. Two years ago he went to Hollywood to devote his time to motion pictures, only recently returning to the microphone.

He was born in Philadelphia, January 14, 1908. As a child he showed great aptitude for the violin. His only important screen role was in "Broadway Through a Keyhole." He played minor roles in "The Wolf Song," with Lupe Velez, and in "The Texan" with Gary Cooper. He wrote many of the popular songs he sang, in conjunction with his direction of his own orchestra.

Skouras and Randforce Cut as Fox Operators

The Skouras and Randforce circuits, active in the New York and New Jersey territories and also operating the Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, this week offered to accept a 50 per cent salary reduction as operators of the Fox circuit, following the circuit's reorganization.

Aggregate salaries of the Fox Metropolitan operators—Spyros, George and Charles Skouras, Samuel Rinzler and Louis Frisch—currently are $119,200. By such reduction their aggregate compensation would approximate $50,000.

It was reported that the operators' participation in profits of the circuit would not be disturbed by the salary reduction.

Shiffman, Bolognino Resign from ITOA

Harry Shiffman and Laurence Bolognino, of the Brill and Trio-Consolidated circuits, respectively, this week resigned from the Independent Theatre Owners' Association in New York.

Mr. Shiffman withdrew his 10 theatres when he became a partner with Publix in operation of the Paramount in Staten Island, and 12 Bolognino houses were withdrawn, he said, because of additional city taxes.

Dillingham, Dean Of the Theatre, Dies in New York

All of Broadway, and by that is meant the Broadway that is the theatre, early this week gathered to pay tribute to the memory of Charles B. Dillingham, one of the greatest theatrical producers of his time, who died last week at the Hotel Astor of arteriosclerosis. Recently seriously ill, the veteran of the stage suffered a general breakdown in health, and failed to rally. He was 66 years old.

Typical of the theatre which was his field for so many years, was Mr. Dillingham's own remark, that if he had selected a phrase descriptive of his life, he would have adopted as his motto, "You never can tell." At the peak of his career he declared his entire success "mostly luck." He had no use for vulgarity on the stage, and in three decades during which he produced more than 200 shows and managed 50 prominent stars, he never once qualified his conviction that the stage should be a thing of beauty. Most of his shows were musicals, and often of the spectacular variety.

For years he was closely connected with two other great producers, A. L. Erlanger and Florenz Ziegfeld, both dead. He also headed his own organization, the Dillingham Theatre Corporation, which he founded after leaving the employ of the late Charles Frohman, for whom he had acted as advertising agent. Deciding to go into business for himself, Mr. Dillingham began as a manager for stars, his first charge being Julia Marlowe. Many of the greater stars of yesterday and today owe their rise to Mr. Dillingham.

Charles Bancroft Dillingham was born in Hartford, Conn., May 30, 1868, the son of an Episcopalian clergyman.

In 1896 Mr. Dillingham wrote a play, which was poorly received, but attracted the attention of Charles Frohman. The friendship and association which developed then lasted until the day Mr. Frohman went down on the Lusitania. Then he went into his own business and the long series of theatrical triumphs followed one another, virtually culminating in the operation of the Hippodrome, which he took over in 1914 when the big house was relinquished by the Shuberts. He ran it until 1923, and during that period the theatre reached the top of its international fame. With R. H. Burnside he staged many productions there, and the theatre, according to the contemporary press, was "the greatest amusement institution of the city."

Mr. Dillingham was married twice. His first wife, the former Jennie Yeamans, actress, died in 1906, 10 years after their marriage. In 1913 he married Eileen Kearney, of San Francisco, and she divorced him in 1924. Late in May, 1932, a receiver was appointed for his Globe theatre in New York, and in July, 1933, with liabilities listed at $7,337,703, and assets listed at $108,063, he was forced into bankruptcy. Last season he emerged from retirement to produce "New Faces," a musical, with Leonard Sillman. Following cremation, Mr. Dillingham's ashes were to be buried in Cedar Cemetery, at Hartford.

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Tagged and labeled like a warehouse shipment of canned goods in cases, one of the first government-subsidized stage plays bowed into our little suburban community of Pelham Bay, near the Westchester County line, the other night, and for the sorely-needed salary of one dollar an hour, some hungry and frayed thespians gave a fairly fresh performance, free to the public, under a dark blue sky and a warm summer breeze. The play, on the handbills, was that hearty perennial, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The play, on the records of the federal government, is known as ERA Project No. 2235—F6—91, or something like that.

The players work for the same wage as that of the men who sweep the stage of the large outdoor stadium. One dollar an hour is paid to the star and to the villain. The leading lady gets it. The drummer in the orchestra gets it. And so does the doorman. It fills their empty stomachs, the first step in the process of rehabilitation.

Hear Ye! Hear Ye! the well known Mr. M. R. On that day he will take the name of George Marmaduke Clarkopolis.

In order to give American "color" to the native Greek picnic which will be part of the festivities of the national (Greek) Alhelba convention, to be held in Columbus, Ohio, from September 19th to 25th, Mr. Theodore Perkas, prominent (Greek) Columbus exhibitor, in charge of the convention, placed Mr. Clark on the committee. In order to get Mr. Clark past the Alhelba examining board on credentials, Mr. Perkas officially rechristened him Clarkopolis. Which gives Marmaduke the same right as the Skouras Brothers to say "Strumberry Pie."

When Helen Hayes returned to her home in Hollywood, the other evening, from the Culver City studio of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, she found a box as large as a steamer trunk waiting for her, filled with orchids and gardenias. Helen wired back: "You're getting warmer. Keep guessing."

Mr. de Forest's most important contribution to the art is the "Audion,"—detector, oscillator and amplifier—which made possible trans-continental telephony. The thin thread which still connects him with motion pictures is his de Forest Phonofilm sound recorder and reproducer, the rights to which he sold, reputedly for "a song" to the wealthy Schlesingers, who are said to be millionaires 250 times over, their principal holdings embracing a monopoly on virtually all forms of entertainment in dark South Africa.

"Killer" Gray, so-called "bodyguard" of the pugilistically inclined George Raft, is rather a modest chappie, on whom the name "Killer" was foisted without his knowledge, so we learn from our Victor Shapiro of Hollywood.

It seems that Mr. Gray, as a boy, lived on the lower east side, where Yiddish is spoken more often than not. When a gangling kid, Gray was taken to the hospital to be operated on for hernia, which, in Yiddish, is known as "killeh." "John Citizen" AND THE CATHOLIC VIEWPOINT

by REVEREND GERARD B. DONNELLY

The status of sin and the lusts of the flesh as dramatic material, from the Catholic point of view and the reactions of the normal man are discussed with particular clarity in the article by the Reverend Gerard B. Donnelly, S.J., in the current issue of the magazine "America." Father Donnelly's exposition is an important contribution toward a better understanding of the basic intent of the Legion of Decency campaign, which continues to suffer from considerable confusion of minds in some quarters of the church, the motion picture industry and in the "public mind." His article herewith.

ACCORDING to certain newspaper critics who have been voicing their fears over Hollywood's return to decency, the picture patrons of the country are destined to be treated during the next few months to a run of pretty dull films. Screen entertainment is to be mid-Victorianized. Stories are to be unsexed and made puerile. We are about to witness a cycle of prim and priggish pictures—all about Little Lord Fauntleroys or the Rover Boys. The spirit of Sanford and Merton is to rule the studios, for, the columnists complain, the Church is against the dramatization of sin and has laid a taboo upon sex and crime in the pictures.

This is a pretty ludicrous charge to toss at a Church whose Founder invented the parable of the prodigal son, and whose earliest chronicles boldly talk about Magdalen, the penitent thief, the woman taken in adultery, Salome, and the Samaritan woman—sinners all of them. St. Augustine, an early Catholic, would disagree with our critics, since he went so far as to publish a book confessing his own weaknesses. The medieval Catholic, author of "Aucassin and Nicolet" saw no difficulty in dramatizing sin. Neither did Chaucer or Dante or the Catholic poets who wrote the "Golden Legend." Nor were crime and sex considered taboo on the stage by the artists who devised "Everyman" and the thousands of other miracle plays that entertained the Catholic Middle Ages.

The idea that Catholics want writers to treat only of an unreal world, that they forbid artists to touch upon the story of man's frailty and falls is, of course, an idea that only a person ignorant of history and literature could advance. The simple truth—capable of being proved by hundreds of examples—is that Catholics have never dreamed of denying that sin can be legitimate material for book, stage, or any other form of entertainment.

The present concern among Catholics over motion pictures originates in what they conceive to be their obligation to prevent material sin. The term is technical. But since it touches a fact which is the chief reason for the Legion of Decency, it calls for a bit of explanation.

Catholics hold that the standards by which any human act is judged to be morally good or evil are standards rooted in the natural law. They are therefore objective and immutable standards. Neither convention nor custom, civil law, nor any other expression of human opinion can ever cause an intrinsically immoral act to lost its evil character. Perjury, for instance, is a violation of the natural law, and as such, always has been and always will be wrong.

Now if a man, knowing that perjury is evil, nevertheless deliberately takes a false oath, he is guilty of what is called formal sin. But what if he happens to be honestly persuaded that perjury is not immoral? Well, answer the Catholic moralists, he may indeed be excused from personal guilt. Nevertheless—and here is the all-important point—because what he does is actually a violation of the Divine Lawgiver's will, his act is an evil thing, a material sin, something that dishonors God, and hence is to be deplored and if possible prevented.

Plainly, then, to the Catholic way of thinking, material sin is an almost certain result of false opinions about morality. Hence, it is important that all men should hold correct views about right and wrong and that they should be kept from adopting any principle that conflicts with the true law of nature.

But what bearing has all this on the motion pictures? Well, here is a thing that Catholic leaders clearly realize: despite the fact that our times are always being roundly denounced as pagan and licentious, the average citizen, even though he is a member of no particular church, pretty generally accepts as valid the traditional Christian code. He still holds, for example, that theft or murder or suicide is wrong. He continues to believe that adultery—and all the other items on this particular list—are offenses against God. True, his conduct may sometimes be deplorable; but while it is bad to fail in the observance of a code, it is far worse to reject the code itself, as outworn and invalid. John Citizen does not question the standards taught him by previous generations. Whether he be incited to lust or larceny, he still finds his chief inhibition in a sound moral judgment—"This is forbidden by the law of God."

Operators Stage Demonstration in New York Protest

Members of New York Local 306 of the Motion Picture Operators' Union, IATSE, staged a mass demonstration in Times Square on Saturday night in direct defiance of the orders of Mayor La Guardia and Police Commissioner O'Ryan, who had permitted pickets the right to "parade" so long as they did not interfere with traffic or theatre patrons. Thousands of theatregoers tied up traffic as they watched the demonstration, which centered about Walter Reade's Mayfair theatre at 47th street and Seventh avenue.

There were about 50 men in the group of demonstrators, most of them wearing trench helmets or American Legion caps, since many of the operators are members of a Legion post in New York. While the group was orderly it attracted attention because of the Legion regalia and because of placards carried by many of the men. One of the signs read: "We Protest Against Violations of the NRA." Another called for "Decent Hours and Decent Wages."

With the appointment of a labor committee the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York on Saturday reported it would attempt to conciliate the differences between its members and the local operators' unions, with special effort directed toward peaceful settlement of the Local 306 controversy with the Allied Operators' Union, which precipitated Saturday's demonstration.

In Cleveland, operators' wage scales at subsequent run theatres increased 10 per cent on September 1. The rate there for first-run subsequents now is $117.90 as against $106.11 last year. It is estimated this raise will cost the subsequent run theatre owners of Greater Cleveland at least $75,000.

Decision to appeal to the NRA for a fair settlement of the union situation in Los Angeles was made last week at the first membership meeting of the reorganized Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California. The majority sentiment was against arbitration.

Loew, RKO Theatre Fight Appears Near Settlement

Settlement of the controversy between Loew's, Inc., and Radio-Keith-Orpheum in New York over film buying and theatre acquisition this week appeared imminent. If a settlement is effected, Fox product will go back to RKO and the contract with Loew's will be settled, it is understood. Both Loew's and RKO have curtailed their drive for new theatres in the territory, with RKO adding 11 theatres and Loew's only one. All theatre deals made by RKO's subsidiary, Keith-Albee-Orpheum, during the past seven months, have been approved by the company's board of directors.

With nine theatres currently in his circuit, Abraham Leff will increase his Bronx group to 11 within the next few weeks, and Trio-Consolidated this week took over two more independent theatres in New York.

Tri-Ergon Wins Long Patent Suit

After 15 years of litigation, legal arguments and trials, three German inventors, Josef Engl, Joseph Masolle and Hans Vogt of Berlin have won in the United States district court at Wilmington, Del., their claims for a patent on a "glow lamp" invention used in talking pictures. The glow lamp was used in the development of sound-on-film. The trio, who have assigned their claims to the American Tri-Ergon Corporation of New York and Tri-Ergon Holding A. G., of Switzerland, had brought suit in Wilmington against General Talking Pictures Corporation, DeForest Phonofilms, Inc., and Lee DeForest. The court will issue a decree that letters of patent be issued to the plaintiff.

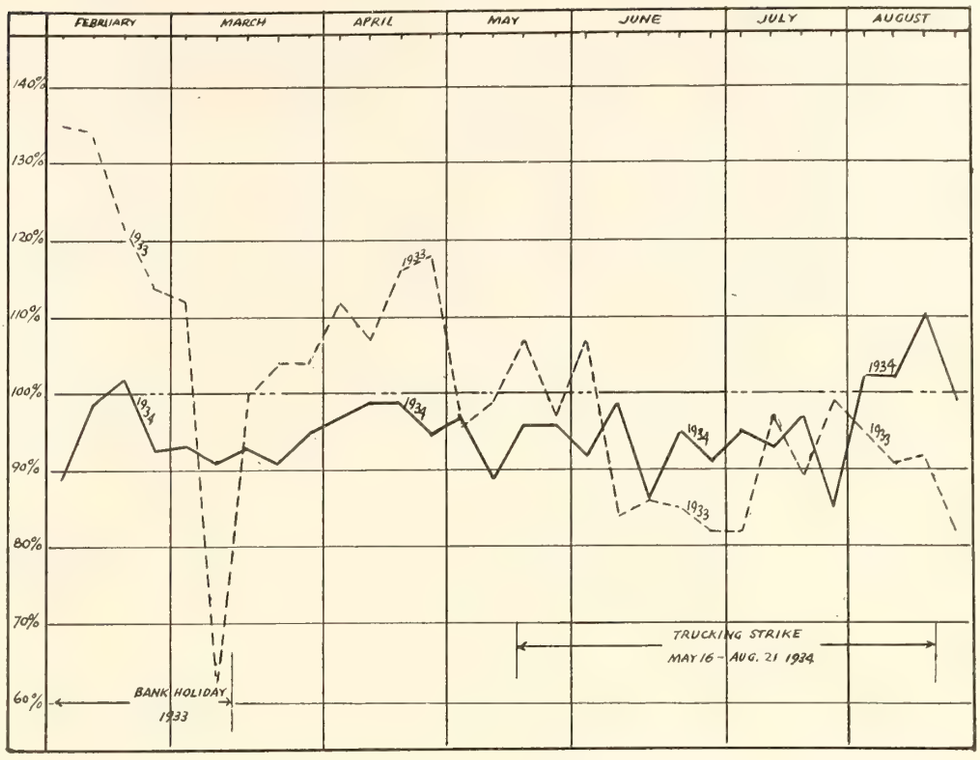
In the opinion handed down last week by Judge John P. Nields of Wilmington, it is stated that Dr. Lee DeForest, regarded as the "father" of talking films, was not the first inventor of this glow lamp, important in the photographic of sound. It goes on to say that the three Germans "are the joint and first inventors of the invention" and that the patent office in Washington had erred in refusing them a patent.

"The testimony and evidence produced in the district court," Judge Nields writes, "carry thorough conviction that the patent office erred in granting the patent to Lee De Forest and in refusing to grant the patent to Josef Engl et al."

The DeForest defense was that DeForest had filed his application for a patent for "means of recording and reproducing sound" on September 18, 1919. To prove that his invention was prior to that of the Germans, Dr. DeForest introduced at the trial several years ago in Wilmington a bit of paper on which was a sketch of his inventions. Dr. DeForest said he made the sketch at sea, crossing to Europe. The sketch was lost, he said, and not found till 1925 in a book of poetry.

In spite of the importance attached by Dr. DeForest to that bit of paper, Judge Nields states:

"Assume the sketch is unaltered since 1919, it is no part of the DeForest patent in issue and cannot be read into specification of that patent."



Sennett To Make Films in Britain

Mack Sennett, pioneer comedy producer, this week in London announced plans for production there of feature comedies with international casts, for both British and American markets, the first probably starring Sophie Tucker.

According to International News Service Al Rosen, Hollywood agent, will be associated with Mr. Bennett in the enterprise.

"We will bring over an entire technical crew from Hollywood," Mr. Sennett is quoted as saying.

At a press luncheon at the Dorchester hotel in London Wednesday, Carl Laemmle, Universal's president, said his company is willing to buy up to 20 independent pictures in Europe.

This chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, compares the business done in the first-run theatres of Minneapolis during the thirty weeks' period from February 3 to August 25, 1934, with the receipts for the corresponding period in 1933. Indicated on the chart are the bank holiday period in 1933 and the period of the trucking strike, which lasted from May 16 to August 21, 1934. The average weekly gross from that city during the entire year of 1933 is taken as 100 per cent.

Drama Academy Is Mary Pickford Aim

A national academy of dramatic art is the latest of Mary Pickford's many contemplated enterprises. Miss Pickford arrived in New York Tuesday from Hollywood.

As directors of the academy—which may have headquarters in Washington—Miss Pickford proposes, in addition to herself, Eva La Gallienne, Katharine Cornell, May Robson, George Arliss and Walter Hampden.

Miss Pickford also is considering radio and stage offers and is conferring on publication of a series of stories she will write.

MGM Starts Studio Construction Program

Included in the extensive building program now underway at the MGM Hollywood studios are a building to contain 16 three-room suites for stars, a new and centralized administration building for executive offices and a two-story addition to the wardrobe department, for workrooms and offices.

Planned are a new emergency hospital, a dental office, a new central fire station, modernly equipped. Several hundred men will be employed in the program, which also calls for additions to the commissary, expansion of the casting department and erection of additional fireproof film storage vaults. Fred Pelton, studio manager, is in charge of the program.

Brown Resigns From Columbia

Resignation of George Brown as advertising and publicity director of Columbia Pictures was announced Tuesday, effective about October 1.

Mr. Brown, 41 years old and Cincinnati-born, had held the position three years. According to the announcement, his "new duties will be made known as soon as he is permitted to do so by his new connections." No successor has yet been named.

In 1920, after various independent publicity ventures, Mr. Brown joined Universal in New York, serving as advertising manager under Paul Gulick until 1928, when he resigned to return to free lance publicity, for Helen Morgan, the late Texas Guinan, Harry Richman and others. There followed a stay with Warners. In 1931 Harold B. Franklin took him to Hollywood to do advertising and publicity for West Coast Theatres. Then he returned to Columbia.

Wanger Definitely Set To Make Six for Paramount

Six pictures will be produced by Walter Wanger for Paramount during 1934-35.

Mr. Wanger, who was at one time in charge of Paramount production in the east, and more recently was an associate producer for Metro, is en route to Hollywood from New York, where he will immediately start on "The President Vanishes." Following will be Ann Harding in "Peacock Feathers," to be done in Technicolor.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

This story, romantic comedy drama, is of the type in which Ann Harding has scored her biggest successes. Under the shorter title, "Biography," the S. N. Behrman yarn was a popular stage attraction in New York and other metropolitan centers. Similarly the novel on which it is based has been widely read. Consequently those who know about it constitute a potential audience to supplement the straight picture goers. This screen adaptation is by Anita Loos, famous for "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" and scenarist of "Social Register." The director, E. H. Griffith, directed Miss Harding in her outstanding feature, "Holiday."

Robert Montgomery will be seen in the lead role opposite Miss Harding. The third most important figure is Edward Everett Horton, who was in "Holiday" and is favorably known for many other pictures. Edward Arnold, the surprise of "Sadie McKee," completes the quartet of principals. In support are Charles Richman, Una Merkel, William Tannen, Greta Meyer, Willard Robertson and Elizabeth Forrester.

A modern drawing room comedy romance drama, the story has an interesting premise. Montgomery, publisher of smart magazines, persuades Miss Harding, New York's most publicized bachelor girl, to write a series of articles dealing with her experiences with the men who have fallen in love with her. The spirit of amusing adventure, mad fun and life full of romance which the title conjures is boiled down to one exciting theme. Miss Harding would write of her affair with Horton, now married and a U. S. senatorial candidate, the airing of which would explode everything. The efforts to prevent its revelation is the show which of course eventually drives Miss Harding into Montgomery's arms.

Having the elements of smartness in idea, production and personalities it suggests showmanship that will accentuate and popularize its intriguing color.

THE KICK OFF

Radio

The title establishes this as a football picture, but with it there is a human interest story of a boy's regeneration, which, given a comedy twist, makes it more of a peppy comedy romance than a sport spectacle. At the same time, the color of collegiate life and the thrill of the gridiron game is an important consideration. The original story is by Nicholas Barrows and Earl Snell, the screen play by Glenn Tryon, author of "Rafter Romance," who also is directing.

An alumnus of Hamilton, scouting for football talent, discovers a boy on a prison football team who is just the kind of a humdinger the team needs. Obtaining the boy's release, identifying himself as a crook, the alumnus gets the kid into college with the idea that he soon become an All-American, a social status permitting easy access to wealthy homes and loot. That's okay. But the boy falls in love with the coach's secretary, gets the college spirit, and even though he keeps his hand in by doing an occasional bit of stealing, is being regenerated. At that, he goes through with his deal, robs one of his patrons and then, disgusted with himself, runs away. He lands up where he started, behind the bars, but the sheriff is a Hamilton fanatic, gets in touch with the college, everything is explained to the boy and he rushes back to the stadium to be sensational.

Eddie Quillen is the boy, Betty Furness the girl. Grant Mitchell is the alumnus and Robert McWade the man whose home is robbed. Joe Sauers is the coach. Its release coinciding with the football season and there being plenty of known football player names in the extra list, it's a natural for sport tieups. The romance and the human interest created by the regeneration theme can be made to appeal to women.

LIMEHOUSE NIGHTS

Paramount

This story is drama and romance, colored by intrigue, mystery, thrilling danger and human interest of the kind that often has proved its entertainment and showmanship value. The Limehouse atmosphere is pretty well established. People know about it and the weird things that happen there. Consequently the title has a value on par with the story content and the names of the players interpreting it.

The yarn is an original by Arthur Phillips, the screen play by Phillips in cooperation with Cyril Hume and Grover Jones. Alexander Hall, who made "Miss Fane's Baby Is Stolen" and "Little Miss Marker," is directing.

George Raft, whose latest pictures are "Bolero" and "The Trumpet Blows," and Jean Parker, whose work in "Caravan," "Sequoia" and "Have a Heart" is outstanding, are teamed in the leads. Anna May Wong, once highly popular and now a new source of fan interest, is brought back to the screen in a featured role. Other players are Kent Taylor, remembered for "David Harum" and "Double Door"; Montagu Love, currently in "Menace"; Billy Bevan, Louis Vincenot, James Wang, Robert Lorraine and John Rogers.

The story builds strong and exciting situations, in which thrilling suspense consolidates interest. Raft has a role that should fit him perfectly as a half-cast Limehouse power, cafe owner and smuggler. The same is true of Jean Parker, waif of the district, with whom he falls in love. It creates a situation that brings him into conflict with the girl's lover, Kent Taylor, and also with his own woman, Anna May Wong. The inscrutable temper of the Orient prevails as Miss Wong, to save the man for herself and save the girl from him, leads him into a trap set by the officers.

It affords much in idea, production, atmosphere and personalities with which to intrigue public interest.

NIGHT LIFE OF THE GODS

Universal

The title giving a significant hint, the unique entertainment idea of this story is its predominant showmanship quality. It is a comedy terror story. The novel by Thorne Smith is a sensational seller. The screen play is by Barry Trivers. Lowell Sherman is the director.

An eccentric young scientist has discovered a way of turning persons into statues, and stone statues into flesh and blood humans. First petrifying his unliked relatives, the man gets himself mixed up with a woman who claims to have lived for 900 years, and her character is the sum total of all furious womanhood, making her an A-1 hellion. The strange pair, having much in common, start out to see and do things. As a result of a roadhouse brawl, half the revelers and all the cops are turned to stone. Visiting an art museum, the woman persuades her pal to give the gods and ancient heroes a fling at modern life. So Diana, Hebe, Venus, Bacchus, Neptune, Apollo, Mercury and Perseus come to life and immediately take up the pursuits for which they are mythologically famous. The comedy of the situation being evident, its excitement is made more hectic when the city wakes up to find that somebody has stolen the gods, and it takes a peculiar twist when a thick cop refuses to stay stoned and turns up at the most inopportune times for the man and woman.

Finally, when the scientist figures the gods have had enough after a hilarious swimming pool sequence, he leads 'em back to the museum, lets them all say goodby, turns them back into stone and caps the climax by transforming himself and the girl friend into marble.

Alan Mowbray and Florine McKinney are the strange pair. Others are Irene Ware, Geneva Mitchell, Marda Deering, George Hassell and Robert Warwick (gods) and Wesley Barry, William Boyd, Peggy Shannon, Theresa Maxwell Conover, Henry Armetta, Douglas Fowley and Gilbert Emery for personalities.

NIGHT ALARM

Majestic - Larry Darmour

As the title indicates, this is an action yarn. Basically, it's the story of a newspaper man who prefers chasing the fire engines to writing his "Garden Beautiful" column. As it unfolds, it deals in crooked politics, a newspaper fire prevention campaign and arson rings which dramatize the sustaining boy and girl romance.

The original is by Jack Stanley, with the screen play by Earl Snell, who recently did "Let's Be Ritzy" and "Half a Sinner." The director, Spencer Bennett, made "Midnight Warning" and "Badge of Honor."

Bruce Cabot, recently in "Finishing School" and "Murder on the Blackboard," and Judith Allen, first seen in "This Day and Age" and subsequently in "Hell and High Water" and "The Witching Hour," are teamed in the lead roles. More than ordinary name value is found in the supporting cast, with H. B. Warner, Harry Hohlman, Sam Hardy, now in "Little Miss Marker," Harold Minjir, Tom Hanlon, Betty Blythe, currently in "Girl of the Limberlost," and Fuzzy Knight.

Because of its character, the yarn looks to be of unusual value for tieups with fire departments, newspapers and civic associations. Much of it deals with reporter Cabot's campaign to force building owners to install fire prevention and safety devices. With love interest generating at the start, the situation becomes tense when the girl, Miss Allen, finally realizes that her father is the man upon whom the boy friend is focusing his blistering campaign. It takes a thrilling fire in Warner's factory, with Cabot rescuing the girl, to open his eyes to the logic of Cabot's ideas.

COLLEGE RHYTHM

Paramount

As the title indicates, this is a rollicking, music tinged action comedy drama, built around two college rivals, Lanny Ross and Jack Oakie, their competition in romance, on the football field, in student life and in the work-a-day world after graduation. The original story is by George Marion, Jr., who collaborated in writing "Kiss and Make Up" and the screen play on "We're Not Dressing." Adaptation is by Walter DeLeon, who did "You're Telling Me"; Jack McDermott and Francis Martin. Norman Taurog, who made "We're Not Dressing," is directing.

IN THE CUTTING ROOM

The cast introduces Joe Penner and his duck, familiar via the radio and vaudeville stage, to picture fans. Lanny Ross, radio broadcast favorite who made his screen debut in "Melody in Spring," is seen again. Other principals are Jack Oakie, last seen in "Shoot the Works" and "Murder at the Vanities;" Lyda Roberti, who has been away for some time, but remembered for "Three Cornered Moon" and "Torch Singer." In support are George Barbier, Helen Mack, currently in "Lemon Drop Kid," Joseph Sauers, Mary Brian, Julian Madison and Mary Wallace (newcomers), Franklin Pangborn, Robert McWade, appearing soon in another football picture, "The Kick Off," and Harold Minjir.

Music and lyrics are contributed by Harry Revel and Mack Gordon, similarly associated with many Paramount pictures, "We're Not Dressing," "Shoot the Works," "She Loves Me Not" and others. The yarn is peppy and full of the spirit of youth. Its release coinciding with the football season, plus the value of radio and screen names, suggests it as a colorful exploitation feature.

ENTER MADAME

Paramount

This picture story is adapted from a stage play which was one of the most widely played roadshows of the present era. In touring companies and stock it has been played almost every place where legitimate attractions are played. In atmosphere, it's an exciting and hectic comedy romance. The play is by Gilda Varesi and Dolly and Archibald Byrne. This screen adaptation is by Jacques Deval, Gladys Lehman and Charles Bracket. Elliott Nugent, maker of "She Loves Me Not," "Strictly Dynamite" and the well-remembered "Three Cornered Moon" is directing.

To secure proper character interpretation, the leads were assigned to Elissa Landi, currently in "The Great Flirtation" and "Sisters Under the Skin," both paralleling her character in this story, and Cary Grant, now in "Kiss and Make Up."

In the story, Grant marries the tempestuous, temperamental operatic star, Elissa Landi, only to discover that she's the big shot in the family and he is merely "Mr. Opera-singer" and chief dog-leader. Life is one grand series of cyclones that eventually convince Grant that he belongs some place else. Not getting any help from his wife's manager (Overman), Landi leaves on a tour as Grant leaves for America and romance with Sharon Lynn. Informed of this and considering it an insult to her charm, Landi comes over, moves in on Grant and Miss Lynn to again completely captivate her husband and make him glad to lead the dog around.

Comedy, fast-moving and explosive, appears to be the outstanding showmanship quality to back up the picture's entertainment prestige and the cast name strength.

LEMON DROP KID

Paramount

This is a typical Damon Runyon sporting-world human interest story topical of the characters and the manner of life and love as made famous in his short stories and the pictures adapted from those stories from "Lady for a Day" to "Little Miss Marker." Screen play is by Howard J. Green, who recently did "Morning Glory," "Success at any Price" and "Shoot the Works." Marshall Neilan, responsible for many successful pictures in the silent era, who lately made "Social Register" for Columbia, is directing.

Lee Tracy and Helen Mack, currently featured in "You Belong to Me," are again teamed in the leading roles. In support are Baby LeRoy, Claude Gillingwater, seen in "The Show-Off," "You Can't Buy Everything" and "In Love with Life"; William Frawley, appearing in "Bolero" and "The Witching Hour"; Henry B. Walthall, Kitty Kelly, Eddie Peabody and dozens of other lesser names in character and atmospheric roles.

As the odd hero of Runyon's published story, Lee Tracy is assigned a character that should be right down his alley. In the same sense, the emotion touching role that is Helen Mack's should give her every opportunity to develop the promise so impressively demonstrated in "All of Me" and "You Belong to Me." Tracy is a lemon drop-eating, but always busted wise guy race track tout. Swindling the health-seeking Gillingwater out of a winning bet, he hits the road to wind up as a small town grocery clerk in love with Helen Mack. Married and actually poverty stricken but wealthy as far as ambitious words are concerned, he robs his employer to pay the doctor who delivers his baby only to have his wife die. Arrested and imprisoned, he is regenerated by his child, Baby LeRoy. Never forgetting his lemon drop penchant, he is found by Gillingwater, whose swindling had resulted in a health cure.

Lively, excitingly colorful, yet carrying a tender heart sock, it calls for a campaign capitalizing on title value, author credits and the leading players' popularity.

Code Self Regulation Saves Money
Picking Star from Own Backyard
Five Films Start, Three Finished

An important money-saving reaction to the workings of the Production Code Committee came to light this week when a research executive uncovered the cold data that the Code Self Regulation now agreed upon by all majors and independents may save the industry from one to three million dollars a year.

While some in Hollywood do know, a greater percentage of the creative colony are not aware, that censor boards in various cities pass every film before it reaches the screen.

The money paid the censor boards for administration cannot at this time be saved to the industry unless censorship is completely abolished. But it is believed millions for other expenses will be saved by eliminating the necessity of returning productions to the studio for added scenes, cutting out sequences and reprinting positives after censor boards order changes.

The case of Mae West's picture, "Belle of the Nineties," is one in point.

After New York censors refused to pass the West production, it came back to the studio for retakes, and general refurbishing. This cost the Production Code intends to eliminate in future by suggesting changes when a script is just a glint in a writer's eye, long before the scenario is introduced to the camera.

Not alone Paramount but every company has passed through the harrowing experience of re-shooting and re-printing, after a censor board made mandatory deletions or changes, and reckoned with added costs.

Under the self-regulatory process, the Code Committee hopes to make these costs a thing of the past, relieving the companies of the headaches when changes are ordered and obviating the attendant pocketbook aches when the bills are paid.

Savings from one to two million dollars a year for the industry is considered, by financial chiefs, a tidy item in these days of economy.

Divided Authority

Apropos the production analysis which recently appeared in these columns, Hollywood is busy discussing "Down to Their Last Yacht," a Radio picture, where authority and responsibility during filming were divided between director and producer, with opinion now divided about the box-office merit of the film.

Paul Sloane was engaged as director of the picture, with Lou Brock as associate producer.

While shooting was in progress, it was bruited about that Lou Brock was directing the musical numbers and supervising the dances.

Mr. Sloane, it is said, registered objection to this division of authority and disclaimed responsibility for the final film if Mr. Brock, the producer, assumed any part of the direction.

Immediately after the preview Mr. Brock flew to New York and embarked for Europe.

Even with such a classic example of divided responsibility, Hollywood is betting it will happen again, if not at Radio, at some other plant.

Since "Down to Their Last Yacht," Sloane has directed "Straight Is the Way" for MGM, which was well received by studio officials and reviewers.

Not a Gambler

With Fox having acquired distribution rights to "Peck's Bad Boy," the question of whether Sol Lesser is a gambler or a real producer seems to be definitely settled.

For twenty years he has been in the business, as an individual theatre owner, as a partner and officer in the original West Coast circuit, as a producer, distributor and just plain patron of the industry.

Finishing "Peck's Bad Boy," he took it down to Santa Ana, a little long haired town fifty miles from Los Angeles. Without a preview, he put it into the Broadway theatre. Sunday, August 25, its opening day, it broke every record that the house ever knew. During the week, it set up figures that seem impossible. On a basis of population and house seating capacity, 60 per cent of the Santa Ana public paid to see the show.

Mr. Lesser is more a producer than a gambler.

Baer Roast and Toast

Max Baer was toasted and roasted at a distinctive Hollywood party flung by his agent, Leo Morrison, Wednesday evening at a local hotel. It was a curtain-raiser to Baer's return to California and Paramount Pictures.

Talking Like Human Beings

A new auditory technique for the talking screen is making its debut in Hollywood.

Instead of actors talking like actors, the new technique calls for them to talk as human beings talk when no camera is focused on them.

Ann Harding and Brian Aherne use it in "The Fountain" as does Pauline Lord in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

Hecht and MacArthur hit upon the same technique in their first independent picture, "Crime Without Passion."

Five Pictures Start

Anticipating the extended Labor Day week end, Hollywood production wheels slowed down quite a bit during the past week. Only five new pictures were started. But three were finished. Fox and Warner each have two of the new ones. The other is a Paramount. The finished pictures are credited to Columbia, Radio and Metro Goldwyn Mayer respectively.

At the Movietone Studio, Fox started "The White Parade." In this Loretta Young, John Boles, Muriel Kirkland, Gertrude Short, Jane Barnes, Ruth Hoyt and Dorothy Wilson are featured. "Hell in the Heavens" was placed before the cameras at the Western Avenue plant. Warner Baxter and Conchita Montenegro are starred, with Herbert Mundin, J. Carroll Naish and Ralph Morgan heading the supporting cast.

Both the new Warner productions are dramas and both have unusual titles. "I Am a Thief" features Ricardo Cortez, Mary Astor, Irving Pichel and Dudley Digges. "Murder in the Clouds," a thriller, will present Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak and Gordon Westcott at the head of an extensive cast.

Paramount's activity is a musical comedy, "Here Is My Heart." Bing Crosby is starred. The supporting cast includes Kitty Carlisle, Alison Skipworth, Reginald Owen and Roland Young.

Drama is the keynote of the completed pictures. Columbia's feature is "Police Ambulance," featuring John Mack Brown, Sally Blane and George Meeker. Sentiment predominates the drama in Radio's "Dangerous Corner," in which Virginia Bruce, Melvyn Douglass, Conrad Nagel and Erin O'Brien-Moore are the principal personalities.

The same quality colors MGM's "What Every Woman Knows." In this Sir James M. Barrie story, Helen Hayes is starred with Brian Aherne and the supporting cast includes Madge Evans, Lucille Watson, Dudley Digges, Donald Crisp, David Torrence and Henry Stephenson with Gregory LaCava directing.

The Merry Widow

(MGM)

Musical Romance

With the release of "The Merry Widow," a new mode in musical screen entertainment is here. In the picture is almost every element that has proved its ability to entertain.

There's romance, lots of it. Sometimes it's tender. Then it's comic opera in its hilarity. Sometimes, though always carefully and intelligently handled, it's intriguingly intimate. It has drama, to contrast and lend suspense to its motivating romance. Always there's laugh-packed comedy in the modernized dialogue, animated action and situations.

The girl glamour spectacle is colorful. The music, vocal, in solo and chorus, and instrumental, is what everybody knows the Lehar "Merry Widow" music is—a treat for music lovers. Additionally a few tingling modern numbers have been tossed in for good measure. There is novelty of timeliness, locale and story significance. Production, in settings, costumes and backgrounds, enhanced by excellent photography is elaborate. One word—beauty—supplements every quality.

The first locale being Marshovia, a theatrically conceived Balkan country, the time 1885, Danilo is the idol of every woman's heart. Introducing himself to a masked vision of beauty in her castle garden, he learns that instead of being the terrific heart-cracker he thinks, he is, in her estimation, just a washout. Nevertheless, his brazen effrontery has flamed a dormant spark in the merry widow's heart.

Posing as outraged that such a thing could happen, Princess Sonia, owner of 52% of the kingdom, leaves for Paris. The King scours the land for a cavalier to charm her back and threatens dire punishment to the one who drove her away, if he ever is found. The Queen ridicules every name the King suggests. But when he finds Danilo in her boudoir, he knows he has found his man. Danilo is named special agent to bring Sonia back.

In Paris, gayety, charm and color motivating, the audience now knowing the whole situation, Danilo and Sonia are still in the dark. Danilo's meeting with The Ambassador is just plain slapstick. In Maxim's, he meets the widow again. There, having introduced herself as Fifi, she is just another of his horde of mademoiselles, a lady of the night and the cabarets. Again to the tune of "The Merry Widow Waltz" and other Lehar music, Danilo is lifted to the heights of romantic ecstacy only to wake up in a drunken stupor after all his accomplished efforts have failed to register with Fifi.

Disaster is threatening back in Marshovia. The King's coded wire to the Ambassador, translated by Zizipoff, is a comedy gem. An embassy ball in honor of Sonia is arranged for the next night. The absent Danilo, finally brought in and back to normalcy by liberal doses of black coffee, is ordered to go to work and do what he was supposed to do. Here the colorful and glamorous spectacle reaches its entertaining height as does the music. For the first time, Danilo finds out who Sonia really is and she learns of the King's plot. Despite the Ambassador's engagement announcement both renege notwithstanding what it means to either or Marshovia.

Danilo, having failed in his mission, is brought back for courtmartial. Sonia appears as his witness to testify that he did everything possible to win her heart. Nevertheless he is jailed. Then the desperate conspiring King frames her into visiting his mouse-infested cell. There they are just plain man and woman and are married, and Marshovia saved.

As previewed, there are several slow spots in the picture, but these will be eliminated.

Selling it successfully is merely taking advantage of what is there. There is plenty of name value and though the director's name seldom sells many tickets, the Ernst Lubitsch reputation for class and smartness should not be overlooked.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Caravan

(Fox)

Dramatic Romance

"Caravan" is really several pictures in one. In plot it is a light dramatic romance building to a unique triangle situation. In locale, settings and background it bears a close resemblance to an educational travelogue. In music it is a colorful operetta, combining sentimental, peppy modern ragtime and stirring martial airs, vocal and instrumental, solo and choral. Continually there is a vivid atmosphere of symbolic spectacle. It was produced by the man who made "Congress Dances," Erik Charell. Charles Boyer, noted European actor, previously seen in small parts in domestic pictures, is starred.

The locale is rural Hungary. The time is that of the grape harvest. The situation which precipitates its motivating drama romance is occasioned by a native custom pertaining to that season. Lazi's band of gypsies is brought to the vineyards that their playing of gypsy music, wild and sweet, may insure the quality of the wine. Coming home, after long absence, Wilma learns that she must marry within 24 hours in order to inherit the estates of her ancestors. Spurning the unseen choice of her uncle, she enters into a marriage contract with Lazi. As the gypsy crew makes merry in the castle with music, dancing and comedy, von Tokay, deserting his gay metropolitan playmates, leaves for the castle and the unknown girl his father, the Baron, has chosen for his wife. Meeting Wilma, who has now gone gypsy, and not knowing her identity, he pursues her furiously, creating a situation which Lazi cannot comprehend. The trouble it brings only accentuates the difficulty he is having with his erstwhile gypsy sweetheart, Tinka, as symbolic music and spectacular groupings are utilized to emphasize the potency of the situation. As Wilma and von Tokay each comes to find out who the other really is, the amazing contract which the girl entered into with Lazi becomes a feared and awesome thing. But Lazi realizes the situation. Though it means a bit of heartbreak, he consents to give the girl up, which isn't so much a sacrifice inasmuch as the forgiving Tinka is anxiously awaiting him. As the contract is annulled, everything is set for Wilma and von Tokay, and the disappointed and departing band of gypsies are brought back to play their music that the wine may be sweet.

This picture offers many things to sell. Isolation of the qualities, either personalities, theme, spectacle or music, and concentrating on the combinations that mean most to patrons appears to be the most effective selling method.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Peck's Bad Boy

(Principal)

Comedy-Drama

Every once in a while some producer challenges precedent and makes a picture that is entirely out of the beaten path. "Peck's Bad Boy" is that kind of picture. It's a "kid" picture. In the past, "kid" pictures, with only few notable exceptions, have been box office bugaboos. But here is a picture so humanly real, so full of the elements in story and personnel that any doubts as to its value on the part of exhibitor or patron should be completely exploded.

The public may be drawn to see this picture, will like it, probably will tell their friends about it, if, first breaking down the negative complex, there is gotten over to them in advance just a little of its warm human interest; its natural sympathy-stirring drama, comedy, tragedy and unaffected heart-warming tenderness and sincerity. Bill Peck, the boy, is every boy of today, the boy of every man who was a regular boy. The public will know and understand him; his viewpoints on life; his mischievousness, his virtues; his yearning for the old familiar comradeship of his father as a cold and calculating aunt and another little boy coming into his home create a situation he cannot understand, bringing bitterness and tragedy.

This picture imparts a lot of the philosophy that should govern father and son relations. Yet it is not a preachment. As there are no

"thou shalls" or "shall nots" about it, every father, mother and boy should be deeply touched by the story and the way it is played by Jackie Cooper as the boy; Thomas Meighan as his father; Dorothy Peterson, the aunt, and Jackie Searl as the mean and spiteful usurping cousin.

The Count of Monte Cristo

(United Artists - Edward Small)

Drama

"The Count of Monte Cristo" is an old story. This picturization of it is as new and modern as today and just as timely. It's drama. Accentuating that quality and preserving all the other elements that have made the Dumas classic great, the picture tells the whole story in a complete and interest holding manner. It is finely and intelligently played, presented and produced. Concentrating attention immediately on its central character, capitalizing on suspense, it moves fast so that the long running time is hardly noticed.

Having the qualities that appeal to general mixed audiences, it is both a class and mass picture, that should be presented as a special event, with showmanship of the highest caliber.

The story is drama with a heart punch. Produced on a massive scale, it's the story of Edmond Dantes, the Count of Monte Cristo, the inhumanity of his fellow men and his revenge. An innocent victim of political intrigue that established the story's character, Dantes is cast into a dungeon in the Chateau D'If. A forgotten man, time ceases until another prisoner, Abbe Faria, tunneling his way to freedom, comes to Dantes' cell. For years they work together to escape. The Abbe, educating Dantes, tells him of the fabulous treasure on Monte Cristo. As freedom is just ahead, the Abbe dies. Sewing himself in his dead friend's sack, Dantes is cast into the sea. Picked up by roving smugglers, he eventually reaches the island of Monte Cristo, finds the treasure, the world is his, and the way is open to avenge himself upon the three men who caused his tragedy. With wealth, power and prestige his, Danglars, first to feel his wrath, is driven to suicide. Next, Mondego, is made mad. Only the woman, Mercedes, from whom he was cruelly torn on their wedding eve, seems to sense who Monte Cristo is. When her son, Albert, challenges Monte Cristo to a duel, Mercedes begs the man she now knows was Edmund Dantes not to kill her boy. The duel is bloodless. Arrested as Edmund Dantes, an escaped prisoner, Monte Cristo's greatest revenge is in the court trial when he exposes and ruins de Villefort. Then the romance with Mercedes, shattered years ago, is picked up.

In story and production, "The Count of Monte Cristo" has everything that is necessary. In personnel, it makes Robert Donat an immediate star. There are other excellent performances, by O. P. Heggie, Louis Calhern, Sidney Blackmer, Elissa Landi and Luis Alberni particularly. It should be sold so that the public will know that it is a big picture, something that must be seen.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Outcast Lady

(MGM)

Romantic Drama

This is sophisticated romance drama. Building to that dramatic heart interest that establishes a picture as a woman's attraction, it accentuates pathos. It might be well to know that this picture was adapted from the Michael Arlen novel, "The Green Hat," which subsequently became an outstanding stage attraction. In bringing it to the screen under the new code to which its producers subscribe, certain alterations have been made in the premise. These changes, while readily evident to those familiar with the story or play, are none the less entertaining to those who will be seeing it for the first time. Concentrating on drama, to the total exclusion of comedy contrast, its appeal is to the moderns. It is an adult attraction exclusively.

As the story unfolds, the principal locale being England, Iris, deprived of Napier's love because of fanatic family objections, marries Fenwick. Confessing that he is worthless, Fenwick commits suicide on their wedding night. To protect his memory, Iris preserves his secret, befriended only by her brother Gerald. His death forces her to become an outcast. Wandering over the continent she meets Napier and their old affection is momentarily renewed, but when he refuses to break off his engagement with Venice, her cup of bitterness is full. Later, while she is ill, Napier, now married, visits her; learning the true story of her sacrifice and the secret of Boy which she has so faithfully kept, he would divorce his wife and marry Iris. Going to his father, Sir Maurice, Iris pleads her love only to have the old scandal flung at her again. Even the attempts of Napier to defend her result in her being shocked by his lack of faith. Fate having cheated her of every dream of happiness there is only one thing left for her to do—accept the bitterness of destiny.

This picture calls for intelligent showmanship. It affords good cast names. The book on which it is based was widely read. The picture itself has been given unusual advance publicity. These two elements are those which demand astute showmanship. It should be presented as an adult attraction; eliminating, if possible, juvenile and adolescent attendance and segregating it from other attractions of the all family character.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Wagon Wheels

(Paramount)

Outdoor Drama

Generally a western is accepted as being a screen full of quick shooting, wild-riding, heroic cowboys, a girl in distress and a lot of villainous bad men. "Wagon Wheels" is not of that character. Rather it is a semi-historical. It is adapted from Zane Grey's "Fighting Caravan," previously made as a silent.

This picture traces the experiences, dangers and hardships of the band of pioneers who broke the first wagon trail from Missouri to Oregon. Essentially it is an action drama. Contrasting with that quality, however, are romance, comedy, human interest and the introduction into the story of "Wagon Wheels," a popular current radio musical feature. Motivated by the spirit of adventure, courage and daring, the picture is logical and moves fast.

There is drama in this band of pioneers and the hardships that are theirs during the long trek. It is interpreted by Nancy and Sonny Wellington, who seek a new and happier life in the new West; also by the three scouts, Belmet, Burch and O'Meary and the double-crossing Indian guide, Murdock. There are the dangers of the unknown trail, the fights with the Indians, the terror of being treacherously deceived, the eventual man to man conflict between the hero and the renegade villain, and the thrill of safe arrival in a new country.

There is appeal for the youngsters principally, also for the grownups to whom sophistication means little. It should be sold in a manner that capitalizes the Zane Grey story popularity. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

A Lost Lady

(Warner)

Drama

The story this picture tells has been told many times. It is dramatic romance with both an appealing and an intriguing punch. Its basic appeal is for women, inasmuch as it deals with a woman's tragedy, her marriage for honesty and appreciation only; her affairs with other men and the final triumph of real and understanding love. It moves in a serious vein. There is no attempt at comedy contrast; where laugh generating situations are inserted, they have but little relevance to the theme. As such it is essentially adult entertainment, something to which feminine patrons should respond, bringing along the natural masculine contingent, but over the heads and meaningless to those below the adolescent years.

On her wedding eve, Miriam's intended husband, Ned, is slain by an outraged husband. The shock wrecks her physically and mentally. Pursuaded to go to the mountains to rest and forget, she becomes the object of wealthy Forrester's sympathetic affection. Married, there a hint of romance between Miriam and Neil, her husband's junior law partner, which never gets beyond the hinted stage. Although fought against at first, a vibrating affair develops between the girl and the almost interloping Ellinger. She is a lonesome woman and the affair grows in intensity, as Forrester's business forces long absences from the hearthstone. Feeling that she is unwanted, that her marriage for honesty is no longer understood, she tells her husband of her romance with Ellinger. The shock being almost fatal to him, Miriam, learning that Ellinger is doing a little side-line philandering, nurses her husband back to health; the climax being that they both understand and embark upon a pursuit of that happiness so long denied them as individuals and as mates.

There's love interest, romance and drama to market in this picture. To this must be added the lure of its unusual triangle situation. Supplementing these qualities are name values of more than ordinary worth. An advance campaign combining the merit and appeal of both, which ingeniously ties in the significance of the title tone and capitalizes upon the reader popularity of the author of the original story, Willa Cather, should have the power to create the desired interest.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Age of Innocence

(RKO Radio)

Drama

One again Irene Dunne becomes the cinematic victim of circumstances, and suffers therefrom as she has so often in the past. This time the setting is that of the staid and socially prominent sector of New York City of the sometimes "gay nineties." The original, and therein lies a strong selling point worthy of exhibitor attention, is the well known, and considerably widely read novel of the same title by the popular Edith Wharton.

It is, in the film version, a story which unquestionably will have its greatest appeal to the feminine element of the patronage, and as such should, in the selling, be directed at that group. The women, in all probability, will bring the men, but it contains little essentially for the masculine film-goer.

The story, told in flashback fashion, permits of the comparison, or contrast, of a set of circumstances which took place in the closing years of the last century, with a definitely similar situation in the present. This latter situation serves merely as an introduction to the telling of the older tale, one which is fashioned of crinoline and leg-of-mutton sleeves, actually and in respect to the attitude of a people toward the exigencies of life. Its setting is not without an appearance of authenticity and charm, and the older adults among the potential patrons may well be drawn by just that atmosphere.

The selling attack might be based on the thematic element which finds three lives almost ruined by dictates of a hidebound, circumspect convention which thought infinitely more of social position and freedom from the breath of publicity, with its implication of scandal, than the lives of any individuals concerned. The obvious contrast with the modern trend is the note to strike in the selling copy.

A young man seeks his grandfather's support in his quest of happiness with a married woman, and the grandfather tells the story of his affair of the heart, which forms the picture. John Boles, the young man, is engaged to Julie Haydon. Suddenly returned from a long sojourn in Europe comes Miss Dunne, separated from her titled husband, and seeking quiet and contentment. But the breath of scandal has touched her. With her is her grandmother, Helen Westley, who offers a delightful characterization. Miss Dunne, feeling herself entitled to seek happiness, further scandalizes the family by attempting to obtain a divorce.

Boles, a young lawyer, dissuades her from her intention, urging her to understand the reaction to the necessary public airing of sacred family matters. Then Boles further complicates himself and the situation by falling completely in love with Miss Dunne, and, reversing himself, urges her to get her divorce anyway. She refuses, and to protect himself from what he might do to the life of Miss Haydon, urges his fiancee to marry him at once. Her parents object, and Boles and Miss Dunne carry on clandestine meetings, with Lionel Atwill, European, also an element in the entanglement.

Eventually, as the two plan to leave together, Miss Haydon suddenly sets an early date, and they are married. But the affair continues, and as he and Miss Dunne plan to go away together, the latter learns of Miss Haydon's approaching motherhood and sails alone. The conclusion, therefore, is somewhat unexpected.

Young and Beautiful

(Mascot)

Comedy-Drama

In the featuring, in this independently-produced picture, of the 13 Wampas Baby Stars for 1934, the exhibitor has something which he should find no real difficulty in selling, especially to the younger elements of his patronage. The obvious tieup with local beauty contests in the community, and theatre-sponsored local talent shows on the stage, should be productive exploitation material. The picture will stand plenty of ballyhoo, and, as not too serious comedy drama, with the comedy element predominating, the film should be found entertaining.

The fact that much behind-the-scenes motion picture material is contained in the story, and that the setting is exclusively Hollywood, also should be a point for exhibitor use in the selling of the film. The cast is headed by the once-popular William Haines, who makes for the most part an engaging and often amusing lead. In support, in addition to the Baby Stars, are Joseph Cawthorn, John Miljan and Ted Fio-Rito and his orchestra.

The story having much to do with the build-up publicity of Judith Allen by Haines, the go-getter publicity man of Superba Pictures, Hollywood, there is further opportunity for selling tieups. The comparative lack, in the cast, of outstanding box office names for the marquee, makes concentration on the yarn the best point of attack. Comedy is the element to be stressed.

Haines is the press agent who, in love with Miss Allen, of the Baby Stars, plans to put her over in a big way, including the signing of a contract by Cawthorn, amusingly accented president of Superba Pictures.

He talks Cawthorn into signing the girl to a contract, and the dizzy merry-go-round of parties, publicity stunts and more stunts goes on, while the girl pines for real happiness, a moment of quiet and marriage to Haines. Eventually, as she understands he is more interested in publicity and building her into a star, in almost impersonal fashion, they quarrel. Miss Allen, avidly pursued by John Miljan, gentleman of wealth, goes out with him, and Haines sees them together. When they fight over her, she declares herself through with Haines, and prepared to go with Miljan, planning to marry him. Haines, through another ruse, halts her as they are about to board an airplane, and the two finally fly off to be married.

The whole thing emerges as rather good fun, with its burlesque of publicity man and stunts. There is nothing in the picture for the children, and the chief appeal will be to the younger adults.—Aaronson, New York.

The Coast of Catalonia

(Fox)

Good

One of the Fox Magic Carpet of Movietone travel series, this subject offers unusual camera work and interesting subject matter in a picturization of a portion of the attractive coastline of Spain. The people, their manner of life and the scenic beauty of their surroundings, are excellently photographed. With an appropriate musical score, the short has a minimum of explanatory dialogue.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Mice in Council

Entertaining

A lively and entertaining number of the Terry-Toon cartoon series, in which the old grandfather mouse tells a crowd of his young hearers how he came to win the medal for belling the cat. His tale is re-enacted, the council of the mice to decide on a method of ridding the world of the cat being especially amusing. The short would fill a spot on almost any bill.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Breen on Radio, Says Films Are Much Improved

Joseph I. Breen, head of the Production Code Administration of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in Hollywood, last week told radio listeners throughout the United States that, contrary to the expressed "fears" of many persons within and without the industry that stricter morality impositions would make forthcoming pictures "too wishy-washy," new pictures are more abundantly supplied with action and are of a generally higher quality than last year.

Mr. Breen also said that 98 per cent of all pictures now being made in this country are being submitted for the MPPDA's seal of approval.

The Production Code Administration issued code certificates on 16 features, eight shorts and two serials during the week from August 20 to 28.

175 New Jersey Houses Sign An Anti-Dual Pledge

One hundred and seventy-five affiliated theatres in New Jersey have signed an agreement pledging their cooperation in eliminating double featuring in that state. Before the ban can become completely statewide, however, it will be necessary for about 35 independent theatres in the territory to become parties to the agreement.

Under the terms of the agreement the ban on duals became effective on Monday of this week for those who had signed. In close proximity to the New Jersey ban, Philadelphia distributors this week reported considerable progress in their gradual elimination of duals in that sector, and in Philadelphia itself only about 50 smaller neighborhood houses are double billing.

In St. Louis exhibitors have relinquished hope of eliminating duals during the coming season. Warner, with the Shubert-Rialto and Orpheum, have refused to agree to a ban on the practice, although Fanchon & Marco, with five first run houses, was willing to cease doubling.

Los Angeles county women's organizations, aggregating 390,000 members, this week were threatening to boycott all theatres playing double features and plan to take the matter before the state legislature to bring about a legal ban on the practice.

Shmitkin on Code Board

Al Shmitkin, recently transferred from Indianapolis to Cincinnati as Warner manager, has been appointed affiliated distributor member of the Cincinnati grievance board, replacing Maurice White, who resigned as Warner manager to enter exhibition.

ENGLISH COURT RULES ON THEATRE BUILDING

Decision Called Victory for Control Advocates; Group Takes Clean Pictures Pledge

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

On the eve of the issue of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association circular to licensing authorities, advising a legal opinion in favor of the right of these bodies to refuse cinema licenses for other than "safety" reasons, a distinct success has been scored, in the courts, by the advocates of public control of the new theatre erection.

The magistrates of Wells, Somerset, have refused a license for a modern cinema which it had been planned to erect in the town on the grounds that the needs of the local public are adequately met by an existing theatre, admittedly not of the most modern type.

Decision Provides Precedent

The Wells case was by way of being a test one, and the decision provides a precedent which, if it is not upset, may make it difficult to carry through new theatre erection plans in various parts of the country. Its importance lies in the fact that both the applicant and the objector rested their cases on general principles. In favor of the new scheme it was urged that the Cinematograph Act was concerned solely with the public interest and that it conferred no powers to restrict the number of theatres, provided they complied with safety requirements and the proposed licensee was a "suitable" person. The opposition based its case entirely on facts and figures going to show that a town with the population of Wells (under 5,000) could not support more than one cinema. It won, after a number of C. E. A. officials had given supporting evidence to this effect, and in doing so has, it seems, enabled a definite legal decision to be registered to the effect that the powers of licensing authorities are limited only by their interpretation of public interest.

Ruling May Be Challenged

Whether this decision (which registered a majority vote of the magistrates after the clerk had been consulted on legal points) will be repeated in other areas, and if it will ultimately be supported in the higher courts, are matters on which a good deal of uncertainty must be felt at the moment. It is probable that the ruling, if not in this case then in others, will be challenged and that an appeal court judgment will finally establish just what the powers of licensing justices really are. In the meantime, it is open to any exhibitor threatened by the competition of a new theatre to quote the Wells decision as proof of the magistrates' competence to take business conditions into consideration in adjudicating on license applications.

Trade opinion is divided on most of the points raised by this very important case. While exhibitors as a class rejoice at a victory which promises to make their battle against "overbuilding" easier, it is pointed out that the practically unlimited right of veto now supposed to be within the powers of licensing authorities may not always be exercised in favor of one exhibitor as against another; there may be cases in which clerical, theatrical or other interests may invoke them to prevent perfectly legitimate trade expansion. There is also the possibility that if every new theatre plan is open to challenge on the ground of "redundancy," progress in the theatre field may be seriously hampered and obsolete or obsolescent theatres allowed to continue careers which would be abruptly terminated if the law of the survival of the fittest were allowed to operate.

Confers Censor Right

A good deal depends on the validity of the C. E. A.'s legal opinion on the wide powers of licensing authorities. No doubt an equally authoritative legal opinion in the opposite sense would be forthcoming if required.

The Cinematograph Act is somewhat loosely worded, but it is a point of importance that it has already been interpreted as conferring a right of censorship on local authorities, though such powers were certainly not contemplated in the original act. The C. E. A. may therefore be on firm ground in its circular to these authorities, and every future license application may become the signal for a battle royal. One wonders what the attitude of magistrates will be in the cases, common nowadays, in which a cinema is an integral part of real estate developments promising to employ capital and labor on a large scale and, incidentally, to increase rateable values to the considerable benefit of the community.

Take Clean Films Pledge

Although the "clean films" campaign is not nearly so formidable a movement in this country as in the United States, certain interests involved are at least militant. That has always applied to Catholic critics of screen fare and it is a Catholic organization, the Westminster Federation, which has made the most definite anti-film move so far recorded. This takes the form of a pledge, of which the pertinent parts are: "I shall do all in my power to arouse public opinion against all films which tend to corrupt public morals. . . . I hereby promise to stay away from all films except those which, so far as I know, do not offend against decency and morality."

This pledge can be sent to branches of the Federation, or handed to a parish priest and so far as it goes can be taken as indicating a definitely critical policy towards films on the part of the Catholic Church in England. Recent declarations in Rome will tend to stiffen that attitude, from which American films, if any, are likely to suffer most, since a "Hollywood" label is automatically attached to anything questionable in films.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

We would like to ask you exhibitors how you would feel if you had been laid up with a blood pressure of 220 and had counted all the figures on the wallpaper five hundred times, and then, after you had recovered a little, and the doctor wouldn't let you kick the dog nor jaw your family and then you would come down with intestinal flu and get so weak you couldn't hardly walk, and just as you were recovering from that to have the hay fever strike you until you had sneezed the curtains off the windows and had upset the reading lamp, and the neighbors had threatened to shoot you, we repeat, how would you like it?

Well, that's our condition right now, and on top of it all our American Legion Junior baseball team, which has won the state championship for three consecutive years, has gone out to Sterling, Colorado, to play for the championship of Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico and Nebraska, and from there they go to Topeka, Kansas, to play for the championship of the western half of the United States, and our grandmother at Sterling has wired us that she has had another relapse of the same old complaint and is quite bad and wants us to come out and see her, and now our hay fever steps in and keeps our laundry woman washing handkerchiefs and talking to herself while the balance of the family stuffs cotton in their ears and wonders where we learned such language. Doggone the doggone luck anyhow.

A Real Baseball Team

Well, you baseball fans may want to know how the game came out. New Mexico played Wyoming and cleaned them 7 to 1. Our colts played Denver and romped on them 7 to 3. The next day we played it off with New Mexico and the score was Neligh 24, New Mexico 4. And now they have to go to Topeka, Kansas, and play for the championship of the western half of the United States and from there they will go (maybe) to Chicago and win the championship of the whole works.

Some scientists are now claiming that about every 184 years the earth is due for a dry period, such as we are having now, and that the population of the earth is changed, and that the dry period has a duration of two years, and they are predicting dire things to come next year.

Everything Will Be All Right

We don't know who writes these alarming reports, whether it is the "brain trust" or a collection of scientists who want to alarm the people and at the same time get pay for filling so much newspaper space. We have had these "alarmists" even since we can remember, and we know that few of their predictions have come true, so don't get excited, folks, keep quiet and everything will come out all right.

It is a law of Nature that water evaporates, and when it evaporates it is carried in mist until it comes in contact with a cooler current, when it is condensed into drops large enough to fall to the earth and then we have rain. That law is immutable and no scientist can change it. It has always been so and it will always remain so. We have more moisture in the summer than we do in the winter but that is because there is more evaporation in the summer than there is in the winter. Water evaporates more under heat than under cold. We had an unusual dry spell this summer but that was because of the unusual shifting of air currents.

Overbuying Causes Trouble

There are those who won't sleep in a room numbered 13. Others won't walk under a ladder. A black cat is a bad omen to some. Some wouldn't step over a broom. Others won't start on a journey on Friday. Some won't drink milk on Thursday, etc., etc., so why shouldn't we have scientists who write a lot of bologna because they think people won't stop to think. Don't let these prognosticators worry you. Everything is going to come out all right. We'll get rain. We'll get crops and business is going to come back to normal. They can't keep the American people down, so look over your contracts for pictures and if you don't have enough bought go and buy some, but if you already have enough under contract don't buy any more until you need them. Overbuying has caused more trouble than anything else in the business.

"Jaysee" Supposes

Let's just suppose the case. Suppose you were supposed to write a full page for the best magazine on earth, and suppose you couldn't think of anything sensible to write, and suppose you had to sneeze every time you hit a key on the typewriter, and suppose that the water ran out of your eyes and nose until you had to put on rubber boots to keep you feet dry, and suppose you knew that Ernie was the best guy in New York City and would help you out, and suppose you felt so darned ornery that you wanted to hit your grandmother with an ax, what would you do, would you stop right here or would you continue to vent your spleen upon a suffering public? You would, eh? Well, we wouldn't. Therefore we are going to stop right here, with a full knowledge of the calamity this brevity is liable to cause, and with the hope that we will be feeling better next time.

COLONEL J. C. JENKINS
The HERALD's Vagabond Colyumnist

JAYSEE'S LESSON IN FORESTATION

To the Editor of the Herald:

Your "Vagabond Columnist," Colonel J. C. Jenkins, makes some statements in the August 18, 1934 issue of the Herald that convey such an erroneous impression that I have been asked to prepare a short article on this subject of "Shelter Belt Planting." I will take up the Colonel's statements in order:

(1) "Somebdy has had a pipe dream."

If anyone will take a rainfall map of the United States, he will note that around the coastal plane the rainfall is 60 inches or more and that the rainfall gradually decreases going north and west with a few exceptions, due to elevation and forested regions. Raphael Zon, international authority on the influence of forest and rainfall, points out that if the coastal forests were cut, states as far away as Iowa would probably be a desert. This statement is based on the fact that forests transpire enormous quantities of water which is given off into the air, form clouds, which in turn, drift over an area, are cooled and are reprecipitated. If this area is forested, the same process is repeated and thus you see the contour-like rainfall lines receding from the gulf coastal region. The same is true, to a lesser degree, on the west coast, because of interference of high mountain ranges.

Most of us believe that the ocean is the great source of our rain, but scientists have determined that the land area itself is capable of producing 78 per cent of our precipitation.

(2) "Trees do not give off moisture and moisture is what produces rain and rain produces crops, so why not find something that will produce moisture."

European foresters, by careful tests, have determined that a beech forest transpires from 250 to 750 tons per acre per year. A forest acre will give back to the air 47 per cent of a 30 inch rainfall, while a bare soil will evaporate only 30 per cent. "A 30-foot forest should increase the local rainfall one to two per cent," says an article in the Meteorological Magazine. As this shelter belt roughly follows the line of 18 inches of rainfall, two or three more inches of water might mean the difference between agricultural success and failure.

It has also been proven scientifically that a forest gives back more of the rainfall than an area of equal size of water. This is to answer the statement of the Colonel in objecting to the drainage of lakes in Western Nebraska. Technical foresters, in the main, will agree with him on the basis of this drainage being one of the causes of our floods, but will disagree on the basis of "trees don't produce rain."

To disprove this statement, look at China and Palestine that cut their trees, and to France who planted a shelter belt along her seacoast in the Landes and is now reaping the benefits.

Any one who has lived in a treeless country knows the wonderful effect of even a small shelter of trees. The air is moister, the wind is decreased, the soil is bound by the tree roots, the landscape is more cheerful, and it has been proven that you can fatten cattle quicker with the same food supply with a shelter than without one.

This shelter belt planting program of the President is not a theory. We undoubtedly will have planting failures, as the area is on the edge of growing conditions. This will be particularly true if we have a dry year or two when the seedlings are small.

This shelter belt will not be 100 miles of solid forest, but will be in 100 strips of seven rods each, spaced one mile apart. Native species will be used as far as possible. We can expect better survival than we experienced under our "Timber Land Act" because of the planting work already undertaken at Halsey, Nebraska and Towner, North Dakota. The land for the most part, within the belt, will remain in private control. Only where voluntary agreements or leasing is not workable, will the land be purchased.

Dr. W. A. Albrecht, head of the soils department of the Missouri College of Agriculture, recently told members of the United Press that "the idea of a belt of trees bisecting the central part of the country is not a hair-brained plan concocted for political reasons, nor is it a waste of taxpayers' money. It represents an honest and intelligent effort to do something about the weather. And, after this summer, I think everyone is agreed that some thing should be done.—T. J. Starker, Professor of Forestry, Oregon State College, Corvallis, Oregon.

Chesterfield

QUITTER, THE: Emma Dunn, Charley Grapewin, Barbara Weeks, William Bakewell—An interesting story and a clean picture. Emma Dunn is splendid in a mother part. Played with vaudeville. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Aug. 15-16.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

Columbia

FIGHTING RANGER, THE: Buck Jones—Average western that did good business and pleased the cash customers. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Aug. 15.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING RANGER, THE: Buck Jones—My western fans liked it very much. Too much noise of creaking wagon wheels and other things to please me personally.—L. G. Tewsbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

HELL CAT, THE: Robert Armstrong—Nothing big but a pleasing little program picture to average business. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Aug. 22.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—A light but pleasing story made into perfect entertainment by a good cast and excellent direction. It did unusual business on a midweek date. Played Aug. 14-15.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—Have only praise for this picture, even if it did not get much business. We played it too late. They could have cut out several reels; it would have been better. However, it is one swell show, and a pleasure to run. Strictly clean. Running time, 105 minutes. Played Aug. 12-13-14.—Mr. A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney—Played on a double program. Just a "horse oprey" and our horse fans were disappointed in it. Personally, I thought it great. Our patrons never hesitate to tell us what they don't like. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Aug. 10-11.—Mr. A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

LET'S FALL IN LOVE: Edmund Lowe, Ann Sothern—Good for bargain nights.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

THE MAN TRAILER: Buck Jones, Cecilia Parker—Average western with plenty of action which seemed to please.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE: Richard Cromwell, Jean Arthur—Fair little show that pleased the customers more than it did the management. So that's that. Played Aug. 12-13.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

NINTH GUEST, THE: Donald Cook, Genevieve Tobin—Played on double program to a good crowd. This was above the average mystery picture, and one of the best programmers we have received from Columbia. Pleased the Friday and Saturday crowds. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Aug. 10-11.—Mr. A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

NO GREATER GLORY: Frankie Darro—This is a well made and interesting picture but no box-office. Against county fair competition it grossed ten dollars less than film rental. Played Aug. 21-22.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

POLICE CAR 17: Tim McCoy—Tim is a pleasing actor and one thing stands out like a sore thumb. None of his pictures will ever be censored, unless it is done by a class of patron who would really like to see him kiss the leading lady occasionally. But I do not recall one picture in which he has done so. Come on, Tim, smack her just once, anyhow. You know the old adage, "A kiss for a blow." Give the villain the blow and girl the kiss. It'll be all right with us. Played Aug. 10.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. General patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly, Robert Young, Doris Kenyon—This is a program picture of a light type. Good family night picture, but a poor box office one. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Aug. 22-23.—A. Gasaway, Strand Theatre, Tuscola, Illinois. General patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly, Robert Young, Doris Kenyon—Another good one from Columbia. Although the gross was nothing to brag about, received many favorable comments and not one word against it. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Aug. 20-21.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

First National

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—Very good comedy. Not so good as box office. Brown's pictures too much the same. Running time, 63 minutes. Played July 19-20.—A. Gasaway, Strand Theatre, Tuscola, Illinois. Small town patronage.

FOG OVER FRISCO: Bette Davis—OK. Plenty excitement. Saturday crowd liked it.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

MERRY FRINKS, THE: Aline MacMahon—Another good comedy, though very much of the slapstick variety.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI: Richard Barthelmess—More entertainment in this hour feature than in many of the so called two hour specials. Will please everyone; leaves a good taste after seeing it. Running time, 59 minutes. Played Aug. 19-20-21.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI: Richard Barthelmess, Ann Dvorak—This is a swell picture. I started "Wolf Dog" serial and served my patrons ice cold lemonade free with this feature and did an excellent business. Played Aug. 22-23.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. Town and rural patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers—This is a great picture. Did the best business I have done this summer. Advertised it as a follow up for "42d Street" and "Gold Diggers" and it brought them in. It has music, story and cast, and everyone enjoyed it. Pat O'Brien and Ginger Rogers click.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown, Alice White.—This is average entertainment from Joe E. Brown. Not as good as his last one, but will please the average fan. It is good clean comedy that will keep the patrons laughing from beginning to end and should please every one. The trailer sold this picture for us days in advance and with the result of good business for the day, but did not please as well as some of his other pictures. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Aug. 18.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Fox

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Claire Trevor—Hats off to Shirley Temple, my biggest star, next to Will Rogers. Patrons went wild over this picture. Broke Sunday-Monday house records. The second day was bigger than the first and it was raining bullfrogs. Half my patrons stayed for both shows and came out asking when I would have her again. Dunn and Trevor also good. Story good, comedy good, everything good. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 15-16.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: Pat Patterson, Spencer Tracy, John Boles—Played rather old. Weak plot. Not much to draw from. This picture does not do Tracy justice. Running time, 84 minutes. Played Aug. 15-16.—A. Gasaway, Strand Theatre, Tuscola, Illinois. Small town patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Nice to see this pair together again in a nice comedy romance. Clean in every respect, with a little comedy by James Dunn. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Aug. 5-6-7.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Pleased everybody okay. Personally, have seen better.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

COMING OUT PARTY: Frances Dee, Gene Raymond—The poorest picture we have run for a long time. It did not even stand up on Pal Night. Story, acting and plot weak. The love scene between Raymond and Dee was drawn out so long that the audience laughed and made some wise cracks about it, instead of using their handkerchiefs. Poor direction. Business fair. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Aug. 22-23.—Mr. A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—Fox has a picture here that in many ways matches "State Fair." One of the finest tributes paid to this picture, the one thing that registered 100 per cent approval louder than any spoken word was this: four well educated people came in together and stayed there during the four hours it took to run the program twice. These four were between 70 and 80 years of age. If anyone knows of a better way to express approval, let him speak, or forever hold his peace. Will was well supported by Evelyn Venable and Kent Taylor. It begins to look like the Fox Corporation is taking or has taken its rightful place in the sun again. Go to it, Fox, just produce "Harums," let the others produce "Harems." Played Aug. 17.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. General patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: George O'Brien, Mary Brian—George O'Brien looks about as well as I do in a dress suit. Where they got the title was too deep for me, but it did not draw. However, it is a good little programmer. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Aug 17-18.—Mr. A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, Alice Faye, Jimmy Durante—Picture will liked. Some had been cut to clean it up and did very well. Business good. Drew well against free street fair. Played Aug. 11-12.—K. H. Ball, Royal Theatre, Brownstown, Ind. Small town and family patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, Alice Faye—If they had left out the irrelevant and uncalled for dirty wise-cracks and also Jimmy Durante, I would have rated this as one of the best musicals of the season. Music good and the dance numbers are fine, especially the song and dance sequence. Business hit a new low on this, as it had been shown in three surrounding towns some time previous. It pleased most of my patrons. How did Durante break into the movies? Running time, 78 minutes. Played Aug. 15-16.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

GRAND CANARY: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans—Not the type picture Baxter's fans want to see him in and the semi-tragic ending disappointed all the ladies. Sure wish Fox would give this star a couple of real stories; then he wolud be right up at the top where he belongs, but as it is, his stories are usually fair to middling, so to speak. Poor business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Aug. 19-20.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—Regardless of the fact that I have read a few reports that say this isn't his best, I still feel that it is mighty close to it. When Bill plays Tarzan, it is simply a riot. My patrons who usually just "giggle" were whooping and hollering. Will Rogers most popular star in my town and this picture broke records and my people are asking when I have him on again. Running time, 81 minutes. Played Aug. 9-10.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—One of the most enjoyable shows made. Just let patrons know it is set and they will be there. Running time, 81 minutes.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—Having read so many reports on this picture that were inclined to be of an adverse nature, I was very much surprised to find it quite an entertaining picture. Five years ago, if Clara Bow had put on that same picture the fans as a rule would have raved over it. Some raved as it was, but not the right way. My people seemed to enjoy it hugely. I didn't lose my shirt or my temper and I stood at the exit as the patrons emerged, which is a fair indication of how I regarded it. But you know how it is, the fans have erected new idols to worship. Played Aug. 7.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. General patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—Did not see this one personally, but business was good. Everyone liked it. I had no walkouts, so it must have been good. Alice Faye has a following in my town and I would like to see her have better and bigger parts. I predict that with a decent break, she could go places. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 22-23.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

SLEEPERS EAST: Wynne Gibson, Preston Foster—One of those good little mystery pictures from Fox that give satisfaction to those who see it, but will not draw them in. The picture was old, but the print good. Played on a double feature with "Ever Since Eve." Business fair. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Aug. 17-18.—Mr. A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory, Irene Bentley—Not as good as I thought it would be, although pleased fairly well. Especially good for kids. Running time, 69 minutes.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. Dak. Small town patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans, Shirley Temple—Good picture. Did good business. Shirley Temple is swell. Played August 18-19.—K. H. Ball, Royal Theatre, Brownstown, Ind. Small town and family patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Warner Baxter, Shirley Temple, Madge Evans, James Dunn—Just a bunch of jumbled-up film that did not mean a thing here and they sold it for a special. My people and myself will be glad when the producers get over the musical craze. Running time, 84 minutes. Played July 2-3-4.—Beatty & Johnson, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and country patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: Warner Baxter—Comments have been so diverse on this picture by exhibitors that I was pleased to see a very good show. Plenty of good singing, and good entertainment. Of course, Shirley Temple, the baby star, was a big attraction. Played Aug. 11.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS: Warner Baxter—Nothing to brag about. Just a feature with a slow, draggy story. I guess the women like Baxter here, as we always do good with women trade on his features. Running time, 81 minutes. Played Aug. 10-11.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

WILD GOLD: John Boles, Claire Trevor—Made the mistake of using this one on Saturday in place of my usual western and it disappointed. Not enough action, the comedy was weak, not much story and Boles completely miscast, and for that matter, so was Miss Trevor. Harry Green might have been good, but his role did not offer too much possibility. Picture as a whole mediocre. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Aug. 4.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

MGM

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow—A right good little show that will please the customers. Maybe some of the great critics won't like it, but for the folks that spend their nickels for entertainment and not art, they will get their money's worth. Patsy Kelly adds to the picture. Played Aug. 16-17.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HER SWEETHEART, CHRISTOPHER BEAN: Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore—Fine. Miss Dressler always pleased my customers. I know we'll all miss her. It's a star like her that puts a bright side to Hollywood.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: Jimmy Durante, Mickey Mouse—Horrible. Just a few thousand feet of wasted film. I stood in the lobby all night and apologized to the customers as they came out. A picture like that is enough to start me to drinking or give me the urge to run off and get married or do something just as bad. Played Aug. 17-18.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Town and rural patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, William Powell, Myrna Loy—Good picture well liked by most. Business good from Dillinger publicity. Gable, Powell and Loy make a swell cast. Played Aug. 4-5.—K. H. Ball, Royal Theatre, Brownstown, Ind. Small town and family patronage.

OPERATOR THIRTEEN: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper—This is one of the best pictures of its type ever made. Metro made a great show of this and one that should please every theatre-goer. It is a historical dramatic romance of the operations of the secret service in the Civil War. The Mills Brothers sing two selections that should please any audience. This is good family entertainment. Played two days to good business. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Aug. 20-21.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone, Edward Arnold—The best picture that Crawford has done since "Dancing Daughters." She proves that she is an emotional actress and much credit must be given to Edward Arnold. He gave a bang-up performance that was difficult for he portrayed the part of a rounder and you will admit that to keep a part like that in bounds and have the audience with him is some job. It easily could have been offensive, but his work was great. He handled the drunken scenes with restraint. Average business. Things pretty tight in the small towns due to the drought. Legion of Decency rated it as C, the lowest classification on the full page on the back of the "Tribune" (Chicago) Sunday of their classifications, and if you ask my audience whether they were right, their reaction showed them wrong, for the picture was highly commended and it is the type that the theatregoers will support. The more that I see of their classifications and look over the pictures that I have played without a single criticism the more I think they are wrong in their crusade. They are not in touch with the average man and woman that support the theatres.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford—Did not hear one dissenting voice and everybody hated to see it end. Will add my praise to that of others in regard to acting of Edwin Arnold in this picture. He was wonderful.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Excellent mystery story. Pleased all who saw it including the Mrs. and that's something. Running time, 91 minutes. Played Aug. 18.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Everyone liked this one. More told me this was a good picture than any for a long time. Played Aug. 14-15.—K. H. Ball, Royal Theatre, Brownstown, Ind. Small town and family patronage.

VIVA VILLA! Wallace Beery, Fay Wray—A marvelous picture from every angle. Truly an epic. I read the story in advance of my showing and felt that ladies would not like it, but they did and turned out along with the men folks to give me a nice business. No question about this picture being big and having class. It and "House of Rothschild" about the two biggest and finest pictures of the current season. Running time, 115 minutes. Played July 5-6.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

Monogram

MANHATTAN LOVE SONG: Dixie Lee, Robert Armstrong—They should make a list of the year's poorest pictures and this should head the list. Nothing to it. Rotten picture and business the same. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 26-27-28.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and country patronage.

MANHATTAN LOVE SONG: Robert Armstrong, Dixie Lee—Light comedy drama. Dixie Lee sings a couple of times. Will get by if audience not too critical. Book good shorts with it. Armstrong miscast. Very amateurish throughout. Nydia Westman stole the show. Couple of wisecracks that did not help. Should have been left out. Played Aug. 23-24.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN LOVE SONG: Dixie Lee, Robert Armstrong—Very good entertainment and well liked by those who saw it. Business below average, but not the fault of the picture. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 23-24.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

MOONSTONE, THE: David Manners, Phyllis Barry—This is a very good picture of the mystery type and will please those who like mystery shows. It is a story of the famous Moonstone diamond originally stolen from a Hindu temple and based on the story by Wilkie Collins. It is full of action and will keep the patrons in suspense from start to finish. Played one day with a beauty show and to a good business. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Aug. 22.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

DOUBLE DOOR: Evelyn Venable, Kent Taylor—This is a little heavy but will appeal a lot to the Christian Scientist and enough to warrant preview and tieup.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

ELMER AND ELSIE: George Bancroft, Frances Fuller—This is very poor entertainment and after you see it you will agree with my patrons. This is one of the reasons why the code gives the exhibitors a cancellation privilege. Just a waste of time, money and film. It is a comedy drama and is weak in story material. The excellent cast fails to add much to this poor story. Played one day to poor business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Aug. 23.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Richard Arlen, Chester Morris, Genevieve Tobin—A good program picture of a different type and they liked it. Just fine for a small town. Old but good. Running time, 57 minutes. Played July 9-10-11.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and country patronage.

GREAT FLIRTATION, THE: Elissa Landi, Adolphe Menjou, David Manners—Very punk; stage and screen actors may enjoy this type of show, but the rest of the world does not. The French brogue was enough to kill the show. But whoever chose this story for screen fare should be put on the retired list. People want such stories as "Golden Harvest," "David Harum," "State Fair," "Wild Geese," football and air stories, "Elmer the Great" and other good, clean, athletic stories with several good westerns interspersed to combat the objection to dirty pictures put forth by churches and others. Too many musicals of back stage origin are also being made. Running time, 71 minutes.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

KISS AND MAKE UP: Cary Grant, Genevieve Tobin—One of the weakest pictures that Mr. Grant has yet made. Comedy fairly good, but the story, as a whole, punk and no picture is ever much better than its theme. Very poor drawing card and did not give satisfaction. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 29-30.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

LADIES SHOULD LISTEN: Cary Grant, Frances Drake—Pleased about 50 per cent. Richness of settings and costuming made it passable.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple, Adolphe Menjou, Dorothy Dell—Played this picture a bit old, but it is just as good as ever. If your patrons don't like this one, then I'd suggest that you give up trying to please them. Both this picture and "Baby Take a Bow" from Fox will be on my "Ten Best of the Year," both as to entertainment and box-office Shirley Temple outdraws everybody except Will Rogers. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Aug. 12-13.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple—One of the sweetest pictures of all time and when Father Dineen of the Chicago League of Decency classifies this as "No" he proves that an unbalanced religious group are unable to fairly judge anything that competes with church business. 99 per cent of the people of the world will receive more moral uplift and helpful, good influence from this picture than they will receive from any sermon ever preached at them from any pulpit. If troubled by a local league activity, make it ridiculous by advertising this picture as one condemned and pack your house.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Charlie Ruggles—A very funny comedy. Lanny Ross' singing is entirely satisfactory and with more experience, he will make a good actor. He has the looks and personality. Played Aug. 7-8.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Lanny Ross—One or two of my patrons said they didn't care for it but the other half dozen (not quite as bad as that) praised it very highly. I would have felt better about it had the theatre-going public also patronized it more highly. This was far from a sad picture, but after all when one counts the receipts and finds the gross about 50 per cent of what the picture deserved, isn't that a sad ending, I ask you? Played Aug. 5.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. General patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland, Lanny Ross.—Advertised this heavily, but it did not satisfy our patrons. One good musical number, the milking song. Just a program picture. Something missing. Ross a good singer, but not much of an actor. We think he will improve. Business poor. Pleased about 50-50. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Aug. 5-6-7.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland, Lanny Ross—A very good program picture. Nothing outstanding, but will please most everybody. Running time, 76 minutes.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. Dak. Small town patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Kitty Carlisle, Victor McLaglen, Jack Oakie—Better than most of the big special musicals because it had an interesting story running through. Business fair. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Aug. 2-3-4.—

Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and country patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Kitty Carlisle—This is a very good picture that should please the average picture fan. It is a mystery drama set in a background of music. It is a backstage story located in the theatre in which the famous Earl Carroll "Vanities" are presented. It is full of romance, comedy and enough action to keep interest from start to finish. Played on late show to a very good business. Running time, 89 minutes. Played midnight Aug. 25.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—Personally thought this picture a little weak. If your patrons like W. C. Fields, then this will be Okay, as he is the whole show. My only trouble is that Fields is not liked much, so this one kind of "limped through." Running time, 71 minutes. Played July 24-25.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie, Ben Bernie, Dorothy Dell, Arline Judge—This was an excellent attraction. Plenty of good music by Bernie and his band. Comedy from start to finish with a good love theme. Did extra business on it and same proved 90 per cent satisfactory, so I was more than satisfied. Running time, 81 minutes. Played July 10-11.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie, Ben Bernie and his Orchestra, Dorothy Dell and Arline Judge—Adolph Zukor presents. He did not present much in this one. In the first place Jack Oakie is no draw at the box office and Bernie may be a great band leader and has a good orchestra, but his smug line of chatter before the mike was very unfunny. He had the appearance of a cat licking the cream off his whiskers. Never have we seen anyone on the screen that looked so self-satisfied. The picture drags and there are plenty of our patrons that were fed up and walked out on it. If these band leaders knew it they don't add to their prestige when they turn actors. And I think that it was the advertising value of the band that was responsible for what little pull the picture had. Certainly they would not have come to see Oakie do his stuff.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

WHARF ANGEL: Dorothy Dell, and LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple, Dorothy Dell, Adolphe Menjou—These pictures were well received here. Especially "Little Miss Marker." The latter had Shirley Temple as an added attraction. From her performance in these two pictures, we feel sure that the untimely death of Miss Dorothy Dell Goff was not only a loss to her immediate family but to the whole motion picture world.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. General patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby—The above title will about fit our own case, if more people don't come out and go in. Bing was good, Carole Lombard was ornamental, Ethel Merman was lively, Burns & Allen contributed some comedy and Leon Errol was himself. By a strange coincidence, the last named was also leading man in the two reel comedy "Hold Your Temper." Needless to say, he acquitted himself well in both instances, but getting back to the feature, the very people who didn't care for "Melody in Spring" were loud in their praise of "We're Not Dressing." But in my opinion, one scene in "Melody in Spring" (The Milking Song) in every way so far outclassed anything shown in "We're Not Dressing," that it is hard to understand why or how they arrive at this conclusion. I must be like the feller in the army who said "everybody is out of step but me." By the way, am I the only exhibitor in Louisiana? If so, I ought to gross more, which I don't. Played Aug. 19.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. General patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard—Will Rogers and Bing Crosby usually get them in where all others fail. A weak story, and too many songs by Crosby made it tiresome. The poorest Crosby we have had, but we paid expenses, and we're satisfied. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Aug. 19-20-21.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

WITCHING HOUR, THE: Judith Allen, Tom Brown—This is a nicely produced mystery story. Above the average and one that should be run.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields—Fields puts over a slim story in great shape. Had a number of compliments on this picture. Better Sunday business than usual. Played Aug. 19-20.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Thaetre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RKO

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Certainly not up to this pair's standard. Wheeler-Woolsey used to mean something back when they were given good stories, but their last two or three stories were very weak and even their lines were poor. One good story would bring them back and just about one more like this will finish them. Business off. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 15-16.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Not as good as these two stars are capable of. Our patrons liked it, those that came.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. Dak. Small town patronage.

CRIME DOCTOR: Otto Kruger, Karen Morley—Ran this on a Saturday as half of a double program. Fairly good murder with a surprise end that helps the picture. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Aug. 4.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

CRIME DOCTOR: Otto Kruger, Karen Morley—As I knew little about this feature when I booked it, I was curious to see what it was all about. It started slowly and appeared to be without any appeal for our patrons. Later it changed to tense, interesting action, that appealed strangely to them. Played Aug. 18.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

FINISHING SCHOOL: Ginger Rogers, Frances Dee—We'll give RKO credit for this one. Pleased all, including the rougher element. All right for small towns. Running time, 73 minutes.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. Dak. Small town patronage.

FLYING DEVILS: Arline Judge, Bruce Cabot, Eric Linden—Good romance with a little drunken comedy by Cliff Edwards will please the average crowd. Some nice stunt flying with a few thrills. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Aug. 3-4.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Gene Raymond—A wonderful musical. The young folks just ate it up. Notwithstanding the fact that we played it late, the cash customers were plentiful. Played Aug. 25-26.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix—Very good and clean. Played it Sunday and was well liked. —J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

KEEP 'EM ROLLING: Walter Huston, Frances Dee—A very good program picture that held up and kept them interested. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Aug. 20-21-22.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and country patronage.

LET'S TRY AGAIN: Diana Wynyard, Clive Brook—Played this one family night in a pinch and was not liked at all. No action, weak comedy, acting just so-so. Practically no story, just sixty-seven minutes of dialogue and even that was practically about nothing except domestic squabbles, and even then the story wound up just about where it had begun. If you don't have to play it, then skip. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Aug. 1.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS: Ann Harding, John Boles—This is a worth-while picture. After reading the story, I thought it was too sexy and the tragic ending would make a poor picture, but it went over fine. My lady patrons all had a good cry and said it was marvelous and none of my men folks walked out, so they must have liked it too. I recommend this highly. A most dramatic and sentimental theme. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Aug. 5-6. —Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

LIFE OF VIRGIE WINTERS: Ann Harding, John Boles—A nicely produced entertainment with heart interest and fine acting proving a good evening's entertainment.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

LIFE OF VIRGIE WINTERS: Ann Harding, John Boles—A swell story well done. It makes great entertainment for the women if you can get them in. Title against it. Ann Harding superb as is the rest of the cast. Running time, nine reels.—E. W. Kundert, Empress Theatre, Beresford, S. D. General patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS: Ann Harding, John Boles—Another blacklisted show that I think is excellent on account of the good moral. In my opinion, it is the show where the stars break all the commandments and then "live happy ever after" that does the harm. This could not be recommended for children, but for adults and young people I consider it a good show. Wonderful acting by Ann Harding with good support from John Boles, Helen Vinson and entire cast. Pleased my patrons. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Aug. 18-19.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

MAN OF TWO WORLDS: Francis Lederer—This is an out-of-the-ordinary picture and was very much enjoyed by my patrons. Francis Lederer dominated the picture throughout, but it was well dominated at that. RKO can well be proud of this one. Not a great one of roadshow proportions, but a thoroughly entertaining one for the home folks. It received 100 per cent attendance. Played Aug. 3.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. General patronage.

MURDER ON THE BLACKBOARD: James Gleason, Edna May Oliver—Played this picture on Saturday as half of a double program and it got by, but that is about all I can say for it. Just another murder-mystery-comedy. Average business. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Aug. 18.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

MURDER ON THE BLACKBOARD: James Gleason, Edna May Oliver—Edna May Oliver does some pleasing comedy work in this as Miss Philo Vance and it is a very entertaining show.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MURDER ON THE BLACKBOARD: James Gleason, Edna May Oliver—If your patrons don't go for mystery thrillers, and I can hardly call it that, better leave this one alone. I played it with the Baer fight pictures and got by.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. Dak. Small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers—Just a program picture. Will please a mid-week audience but will not get you any extra money. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Aug. 8-9.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

SING AND LIKE IT: ZaSu Pitts—With the cast of comedy stars this picture has it should be good but it certainly is not. No use wasting a playdate at this one. Business just fair and plenty of complaints. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Aug. 11.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SON OF KONG: Robert Armstrong, Helen Mack—I saw that some of the exhibitors called this a silly one, so I advertised it as a show for the youngsters. True enough, it has some absurd scenes in it, but it drew above average for us. No doubt because we played "King Kong" last year. Played Aug. 23-24.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

SPITFIRE: Katharine Hepburn—Even "Little Women" did not build up Hepburn for us. This star has always been a flop here. Story poor, but Hepburn's acting was wonderful when she talked slow enough to understand her. Business off. Running time, 88 minutes. Played Aug. 8-9.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

SPITFIRE: Katharine Hepburn—A very clever performance with Ralph Bellamy receiving as many favorable comments as Miss Hepburn. Hot weather cut into our attendance so we did not do as much as expected. Played August 8-9.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

STINGAREE: Irene Dunne, Richard Dix—I think this one of the finest pictures of the year. Box office didn't agree with me but the people who saw it did so. Guess it was my salesmanship and not the picture's fault. Boost it all you can.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

STINGAREE: Richard Dix, Irene Dunne—An excellent picture. Clean, good acting, good singing, but flopped at the box office. Think the Australian locale and the fact that it was a costume picture was responsible. Pleased those who came. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Aug. 8-9.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Norman Foster—Expected this to be an all-around good show, but it slipped somewhere. Business good, but it did not please the majority. Running time, 67 minutes. Played July 8-9.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

WE'RE RICH AGAIN: Marian Nixon, Billie Burke, Reginald Denny, Buster Crabbe, Edna May Oliver—A rather light, frothy entertainment that got by on family night. Would also have been okay for double program night. Didn't promise my patrons too much, so they liked it alright. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 7-8.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

WHERE SINNERS MEET: Clive Brooks, Diana Wynyard—Now here is a picture with a good title, and the idea behind it should have made it quite entertaining. Literary Digest gave it AAA. My people gave it one H, one E and two LL's. Incidentally, they gave me the same thing. I have learned that there are really two kinds of English. One that is spoken in its mother country and the other kind over here. That is the difference between over here and over there. The English we speak and very much prefer on our side of the Atlantic is really United States. England may scoff at us for murdering the Queen's English, and we feel like murdering the people who take liberties with the version President Roosevelt and a few others think is good enough. From the language they (the patrons) used when coming out, I imagine quite a few downright sinners met at my place. Just another version of English, sometimes called "profane." Played July 8.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. General patronage.

WHERE SINNERS MEET: Diana Wynyard, Clive Brook—Might be OK in England. Nix here. Too much British accent.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

WILD CARGO: Frank Buck—One of the very best jungle pictures we have ever shown. If Frank Buck would take the mush out of his mouth, we could all understand him. Some scenes plainly faked, but for those who like jungle pictures, it is a dandy. Box office very sick. Running time, 96 minutes. Played August 15-16.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

United Artists

THE HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD: George Arliss—A wonderful and beautiful picture and, best of all, had plenty of drawing power and pleased about 99 per cent. Running time, 86 minutes. Played July 23-24-25.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and country patronage.

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD, THE: George Arliss—One of the finest pictures of all time. Started to pass it up on account of excessive rental wanted by U. A., but finally decided to book it. One hundred per cent satisfaction from six to sixty-six. Men, women, youths and children all liked it. Business extra good. Certain to be one of the ten best of this year and, in my opinion, almost one of the ten best of all time. Color ending great. Running time, 86 minutes. Played July 26-27.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Spencer Tracy, Jack Oakie, Constance Cummings—A real good action picture that should please any crowd any day. Business good. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Aug. 23-24-25.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and country patronage.

MASQUERADER: Ronald Colman—An old one, but still a good show. Played Aug. 18.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MOULIN ROUGE: Constance Bennett, Franchot Tone, Tullio Carminati—Got in a tight place for a picture and wired in to United Artists for a booking and this is what they gave me. Proved quite a surprise, as everyone liked it fine and I did a nice business on it. Constance Bennett extra good and Mr. Tone fitted his role like a glove. Clever comedy all through, good story, enough music and girls, plenty of suspense. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 2-3.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

ROMAN SCANDALS: Eddie Cantor, Gloria Stuart—We thought this was too old to get much business but Eddie still packs 'em in. Very good.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Universal

ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT: Lew Ayres—This picture holds the house record here. Played it again July 27 to S. R. O. business. Now, with all the trouble in Europe, is a good time to play it. Don't see how it could miss.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. Dak. Small town patronage.

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi—No dice, no reason, no excuse and not much of anything else. Both Karloff and Lugosi are polished performers but they were surely helpless in this one. I don't quite get Universal's idea for the current season. Twenty-five years in the business and all at once they apparently run up a stop sign. Played Aug. 17-18.—William Conn, Webb Theatre, Gastonia, N. C. General patronage.

COUNTESS OF MONTE CRISTO: Fay Wray—Pleasing comedy drama. Slim Saturday business. Played Aug. 10-11.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GLAMOUR: Constance Cummings, Paul Lukas—Duck this if possible. Five years ago, it might have stacked up as okay, but today its another story. In one scene Miss Cummings did a bit of very good acting. Paul Lukas just so-so and Joe Cawthorne, whom I think is a splendid performer, had about as little to do as one of our ushers during this engagement. Business positively brutal. Played Aug. 13-14.—William Conn, Webb Theatre, Gastonia, N. C. General patronage.

HALF A SINNER: Joel McCrea, Sally Blane—Dandy comedy-drama with plenty of laughs, enough action and suspense. Berton Churchill, as the deacon, gets plenty of laughs. Unlike many pictures, I have not seen this story filmed before. In other words, the theme has not been worn out. Your patrons will like it. Average business on a family night. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Aug. 14-15.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

I LIKE IT THAT WAY: Gloria Stuart, Roger Pryor—A good picture—pleased 100 per cent. A fast-moving story with music. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Aug. 21-22.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. Dak. Small town patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy—Fairly good. Got by on Saturday. Played Aug 17-18.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—A typical Lee Tracy picture that will please where he is popular. Plenty of action and comedy with enough suspense to make it a very entertaining show. Drew little better than normal business. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Aug. 21-22.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW?: Margaret Sullavan, Douglass Montgomery—This is properly ranked as a special, for that is what it is. Fine action, some comedy, some drama, but always well acted. Only objection is that it is a little too long. Played Aug. 25.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

MADAME SPY: Fay Wray, Nils Asther—Plenty of thrills and action, and the picture was well liked and well received. Slightly over our average attendance. Played Aug. 4.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE RIVER: Diana Wynyard—Well made, but will likely please the Johnny Bulls more than American patrons. Too much dialogue—not enough comedy. Uncle Carl better get back to good football stories, a few more such as "King for a Night," "Embarrassing Moments," and forget his crooners.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard—According to comments, this was the best liked western we have played. A patron was heard to say: "This is the best picture I have seen in two years." Running time, 60 minutes. Played Aug. 2-3.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—The poorest of the Maynards. The way this one jumps around in continuity, looks like it was made after work hours. Played Aug. 14-15.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—This is a very good western picture that will please all western fans. It is a good story with plenty of action and thrills. Maynard at his best in a role that suits him and an excellent supporting cast. There is also a love story and a touch of comedy here and there. We played this one day to very good business and pleased all that saw it. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Aug. 25.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Warner

DR. MONICA: Kay Francis, Warren William—A fine picture in spite of the fact that it was blacklisted. It certainly demonstrates the fact that "the wages of sin is death" and while not suitable for children I think it is an excellent show for the young people. Acting good. Jean Muir almost steals the show. It pleased most of my patrons. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Aug. 11-12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

GAMBLING LADY: Barbara Stanwyck, Pat O'Brien—An excellent picture with Barbara Stanwyck turning in one of the best performances she has ever given, splendid dialogue, modern atmosphere and a good supporting cast all in the Warner manner.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

GAMBLING LADY: Barbara Stanwyck—Just another picture. The star has been living on her reputation too long and is considerably overdue with a real pleasing role in an entertaining picture.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—This is a splendid picture of its kind. Not so heavy in box office. Clean picture—one everyone should see. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Aug. 19-20.—A. Gasaway, Strand Theatre, Tuscola, Illinois. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—In my opinion, our friend Jimmie slipped a notch or two in "He Was Her Man" but he most assuredly re-establishes himself in this one. Having about all that is desired, it proved to be one of the greaest audience pictures that we have ever presented and should be well received in the majority of situations by the trade in general. Just about stacks up as Cagney's best. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Aug. 20-21-22.—William Conn, Webb Theatre, Gastonia, N. C. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney, Gloria Stuart, Pat O'Brien—A fast moving comedy with plenty of action and snappy dialogue and the U. S. fleet coming in for a "big hand" of applause. The audience was still laughing when the newsreel started.—O. T. Kirby, Palace Thetre, Roxboro, N. C. Small town patronage.

HI, NELLIE: Paul Muni, Glenda Farrell—A real good program picture that pleased. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 12-13-14.—Beatty & Johnston, Crescent Theatre, Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Small town and country patronage.

HI, NELLIE: Paul Muni, Glenda Farrell—An excellent newspaper story with Muni turning in an excellent performance, with splendid support from Glenda Farrell, produced in the usual Warner manner.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

I'VE GOT YOUR NUMBER: Joan Blondell, Pat

O'Brien—A very good comedy with a very good cast, some swell wisecracks, fast action and good direction. A very interesting beginning.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

FISHING FOR TROUBLE: Sidney and Murray—Fair comedy, some slapstick, better than this pair's average. Running time, 20 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

STABLE MATES: Sidney and Murray—A great comedy. They laughed just like they used to laugh at Larry Semon. A sure cure for the blues.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

Educational

BIG MEOW, THE: Tom Howard—This one brought plenty of laughs. Did not care for it myself but the customers liked it so it must have been O. K. Running time, 20 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

LITTLE BOY BLUE: Terry Toons—A good cartoon, good music but poor print. Running time, nine minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

TRAV'LLING THE ROAD: Song Hit Stories—Good one reeler, with good voices. Railroad songs, well liked. Running time, nine minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

Fox

ADVENTURES OF THE NEWSREEL CAMERAMAN: These one reelers are fine with a slow, draggy feature. They are thrillers. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

RKO

GOOD KNIGHT: Cubby the Bear Cartoon—Is amusing.—Gladys E. McArdle, Own Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

KNIFE OF THE PARTY: Edgar Kennedy—Fair comedy, some said. Others walked out to smoke while it was on. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

PATHE NEWS: Pathe could improve their news by leaving out the "Man on the Street" stuff. A newsreel that is for news and the average customer does not care to hear what the cameraman has told someone to say. Action for newsreels.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

RADIO ROW: No. 4—Fair radio act. Running time, 9 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

GULLIVER MICKEY: Mickey Mouse—We used a trailer on this one for a week and it surely was worth it. A good cartoon.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S MECHANICAL MAN: Mickey Mouse Cartoon—One of the best Mickey Mouse cartoons we have run. Running time, seven minutes.—A. B. Jefferies, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

Universal

BORN APRIL FIRST: Sterling Holloway—A good comedy with plenty of laughs if your people like Holloway. Running time, 21 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

GOOFYTONE NEWS: Good if you want some silly comedy other than the two reel comedies. They are O. K. for filling up a short feature program. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. R. Boubhn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

VAUDEVILLE DAYS: Mentone No. 8—On the average these Mentones have been good. Some were a little weak, but most of them will hold up. They are good to diversify your short program. Running time, 20 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

Warner

BUSINESS IS A PLEASURE: Broadway Brevities—Not up to the usual standard of the Brevity Series, but very beautifully done in Technicolor. No one will kick at it.—L. G. Tewksbury, Oprea House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

GOIN' TO HEAVEN ON A MULE: Merrie Melodies—This is a very good cartoon comedy based on that popular song hit of the same name. This is excellent entertainment and will please both young and old. Let's have more cartoons like this. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RUFUS JONES FOR PRESIDENT: Brodaway Brevities—A dandy two reel musical with entire negro cast. Some excellent song numbers. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

SERVICE WITH A SMILE: Leon Errol—All color, beautiful and entertaining. Running time, two reels.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

WHERE MEN ARE MEN: Joe Penner—Why doesn't Joe give himself up? He's fooled the public long enough. I can get twice as funny as Penner with just two bottles of beer. Running time, 20 minutes.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Town and rural patronage.

Serials

Mascot

LOST JUNGLE, THE: Clyde Beatty—Don't pay a raise for this serial. Beatty does all his stuff in the first chapter and after that it is just another jungle picture. It isn't doing me any good.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOST JUNGLE, THE: Clyde Beatty—The first two chapters on this serial have just about the same scenes as the "Big Cage," but it starts out very well. Drew extra business.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOST JUNGLE, THE: Clyde Beatty—This is all that the press sheet says it is, and it out-thrills every wild animal picture to date. Clyde Beatty is marvelous.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montperier, Vermont. General patronage.

Universal

VANISHING SHADOW, THE: Onslow Stevens—Have played two chapters and the serials fans say its O. K.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

NO. 66—IDENTITY OF INQUIRERS WILL NOT BE REVEALED

QUESTION—Will you please advise me who the party is that asked Question Number —— of the Code Question Box?—TEXAS.

ANSWER—The identity of any person submitting a code question to the Code Question Box will not be revealed, for obvious reasons. It is with this understanding that all questions are submitted. The protection of anonymity is afforded every one.

NO. 67—TYING-IN NEWSREELS; MINIMUM ADMISSIONS

QUESTION—Please advise if any ruling has been made against the tying-in of newsreels with contracts covering feature pictures. For years we have made a policy of showing one newsreel per week. We have already made arrangements with one of the newsreel companies for one issue per week for the new season. However, a representative from the sales department of another company whose features we need, says that in order to get their product it will be absolutely necessary that we buy the two weekly issues of their newsreel for the new season. If all of the companies producing newsreels were to make such a demand you can see what a situation it would be. What protection can we secure from this unfair practice?

Second question: Our competitor is showing features of three large distributors on midweek bargain days for 10 cents general admission. I know the code does not allow pictures to be shown for less than the minimum price specified in the contract—and we are under the impression that none of the major companies have a minimum admission stipulated in their contracts as low as 10 cents (for adults) for any of their first run pictures, but we do not, however, have an insight into our competitor's contracts. What steps should I take in this matter, since distributing companies with which we are dealing have forced us to raise our prices.

ANSWER—The motion picture code offers no protection to any exhibitor from the demands of a distributor who insists that the exhibitor must buy a newsreel in order to secure the distributor's feature product. The entire matter is one which must be worked out between the exhibitor and the distributor in conducting contract negotiations. Many exhibitors of late have made the same complaint against the tying-in by distributors of newsreels with features. There is absolutely nothing in the code that can stop the practice.

Regarding the second inquiry, some of the large distributors do permit a 10-cent minimum admission under some of their contracts. However, if the complaining exhibitor has sufficient reason to believe that his competitor's contract with any one of the three distributors does contain a clause providing for a 15-cent minimum admission for adults, and the competitor does operate 10-cent bargain day matinees under such contract, then the complainant should discuss the matter with the secretary of the Local Grievance Board located in the exchange city in his territory, with a view to filing a charge against the competitor with the Grievance Board.

If the complaining exhibitor is certain that any one of the competitor's contracts has a 15-cent minimum admission clause, he is entitled to file a complaint with the Grievance Board at once, without further ado. But, inasmuch as the certainty of violation is not established, then it is suggested that the matter first be discussed with the board secretary.

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

Famous Players Plans Neighborhood Previews

Famous Players Canadian Corporation plans to inaugurate "preview nights" in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada, according to a decision of J. J. Fitzgibbons, general manager, who was in Vancouver recently for the convention of circuit managers. One of the smaller neighborhood theatres will be used for the purpose, with the feature to be put on "cold" without any advance announcement. It is considered the best way of obtaining true audience reaction to films. The plan is to be patterned after the method used in Hollywood.

New Capitol Opens In Greeneville, Tenn.

Considerable local attention was given the recent opening of the new Capitol theatre, in Greeneville, Tenn., operated by the Crescent Amusement Company, of which Tony Sudekum is president. Seating 800, the theatre is modernly equipped.

The opening ceremony was featured by addresses by John S. Bernard, mayor of Greeneville; Mr. Sudekum, R. L. Baulch, secretary-treasurer; Joe W. Holman, architect. Harry C. Beekner is manager of the new theatre.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

"MANAGERS' PICTURES"

In his statement regarding the value of the Managers' Round Table Club, from which on a following page we have taken the liberty of quoting, Mr. Harry Kalmine, directing head of Warner Theatres in the Pittsburgh zone, emphasizes the importance of this section in dealing with what he calls "managers' pictures." Writes Mr. Kalmine:

"These pictures . . . require the intelligence and ingenuity of real showmanship to put them over with the public. . . . It is this kind of material which I find particularly interesting in the Managers' Round Table. The real test of a manager is not made until he has handled one of these "managers' pictures," and I know of no better place for a manager to keep himself informed of when and how to handle these pictures than in the Managers' Round Table. . . ."

Though there has been a notable increase in the number of pictures containing obvious and profitable exploitation angles, there are still and always will be productions of quality requiring application of the essence of skilled showmanship to bring in the grosses they deserve.

Therefore, Mr. Kalmine's opinion, to which we heartily subscribe, rates wide study. And that he spotlights the value of these pages in the handling of such attractions, indicates that many of our contributors have discovered the successful "when and how" of putting them over.

DIVIDEND PAYERS

To the list of members recently rewarded with promotions, we take great pleasure in adding the name of Vogel Gettier, who leaves the Liberty Theatre, Sedalia, Mo., to take over the supervision as city manager of Fox West Coast's Paramount, Gilloiz and Plaza, in Springfield.

Congratulations of course are in order, as may also be the thought that real showmanship plus a lot of hard work is still paying handsome dividends.

A NEW HIGH

In the staid metropolis of Boston, Mass., a few weeks since, the Loew theatremen combined forces with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exploiteers to net what might be termed a new high in exploitation. On the engagement of "Treasure Island" at the State Theatre, the boys promoted in advance in the four leading dailies, editorials highly praising the production and urging wide attendance.

Much good should result from this timely exploitation, for backed by the unqualified endorsements of the conservative New England papers, showmen in other spots no doubt will be able to plant similar box office stimulators in their local press.

Publicity of this nature benefits not only a single attraction. It raises the prestige of screen entertainment, and as such is showmanship of the finest degree.

THE INNOCENT BYSTANDER

Managers everywhere will watch with a great deal of interest the unfolding of the new plan of earmarking pictures, announced by Fox Midwest Theatres, as detailed in this week's issue. According to Fox Midwest executives, the identification of films either as "adult" or "family," and advertising them as such, is expected to be a practical solution of the problem of what is fit for children, and "will go a long way toward preventing savage, unfair attacks by rabid reformers."

Too true unfortunately is the expression of H. E. Jameyson, Wichita, Kan., district manager, who states that, fair or unfair, the responsibility of what children see falls in the lap of the individual manager, and that "now the manager is the goat for parental neglect and indifference." The new idea, however, is supposed to shift the responsibility to the shoulders of parents, where it obviously belongs.

From past experience, we have our doubts about the success of any plan intended to pass this troublesome buck to neglectful parents. But let us hope that it works if for no other reason than the contemplated safeguarding of the manager from the annoyance of taking it on the chin in an argument where he is placed in the unenviable position of the innocent bystander.

LONG REMEMBERED

Without becoming oratorical about it, perhaps the presentation of the Quigley Award for July to Charley Curran by Governor Herbert Lehman of New York will not be considered by the winner as the least eventful happening of his career.

Though capable showmen expect little praise and for that matter rarely receive commendation for their efforts, still to be signalled out and honored in so decided a fashion is something to be long and pleasantly remembered.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

New Orleans and Toledo Click on "Cellini"

The campaign put on by Manager Rodney Toups and Publicity Director Moise Bloch, Loew's State, New Orleans, La., on "Affairs of Cellini" contained a number of practical angles reported to have secured plenty of box office attention, the odd key contest, as suggested in the United Artists' press book, being outstanding and bringing in many answers. Heralds distributed around the theatre and in the downtown section helped to put this one over.

The "Cellini" reward cards were tacked in many good locations, and another stunt that brought chuckles was imitation rolls of money wrapped in real bank wrappers, copy inside plugging the humor of the picture. Ten large blocks of ice were promoted and planted in prominent spots on the inside of which was copy on the date.

Stuffers were placed in fan magazines, Good Housekeeping and Cosmopolitan, drug stores and news stands displaying cards as further cooperation. A "Cellini" night in a prominent cabaret also helped, guest tickets being given in a special prize contest in return for advance radio mention and window cards put out by the cabaret.

In Toledo, Ohio—

Manager Wally Caldwell, at the Valentine, effected book tieups with leading downtown stores and also obtained cooperation of public library with theatre credit cards and distribution of book marks in 14 branches previously located. Fashion tieups embraced plugging of new millinery styles featured by Constance Bennett. The Bennett press book fashion story was also planted in one of Wally's leading papers.

Street Gag Cracks New York Dailies

A neat stunt on a trade showing that was reported to have landed on the front page of one important New York paper, page two on another and two-column pictures in two additional dailies was that put on by Al Sherman, ad head of Mascot Pictures on "Young and Beautiful."

Al persuaded a number of the members of the Chorus Equity to picket the theatre where the picture was shown for the trade (see photo), the girls wearing signs as a protest against the alleged discrimination against the beauties in the East. The idea was that this section of the country had as many potentialities for pulchritudinous screen material as the Coast.

In conjunction with Mascot's national contest, managers playing the picture may be able to adapt the stunt for local consumption as part of their campaigns.

Papers Aid Totman Seek Missing Lion

Jimmy Totman put on a lot of smart stuff for his "Circus Clown" campaign at the Warner, in Erie, Pa., but what was outstanding was the gag that goes back to the good old days of press agenting wherein this showman staged a "lost lion" stunt. Although the newspapers were apprised of the fact that this was one of those things, nevertheless the forthcoming publicity could not have been any more generous had the story been legitimate.

For days ahead the papers ran streamers, front page stories and photos on the missing beast, and although much of the copy kidded the search, it brought attention to the picture, especially when Jimmy distributed thousands of dodgers on the eve of his opening, copy reading that the escaped lion was a publicity stunt for the Joe E. Brown feature.

This was further tied in by a wire from the star himself cooperating with the gag by volunteering to supply a recipe for making the missing lion eat out of his hand. Telegram mentioned the title and the whole thing was run for further publicity.

Totman used a flock of other gags and ideas among more conventional lines that called attention to his date, but the lion stunt was the gravy and will be talked about in Erie for many a day.

Cantor Uses Autographed Book Giveaway for "Man"

A newspaper campaign that clicked well for him is reported by David L. Cantor, Aberdeen Theatre, Aberdeen, Wash., for his "Little Man, What Now?" date. Dave secured six copies of the book from the exchange with autograph of Margaret Sullavan and gave them away a few days prior to opening to contest winners in the Aberdeen World. Contest consisted of five questions daily concerning the picture and its high spots.

Tie-up with baker resulted in 3,000 numbered tickets distributed among grocers to give-away with merchants' bread, some corresponding numbers were posted in theatre entitling bearers to free admission. Baking company's radio program plugged opening.

Local drug store gave to lady patrons, envelopes with samples of "Radio Girl" perfume and powder with copy to effect that it was the star's favorite. Window display of perfume with stills of Sullavan and recommendation to use the cosmetic.

Planck Promotes Potatoes And Peels Them in Lobby

George Planck's ingenuity came to the fore when he played "Here Comes the Navy" at the Chatham Theatre, State College, Penna., and he decorated his lobby with flags, posters, etc., while the center of a display had a man dressed as a gob doing "kitchen police" work, who peeled potatoes all day surrounded by spuds, pans, knives, etc., promoted from leading restaurant in return for the "peeling" job. Victrola played "Barnacle Bill" and "Anchors Aweigh" while the chores were performed.

Imprinted napkins, circus heralds, window cards and playdates on bottoms of restaurant menus were other highlights of George's campaign.

Schanberger Greets Ralph De Palma

De Palma Tied In On "Romance" Date

The Cinderella national contest outlined in the press book on "Romance in the Rain" was put on successfully by Manager J. Lawrence Schanberger, Keith's, Baltimore, Md., in conjunction with his campaign on the showing with prominent shoe stores cooperating in all advertising and window displays. Many entries were reported from local women anxious to try on the glass slipper, the finals being held on the stage on the opening day.

The Ford tieup also detailed in the press book was another click for Schanberger, who arranged for the personal appearance of noted race driver, Ralph DePalma, who drove to the theatre in a replica of the car he used in winning a number of his races. Car was bannered and accompanying photo shows the Baltimore showman greeting DePalma at the theatre. Another click was a water bally in which a bannered boat cruised the Delaware Bay during a local regatta.

Omaha Showmen Act Host To Fathers of Twins

A. E. Ableson, manager World Theatre, Omaha, Neb., and Charlie Schlaiffer, publicist, hopped on Bing Crosby's becoming the father of twins while they were playing "Just an Echo" featuring Bing and announced through newspapers and radio that all fathers of twins, who had attained that exalted position during the past year would be guests of the World Theatre. As each father approached the box office with proper credentials (the boys don't say whether the proud dads brought their offspring with them) he was also presented with a cigar.

Abelson and Schlaiffer have been getting out some mighty attractive fronts; recently they spotted six-foot cutouts of chorines on the canopy with strong spotlight playing on the girls. Another eye-arrester was an eighteen-foot oval with life size figures placed in center of front over canopy, while a forty-foot vertical banner hung down the front of theatre.

Friends and well wishers of that interesting contributor to these pages, Joe Lee, aptly called "Doctor of Sick Theatres," will be happy to know that he has taken over the post of managing director of the Brooklyn Paramount, his first broadside being an excellent drive on "Cleopatra," the opening attraction. Kalmine Speaks on Value of Managers' Round Table

For the encouragement of our members, and the information of those theatremen who perhaps question the value of contributing to these pages, we requested a frank opinion on the worth to managers of the Managers' Round Table Club section from Mr. Harry Kalmine, director of the Warner Pittsburgh zone theatres. We take the liberty of quoting from Mr. Kalmine's reply:

"In response to your letter, I don't hesitate to express myself as being heartily in favor of the splendid work being done by the Quigley Publications and the Motion Picture Herald in stimulating managers to greater efforts through the medium of the Managers' Round Table Club. I know that I make it a point to glance over these pages myself in every issue and find that they contain a great deal of valuable information. To my way of thinking, the Managers' Round Table is a liberal education for any showman whether he be in a small or large operation.

"Aside from the general ground of knowledge that may be acquired in the pages of the Managers' Round Table, its most valuable aspect is when it deals with pictures which we call 'managers' pictures.' These pictures, until they are in the hands of capable managers, are so much celluloid. They require the intelligence and ingenuity of real showmanship to put them over with the public. This is the type of picture which, once the public is made to see, the public raves about. It is this kind of material which I find particularly interesting in the Managers' Round Table. The real test of a manager is not made until he has handled one of these 'managers' pictures,' and I know of no better place for a manager to keep himself informed of when and how to handle these pictures than in the Managers' Round Table."

Private Press Screening For "Girl from Missouri"

Three weeks prior to opening of "Girl From Missouri," L. Davidson, Capitol, Sioux City, Ia., arranged a private screening for the press and other selected groups. Their comments were used for lobby display, newspaper ads and special trailer.

Downtown streets had special processed one sheet treated with water-glass material posted on sidewalks night prior. A striking window display featuring fall and winter coats was arranged with large air-brush portrait of Harlow wearing white fur coat. Black and white stills with appropriate selling copy used. Several hundred copies of a screen magazine carrying life story of star were given to patrons. Special invitation card mailed to selected group of women; all lamp posts in heart of business district had art shield attached selling the show and gummed streamers with cut of Harlow were also used in all beauty shops and drug stores.

AUGUST WINNER IN NEXT WEEK'S ISSUE

By the grace of the calendar, the entrants in the Quigley Awards competition for August have had until midnight of Thursday, September 6, to get their campaigns to Headquarters.

The decision of the judges, Messrs. Al Lichtman, of United Artists, W. R. (Billy) Ferguson, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and E. L. Alperson, Fox West Coast Theatres will be announced in the issue of September 15.

St. Louis Warnerites Put On "Managers' Month" Drive

In order to compete successfully with the big campaigns and elaborate fronts being used by the first run theatres, a "Managers' Appreciation Month" drive is now being put across by the St. Louis Amusement Co., under the supervision of Zone Manager L. J. Hill, Al Zimbalist, ad director, District Managers William Hoppe, Jr., Al Poos and George Woods; Bess and Matt Schulter, bookers.

Preceding the drive, a parade of 200 cars, including special floats, sound trucks, etc., covered every section of the city. The event was broadcast each day of the opening week and institutional programs will be put on during the balance of the drive.

The downtown newspapers as well as the community press carried long stories and art on the "Month" and co-operative advertising pages were also utilized. Lobbies were decorated especially and costless heralds were distributed in every section of the city.

Stage attractions were inaugurated immediately in many of the theatres, the Tivoli with a Kiddie Bathing Revue, the Washington with a Radio Revue Amateur Night, and the Florissant with an Auction Block Fun-Riot. The Gravois, the Mikado and Maplewood theatres also put on the Fun-Riot and the Aubert staged a Kiddie Jubilee Party to be continued weekly. Prizes for all these events were promoted.

Henger Builds Good-Will With Special Kid Shows

George Y. Henger, city manager for Standard Theatres, Oklahoma City, Okla., largely offset the censorship movement in his city and promoted much good will for his houses by a 12-week series of special children's morning shows at the Liberty Theatre, presenting only specially selected features and shorts.

George secured wide publicity on this policy through editorial newspaper ads and various organization publications, stating that only suitable children's offerings would be booked at these special shows. Henger further exploited the censorship drive by booking the officially endorsed Boy Scout serial "Young Eagles" opening the morning showings with the initial chapter. Endorsement of this feature by all Boy Scout and Camp Fire Girl officials was obtained after a special screening, which George further plugged in an attractive herald sent to each young member of the two organizations. This commendation was also carried in newspaper ads.

Letter stated that this was a personal warning from a friend that a murderer was on the loose, evading the police net of a nation, and advised that recipient do his part to apprehend "this fiendish despoiler of human life by signing this note and forwarding it to a friend," so that it would finally find its way into the hands of that clever detective Charlie Chan. This was followed by theatre copy. Letter concluded with admonishment not to break chain and forward it on to a friend immediately.

Kustner Also Promotes War Relics on "13"

In the heart of the country around which the story was written, Frank Boucher recently borrowed a lot of Civil War relics as exploitation on "Operator 13." On his date, Lew Kustner, manager, Apollo, Martinsburg, W. Va., assisted by Norman Pyle, MGM exploiteer, also worked this angle as successfully for a good showing in some of the most prominent windows in town. Newspaper also tied in with invite to Civil War vets to see the picture, and interviewed old soldiers for special stories.

Front and lobby were in keeping, battle flags being used for further decoration. In addition to house to house herald distribution and radio announcements, delivery trucks traversing surrounding territory were bannered with theatre copy.

Rotsky Goes Way Back On "Old Fashioned"

Local Montreal drama troupe was giving a series of revivals, so George Rotsky of the Palace persuaded them to do "The Drunkard," and had the troupers announce that if audience liked the stage version they could also see it on the screen in the "Old Fashioned Way" at the Palace.

George also sold the old fashioned idea to many ace stores, Waterman Pens going for window with exhibit of models from away back. Other stores did likewise, and as further ballys, local cabbies operating horse drawn open face carriages were promoted into carrying theatre banners (see photo). Copy stressed the virtues of sightseeing via old time horse cab, picture tied in at bottom. Cabs occupy space in squares in downtown district and the plug was seen by many.

An old 1912 Ford was also drafted for street use, and chauffeur dressed in keeping with date of the car, drove the lizzie around town. Stops in front of theatre brought crowds who also took in house ad on side.

Moyer Uses Guessing Gag For "Melodrama"

Charlie Moyer, Warners State and Strand Theatres in Hanover, Penna., contacted the largest department store in his town for one of their most prominent windows in which thirty-five photos of stars were mounted, some easily recognized and others more difficult. Passersby were advised that the first fifteen guessing the correct names of the stars would be given free admissions to "Manhattan Melodrama." Window also carried stills plugging picture.

Another stunt that Charlie says works now and then is to get some ordinary store boxes and place them around on prominent corners in the downtown section. Boys sit on the boxes a few hours prior to opening with snipes on their backs, "I am waiting for the State to open to see, etc." Different twist to this gag was pulled for "Very Honorable Guy" whereby Charlie has a fellow in a store window apparently sleeping on a cot with a sign placed near him reading, "I am getting rested up so I can stand the laughs, etc." Buzzer attached to window attracted pedestrians.

Cleveland is putting on a lot of welcome to the returning local boys what with Milt Harris' recent Phil Spitalny celebration, and now Manager Arnold Gates' campaign at Loew's Park on his showing of "Many Happy Returns" starring bandsman, Guy Lombardo, who originated in those parts.

Arnold put out a lot of circus heralds plugging the orchestra, copy headed "Cleveland's Own," and as local ordinances do not allow anything on marquee, got around it by planting big electric sign (see photo) on top of building. Pancho Villa's daughter, dressed in Mexican garb, was stationed in the lobby to meet patrons. Entire staff dressed in keeping with the picture, old woman working on pottery in front of theatre and costumed Mexicans policed sidewalk, firing rifles at intervals to attract attention.

COUNTRY TOWN OPERATION

Exhibitor Describes Methods He Found Successful Running 210 Seat House in Community of 916

by A. B. JEFFRIS

New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo.

You have asked me several times to "keep in good standing," so I am going to give you my idea on the country town picture show. If there is any material in this letter that may be of help to any of the boys that are in the same situation that I am, I will be glad to have you pass it on.

By country town, I refer to a town about the size of Piedmont, where the writer has a theatre seating 210 people in a town of 916 population. A theatre in a town of this size cannot be neglected, but on the contrary must be petted and babied. I have recently taken a trip through this part of the country, making notes on small town theatres only and find only too often that the country theatre has a dirty, unattractive front, badly in need of paint, poorly lighted and a single one sheet on a cracked frame, announcing the night's show. Upon entering, my ticket is often "grabbed" by a high school kid whose sole pay and interest is to see the show. After stumbling my way to a seat in the dark, I find a poorly projected, badly illuminated picture on a dirty screen with squawky sound—and the owner just cannot understand why his potential patrons drive 40 miles to the city for their movie entertainment.

Business building for the country town theatre is a very delicate proposition. If you are not a "native" but a stranger, as I was when Mrs. Jefferis and myself opened our theatre 15 months ago, you must be careful to "talk their talk," and not give them the impression that you are a "city feller" trying to "high hat" them. You must drive one of the cheaper cars, and mix well with the people. Above all things be honest with them regarding shows. We have found out the kind of pictures that Mr. and Mrs. "Whosiss" likes, and when they ask, "Is this a good show tonight?", you can answer "Yes, but it's not the kind you like. I suggest you come Friday or Saturday."

Takes Great Pains

Regarding the theatre itself: While our front is not elaborate, it is very clean and we have repainted it twice in 16 months. It is brightly illuminated, and we do not use any paper in front less than a three sheet, except for news and short subjects. We have a very attractive lobby, with a wicker lounge, chair and table, with a colored spot on the wall on the next program. The tickets are taken by Mrs. Jefferis or myself, and we make a point of trying to remember the names of patrons. A patron is thanked when he buys his ticket, and some pleasant remark made to him when it is collected.

An usher is ready when he enters to show him to a seat, with a dimmed flashlight, so as not to disturb other patrons. We maintain our projection equipment in first class condition, and although this is a country town, we pay our projectionist enough money to keep him interested in his job, and maintain the equipment, except for major repairs. We have a Walker silver screen, wide range sound and a complete washed air cooling plant, and are now installing a heating plant in connection with our cooling system.

We have a mailing list that covers towns in a 50 mile radius. The programs are mailed weekly. We advertise in five newspapers, and they have been very kind with gratis space.

The kiddies are a great help in building business. Of course we have a Mickey Mouse Club, which meets Saturday afternoon. An example of how the children can put a picture over is the picture "Hi, Nellie." Two weeks before the play date, I told the kids about how expressions such as "Where's Elmer," "Twenty-three skidoo," etc., originated. I asked them how they would like to start something like that. Of course, kids always want to start something so I told them that if they would say "Hi, Nellie" to every kid they met, they could see how rapidly an expression could move. The result, "Hi, Nellie" became a byword in our town, and the picture enjoyed a nice business from the curious. . . .

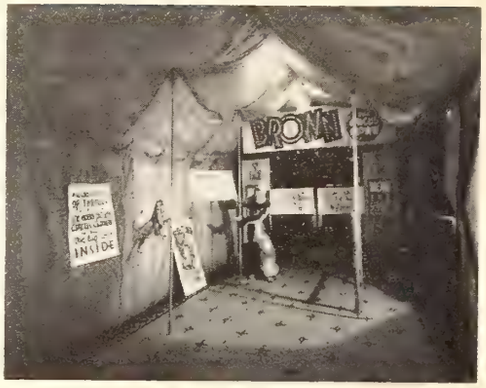
Much Sock Exploitation On "Clown" Campaigns



Everything in the book and a whole lot more was used by the various showmen in putting over their stuff on "Circus Clown." A host of campaigns are on hand and here follow some of the highlights:

In Morgantown, W. Va.—

Keen exploiteer Kenneth Grimes, skipper of the Warner, put on a flock of ace stuff, such as a kiddie clown parade on opening day with marchers in costume headed by promoted band and bannered truck. Boys in clown suits rode bannered bikes around town and local newsboys carried special slugs on their backs. Ushers in clown outfits covered city playgrounds and worked the streets in the evening, also distributing special circus herald and puzzle blanks house to house. Ken also promoted plane from local aid field to tow 100-foot banner.

Front was made up as a large circus tent with sawdust in lobby, and fortune telling booth was also used in advance. Outside display had giant beaverboard cutout clown hanging from trapeze from top of vertical sign in addition to 40-foot banner. As additional atmosphere, Grimes promoted a large cage of monkeys displayed in front of the house and also obtained red fire from local railroad for night display.

Other circus gags were barker in front of theatre with P. A. system (see photo), strong man in lobby, and playground tieup on stage for Brown yell contest with prizes promoted from Montgomery Ward.

And in Charlotte, N. C.—

Manager Don Nichols at the Broadway put on one of his typical campaigns embracing many angles. Newspaper mention was generous with advance stories and art, and classified tieup netted free advertising.

Town was blanketed with displays and banners in prominent spots, Don promoting many windows. Street bally arranged by doorman consisted of two boys dressed as clowns who covered city. Further circus atmosphere was created by Top front.

Then to Middletown, Ohio—

Where Manager Roy L. Patterson of the Gordon Theatre, handicapped by local ordinances against street bally, did very well without this angle, making a large number of tieups with national advertisers which clicked strong. Featured among these was hookin with National Biscuit Co. on cake package called "Clowns," in which distribution of these crackers was arranged for with many local grocers on a contest. All stores went for windows and ads.

Another tieup was sold to the makers of the "Dr. Pepper" soft drink in which purchasers finding the letter "G" under bottle caps were given free tickets. This was put over in cooperation with confectioneries in the entire surrounding territory. Tieup was made with Tish Tissues to furnish 2,000 paper handkerchiefs in imprinted envelopes.

Patterson sold a co-op page the day before opening, working the misspelled word in each ad idea for free tickets. In exchange he obtained center spread free for theatre. Many good street stunts and tieups were also arranged. Lobby was completely transformed into a Big Top (see photo), canvas borrowed from the Boy Scouts with which Roy made up his own tent. Sign on front read, "Main Entrance to Big Show."

LOEW POLI DIVISION ZOOMING

Managers in Harry Shaw Division Crack Thru With Ace Campaigns On "Treasure Island" Showings

Reported by Erle Wright, division publicity director, to be leading all Loew zones in "Treasure Island" exploitation, the showmen in Division Manager Harry Shaw's sector have come through with a flock of hot box-office fodder, highlights of which are set down below, campaigns listed alphabetically by names. Many of the boys are Round Tablers and their activities have been chronicled frequently in these pages.

Falk Goes Airplane To Plug Attraction

In addition to using many of the good ideas put over by other of the circuit houses, Louis Falk promoted an airplane to fly above Meriden, Conn., advertising his date at the Palace, there. Another newspaper angle was a newspaper coloring contest with the color mats from the press book.

Co-op page also went over, Louis having merchants contribute prizes for the treasure chest in the theatre lobby, these to be given patrons holding lucky keys, distributed at the various stores to customers. House staff here also costumed, and drug store contest on "Treasure Chest" candy was tied in on guessing contest on number of Rockwood candy coins in fish-bowl displayed in store window.

Fitzpatrick Arranges Feature Story By Editor, Stevenson Kin

Manager E. Fitzpatrick, Poli, Waterbury, Conn., clicked often with his local press by planting serial and editorial in addition to a feature story in one of his dailies by the editor, named Stevenson, kin to the author of the book. Radio cooperation obtained included tiein by which 50 copies of book were given away as prizes, and on the angle that hair is woman's greatest treasure, a "Save Your Treasure" tieup with beauty parlors was put on successfully.

Two "hunts" were put on, one at an outing of local dairy, attended by 5,000 children, and the other with group of stores on special bargains. Former blanketed the town with heralds on the event, also plugging the picture. Quite a number of the circuit planned slants were put on, and Fitzpatrick also went for the 24 sheet on floor of lobby.

Freeman Uses Peg Leg Man And "Cooper" Street Bally

A peg legged local and a boy closely resembling Cooper made up a street bally for Manager G. E. Freeman, Poli, Springfield, Mass., and further attention was drawn to the date by street parade of local Boys' Band marching with pirate float.

Chest "key" stunt was put on with furniture company and actual treasure hunt was promoted on school playground. Atmospheric trailer and stuffers in bakery packages worked well in this stand.

Worcester Bakeries Make Up "Treasure Island" Cakes

Manager R. W. McGowan, Poli, Worcester, Mass., got plenty out of the press book Procter and Gamble cake tiein by cooperating with most of the leading local bakers on the stunt. Literature was distributed by stores and further advertising brought extra attention.

Miniature copies of story were handed out at hotels, restaurants and stores, key stunt was put on, pegleg-man street bally arranged, and "treasure" classified angle also hooked in to evening paper.

Rodney's Lobby Animation Moves Pirate Craft

Permitted by his wide foyer to go a bit fancy on the lobby, Manager Gene Rodney, at the Palace, New Haven, Conn., created an animated job that stopped a lot of traffic. Pirate craft rolled fore and aft supported by animated waves with background of "treasure," and parakeet in cage. Inserts were placed in copies of many fan mags., house staff was of course pirate-attired and circuit float was also exhibited.

Numerous store tieups were put over, headed by a coin guessing contest in prominent spot (see photo) entire window showing pirate ship with bowl of coins in center.

Radio dramatization by local players was commercially sponsored and announced by ads, menus and candy bags were imprinted, and leading laundry came in by stuffing all outgoing packages.

Among the flock of ace angles put on by Manager Matt Saunders, Poli, Bridgeport, a high scorer was the newspaper tieup on a treasure hunt at a nearby park, where a chest was buried, keys distributed, and 500 children transported to the hunt in bannered busses, promoted refreshments being served. To be noted is that Matt hit page one on four days in a row, not an every-day occurrence in that spot. Key gag was also put on with merchants, co-op page and windows resulting.

News company bannered trucks on fan mag. tieup, a flock of additional windows were obtained, and a newsboy parade on opening day also clicked. Marchers were given hats, masks, coins, etc. Newspaper strip was also planted, and Remington Whittling contest broke in another paper.

House staff in pirate costume, and lobby flash landed four column shot, foyer decorated with 30 foot mast, sails, ladder, old time cannon, chest with nuggets, live parrot in cage, etc. Street stunt used by Saunders, (see photo) of course, drew plenty of the curious, for reasons to be easily noted. Float originated in New York, and was sent over the circuit, each manager supplying the "flesh."

Simons' Store Treasure Hunt Returns Profitable Dividends

Cooperating with the ace department store of Hartford, Conn., Jack Simons, at the Poli, in the Insurance City, put on a treasure chest sale, store printing and distributing envelopes containing keys for prize chest stunt. Displays to step up stunt were planted in windows and in various departments, newspaper ads also tying in. Jack addressed department heads, pepping them up on picture and stunt, and planted flash (see photo) in lobby.

Public libraries for first time reported to have allowed bookmark distribution and theatre cards on bulletin boards. Ushers, cashiers and doorman wore pirate costumes, and citywide phone calls were made to homes and offices. Telescope stunt was used in lobby two weeks ahead.

PROMOTES MUCH FOR VERY LITTLE

Although he has put on innumerable campaigns over a long stretch of years, "Bam" admits to the biggest thrill, on his Paramount Week parade staged in Minneapolis, in 1921. No doubt much of the satisfaction comes from the fact that so much was promoted for so little—$12—resulting in a bally that is still remembered and won for the author that year's Paramount exploitation trophy. —MIKE

Some Other Clicks On "Circus Clown"

The headquarters of Manager Louis Lamm of the Capitol, who saturated his town with a good "Clown" advance, topped by a hookin with drug store chain that put on "Circus Day" sales and furnished balloons for distribution by clown on streets, title and date carried in all store advertising.

Louis distributed programs house to house, planted clown drawing contest on classified page, had special circus front and ran special show for crippled children and tieup with Rotary Club which furnished transportation.

And Then to Montreal—

Where that consistently clicking crew of Gene Curtis and Ken Finlay, at the Palace, tied in with the Al G. Barnes Circus, appearing currently, to mutual advantage. The star wired the circus a message of congratulations which was run in the local press and also read over the circus P. A. system at all shows. Another neat idea was passes enclosed in bags of peanuts which were sold at the circus.

Wagons were promoted from the circus on opening day, bannered, filled with real clowns and were paraded all over the city. Theatre banners were hung in the main tent of the circus, and to top it all Gene and Ken promoted the use of the circus stands (see photo) by which the picture was advertised on the paper put out by the circus.

Out of the ordinary was another stunt put on by these boys in which special heralds were inserted in 60,000 copies of the new local telephone directory. Laundry coloring contest was also put on, promiment music stores bannered with store light streamers, circus toy window secured, clown street bally and special lobby of striped tenting cloth arranged.

How They Did It in Montreal

TWO MILE PARADE FOR $12

In the Second of the Series on Earlier Day Exploitation, "Bam" Describes an Outstanding Bally

by LEON J. BAMBERGER

Sales Promotion Manager, RKO Radio

When A-Mike Vogel requested me to contribute an article for the Managers' Round Table Club series concerning big exploitation campaigns of years past, I gladly acquiesced, feeling that a few moments' perusal of the old scrap books would enable me to quickly dash off a suitable account. Later I noticed that the chairman desired particularly a description of what I considered my greatest or most thrilling campaign. This made the selection difficult because when any one has worked in as many varied localities as the writer, it is not easy to select one campaign that might be considered the most outstanding of all of them. A day's work in behalf of a theatre in a small town might well have accomplished a great deal more for the exhibitor proportionately than a most extensive week, or more, campaign in favor of a large key city house.

Leon J. Bamberger

Recalls Many Campaigns

Of course, it is interesting to look back over the old clippings and photographs, and recall the thought, hard work and selling which were necessary to achieve the desired results. Many engagements are unforgetable, such as the two months in Mexico City in the interests of pictures showing at the Olympia Theatre, bringing there the first taste of American exploitation methods, the booking of "Forever" in Montreal, which was the first circus campaign this city had ever seen on a motion picture; the Broadway premiere and a 12-week profitable run during the hot months of "Chang" at the Rivoli Theatre, New York; the movie star resemblance contest at the Minneapolis Automobile Show in 1921, and many others.

The stunt, however, that gave me the biggest personal thrill when it came off, and which incidentally entailed the hardest work and the greatest strain on my nervous system was the Paramount Week Parade staged in Minneapolis, Sept. 6, 1921.

Fifty business firms and theatres joined with us in this parade two miles long, and which George C. Sackett, then manager of the Orpheum Theatre, described as "rivalling in splendor the Barnum pageant in the days when P. T. rode at the head of the parade." Thousands of visitors were in the city for the State Fair. These and the local citizens packed and jammed Nicollet Avenue for six or eight blocks to witness the parade which had received widespread publicity for a week in advance. Fully 100,000 people saw it and many more heard of it.

The principal manufacturers and retail establishments of the Twin Cities entered really gorgeous floats in this parade, and competed for a beautiful silver cup that was awarded by a committee of prominent judges for the most novel and effective display. This cup was offered by J. B. Hudson & Son, and was presented by Mayor George E. Leach to the proprietor of the Minneapolis Dog and Bird Store. The Ivy Candy Co. float was awarded second prize and third went to an Essex Motor Car float.

Every float entered in the parade tied up with Paramount Week in some way, most of them carrying stock banners reading "Come In—It's Paramount Week." The entire personnel of the exchange, wearing fancy hats, and other appurtenances, marched at the head of the procession, and there were several brass bands, including that of the Letter Carriers, also Rogers' Hawaiians and other musical organizations.

Stimulating unusual interest, the Daily News conducted a guessing contest awarding prizes to the persons who could guess nearest to the correct weight of a roll of print paper which was carried on their float. A special parade edition was distributed by carriers along the line of march. Many of the firms represented distributed samples of their products to the onlookers.

This entire ballyhoo cost the local exchange the tremendous sum of $12. All other expenses were paid by the various firms which entered their own floats, many of which were constructed at a cost of as high as $1,000.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 239.—(A) How would you calculate the E. F. of projection lens to project a given picture width at given distance? (B) How would you proceed to determine whether or not your projection lens permits the entire light beam to enter? (C) Name the effect, or effects, if it does not all enter. (D) Suppose the light beam does not all enter the lens. What, if anything, could be done to remedy the condition?

Answer to Question No. 233

Bluebook School Question No. 233 was: (A) Line voltage 220. Must have 40 amperes at a 55-volt arc. Any number of 110-volt, 40-ampere, fixed resistance such as are ordinarily used in projection light source circuits are available. Disregarding variations in such instruments due to age, etc., would it be possible so to connect any number of these rheostats, without making alterations in their resistance, to secure the required 70 amperes? (B) Would you connect two 110-volt rheostats such as are ordinarily used for projection work in series to control an arc taking current from a 220-volt line? (C) Suppose we connect two 110-volt fixed-resistance rheostats in series, and two more in series. We then connect the two series in parallel to an arc taking current from a 220-volt line. What amperage would result?

Gentlemen, I'm real sorry. There is only one name on the list this week. Read his answer and you'll know why. It's the first time some of you fell down, but after all that's nothing to weep about. The question was a puzzle, as I knew it would be. Hundreds of you forgot that a 110-volt rheostat such as is used to control projection arcs, is not really a 110-volt arc at all. It has only sufficient resistance to break down the line voltage, less the arc voltage. Rau and Evans, Oldham, Danielson, Arntson and several others did remember, but hundreds did not. However, no one but a new "school" man, J. J. J. Doe, worked out the 40-ampere connection. The other could not, as he says, be worked out exactly. Allright, boys, you stubbed your toe; rub it a bit—and let's go!

We will read the excellent reply of brother J. J. J. Doe (I misread the name last week and, I think, printed it "Dal") who says, "As to the 70 and 40 amperes, let us try both. First let us assume we want 70 amperes through a 55-volt arc. The resistance of each of the available rheostats is (E ÷ L = R) 110 ÷ 40 = 2.75 ohms. We will not consider resistances offered by the feed lines, terminals, etc., which in such a case are negligible. From Figure 1 we see that we need 2.357 ohms resistance in series with the 55-volt arc to obtain (220 — 55) 165 line voltage drop, therefore must so connect the rheostats as to obtain that amount of resistance.

"After resorting to a trial and error method of solution I am sure there is no possible way that any combination of the rheostats can be made to deliver the required resistance.

"Now let us assume the question means a 40 ampere arc. From Figure 2 we see that to obtain our 165-volt drop we shall require 4.125 ohms resistance, calculated as follows: 220 — 55 = 165 volts, and 165 ÷ 40 amperes equals 4.125 ohms. If, then, we connect three of our rheostats in series and connect this series in parallel with three others also connected in series, the resistance of the combination will produce the required 4.125 ohms, hence we shall get our 40 amperes at the arc.

"Let us check this circuit. The rating of the rheostats is not exceeded. The voltage drop across each series is 165, and since the resistance of each rheostat is the same, the voltage drop of each is equal. It will be 165 ÷ 3 = 55 volts, hence neither the voltage nor insulation rating is exceeded, and we have the problem solved if we want 40 amperes across a 55-volt arc.

"Another combination that will produce the same result is to connect two of the rheostats in parallel, then connect three such groups in series."

(B) I must print brother J. J. J. Doe's answer to this one, too: He says, "I would connect two 110-volt rheostats in series to control an arc taking current from a 220-volt line, provided the sum of their resistances gave the resistance I wanted, and further provided the resultant current did not exceed the rating of either of the rheostats, and provided still further that the voltage drop across either one did not greatly exceed 110 volts. Of course, if the two resistances were equal, the drop across each would be equal and necessarily less than 110 volts. However, if there was a considerable difference between the resistances of the two, it might well be possible the voltage drop across one of them would exceed 110, and it would be inadvisable to operate under such a condition, as the voltage rating of a rheostat is an indication of its insulation strength."

Brother J. J. J. Doe also gave a very complete answer to Section C, but we will set forth the excellent answer of R. and K. Wells, as follows:

"We notice you did not in this instance stipulate the sort of rheostats used with projection arcs, but just '110-volt fixed resistances.' The problem then is simple for the reason that no answer could possibly be given, as the amperage capacity is not stated, therefore the resistance of each rheostat could not be calculated."

Correct, gentlemen! Yet only other one of all the hundreds noted that simple point.

Trans-Lux Plans To Build Philadelphia Reel Theatre

Trans-Lux Corporation has leased Philadelphia property on Chestnut street at a rental of $500,000, where the first newsreel theatre in the city will be erected. The new house is to have a seating capacity of 500, and will show only newsreels and short subjects. Two stores will make up part of the theatre building. Opening is scheduled for January 1, 1935.

The new $500,000 Yorktown theatre, Elkins Park, Pa., Warner house, was formally opened on Labor Day. The theatre was designed by Eugene A. Stopper. Two changes weekly will be the feature picture policy.

Ashcraft Company Moves

The C. S. Ashcraft Manufacturing Company, makers of Sterling Suprex Projections Lamps, has moved its factory and offices in Los Angeles to the Ashcraft Building, 4214 Santa Monica Boulevard.

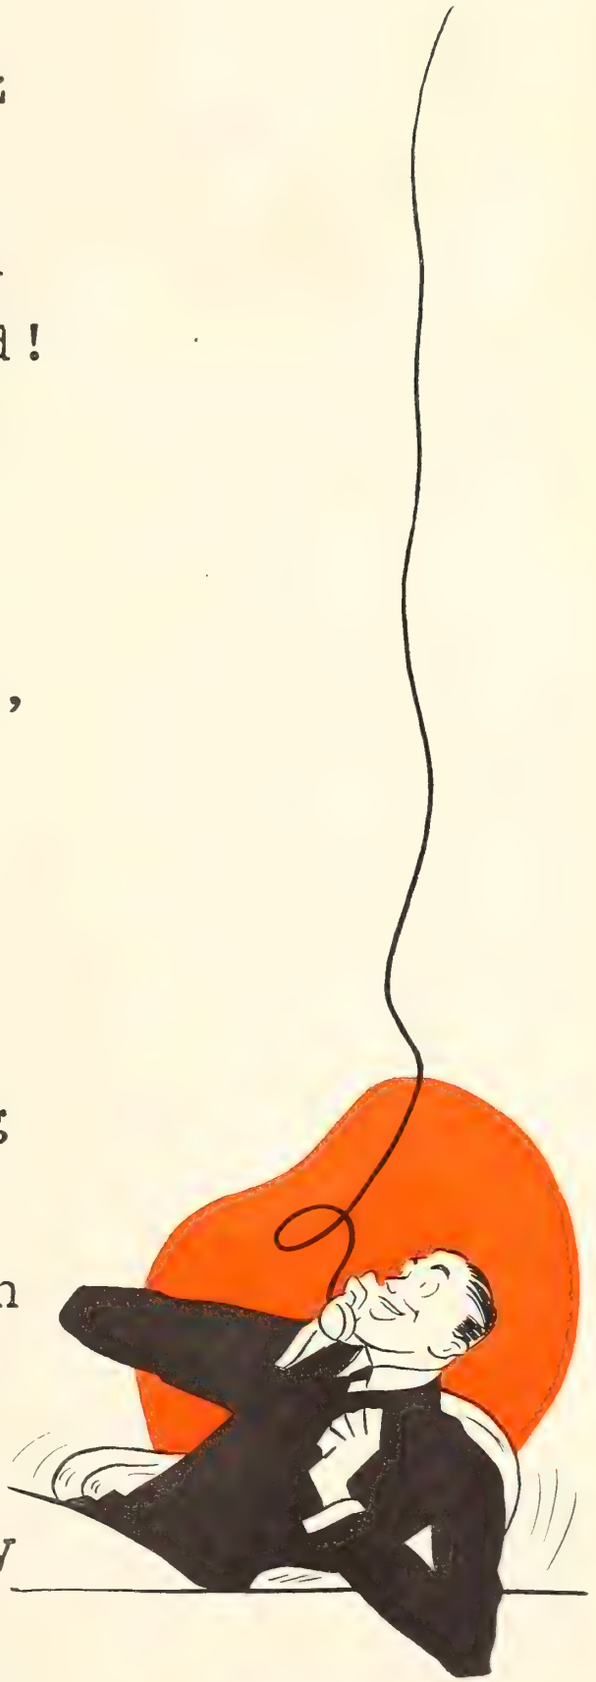
THEATRE PAYROLL GETS 18 CENTS OF BOX OFFICE DOLLAR



Canvass of 1,586 theatres in 17 states shows $20,950 average receipts last year, $403 per week

VOL. 116, NO. 12 Entered as second class matter January 17, 1931, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under Act of March 3, 1879. Published by Quigley Publishing Co., Inc., at 1790 Broadway, New York. Subscription $3.00 a year. Single copies 15 cents. SEPT. 15, 1934

".....so we can show the folks that Washington wire word for word. Listen!....."Despite terrific downpour lasting all day BRITISH AGENT drew tremendous crowds giving us bigger opening day than "Twenty Million Sweethearts","Here Comes The Navy"or "— ——— — —" (that stands for the strongest opposition show of recent weeks). Patrons came in droves in cars and cabs making this gala day for parking garages and taxi drivers. Last performance started with hundreds standing necessitating use of every available bit of space. Warner Bros. have stirring dramatic hit in British Agent drawing applause at conclusion of every showing'. .... You can hear that coin jingling all the way up here, can't you sweetheart? But that's not all. We'll have to have PAGE 5 too.....

"....so we can remind the boys that BRITISH AGENT is the show that has both Kay Francis and Leslie Howard in the 20-star cast directed by Michael Curtiz and that it was inspired by a best-seller that was talked and written about all over the world! And then we'll want to get in something to the effect that 'Dames' and 'Here Comes the Navy' are doing very nicely too, thank you.....and that a dozen more big shows, like Stanwyck in 'A Lost Lady', and Joe E. Brown in '6-Day Bike Rider', and Kibbee and MacMahon in 'Big Hearted Herbert', and Dick Powell and Josephine Hutchinson in 'Happiness Ahead', Franchot Tone and Jean Muir in 'Gentlemen Are Born', and Jimmy Cagney in 'A Perfect Week-End', are coming all in a bunch from WARNER BROS."

MEDDLING EDUCATORS

THE rising tide of movements to have the Government attend to everything brings us this week from Washington word of a project of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers to promote "theatres controlled by local boards of education or city recreational departments, showing pictures financed by the government, if suitable pictures are not available through the regular motion picture channels."

This program, the educators hold, according to the report, should be made a part of the federal relief program.

One may raise the question of about how much relief such a project would afford the motion picture industry, its exhibitors and employees?

The educators would confer a very large favor on the society which employs them if they would endeavor to do something toward the rehabilitation of an archaic and creaking school system. One of the early steps would be to learn enough about the motion picture to use it in the class room as a more effective procedure than the many recent and contemporary movements aimed at carrying their job over to the theatre.

DRIED PEAS

SIGHTSEEING visitors to Radio City at Rockefeller Center in New York are taken on a forty-cent tour of the NBC plant by competent young men who explain everything, and maybe too much. Part of the show is the exposition of the sound making devices that put fiction on the air, including the can of dried peas that simulates the sound of the sea, the brush that imitates rain and the rubber cups that thump like galloping horses.

Showing and selling the glories of Radio City is a service and enhancement of the status of the amusement industry, but exposing dried peas is something else again, an unnecessary detail.

Just as a matter of showmanship, one might wonder if some thousands of hinterland visitors are not being educated to remember dried peas in a can when the artists are trying for a shipwreck effect. Radio has an obligation to the sound end of the show business to help preserve illusion—that's what the customers try to buy.

SELLING THE SCREEN

THE imposing and carefully elaborated campaign of advertising and promotion aimed at the creation of goodwill for the institution of the motion picture now being conducted by Mr. E. C. Rhoden's organization in Fox Midwest Theatres is a far-sighted piece of showmanship. Details of the campaign were presented in the news pages of Motion Picture Herald last week.

This is one of the fruits of the Legion of Decency movement which has contrived to create or awaken an increased recognition of the social responsibility of the screen as the world's dominant amusement. This recognition and intelligent response, in the several places in which it is being made manifest, is in interesting and devastating contrast to the current procedure of those who are betraying their social insincerity and their indifference to the well being of their industry by surreptitious and evasive devices for continuing their sins against good taste and decency.

The Midwest campaign is notable in its neat adherence to its purpose, avoiding the several temptations of headlining opportunity which could have been had by making the copy controversial. Midwest builds by devoting its efforts exclusively to the selling of the merits of the screen.

Attempts to gain publicity attention for product by stirring among the ashes of the recent agitation are not only in poor taste but are also exceedingly bad business, being of a piece with the common petty opportunism that so often gets the pictures into trouble.

THE SHOUTING VIRGIN

BY radio waves and newsreel screen the Hollywood production community is proclaiming its new found virtue and the processes thereof to the world through the bland voice and respectably rotund personality of Mr. Joseph I. Breen, who is the Production Code Administrator.

Thus the motion picture industry, in the frequent pattern of its inept publicity, prolongs memory of its sins by crying its discovery of salvation.

We had thought that the purpose of the Production Code Administration was to take the motion picture industry out of the arena of moral issues. We thought the movies were being talked about too much. Whereupon, when all and sundry are wearied of soul with the subject of the bad, bad screen, that same screen keeps bringing up the subject.

The foolish virgin was the one who shouted about it.

EVER since 1910 there have been periodic waves of excitement over what was deemed the impending era of color on the screen. Now at last color is working its way into a career in motion pictures by way of the cartoons and shorts which give it a real experience ground. Color can creep to where it never could leap.

THIS WEEK - - -

PARAMOUNT IN GERMANY

With a reduced staff, Paramount intends continued activity in Germany as long as conditions warrant, last week declared John W. Hicks, vice-president of Paramount International, returning from Europe. Definite evidence of permanent business improvement abroad was noted by Mr. Hicks. Musical films are especially favored at the moment. . . .

ARBITRATION

Salvaged for Hollywood players has been some $100,000 by the arbitration board, since its organization four years ago to handle intra-industry disputes, last week reported the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. . . .

VETERAN PASSES

Surely a veteran of the theatre was Harry Marsey, who last week died in his native Buffalo. His was the first film house in the city, the Happy Hour, with which he operated the city's first exchange. The Ellen Terry, a legitimate theatre, now a neighborhood film house, he opened 40 years ago. . . .

FILM REVIEWS

Objections by theatre managers, threatening to reduce advertising, led the New Orleans "Item" to discontinue its star system of reporting on films, returning to original criticism, but by the several members of the staff instead of one critic. . . .

BETTER FILMS

Shortly the recently organized Louisville Better Films Council will hold its initial public mass meeting. Working in cooperation with theatre managers, parent-teacher groups, the council's object is film suitability classification. An information bureau provides data concerning films, provides speakers for civic meetings. . . .

MPTO PUBLICATION

Designed as a medium of expression for members, other theatre owners in the area, is the new publication of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, called "Contact." Edited by George P. Aarons, secretary of the exhibitor association, the publication will be a weekly. . . .

GREEK INCREASE

Of 248 talking films released in Greece during the 1933-34 season, a new record total, 53.2 per cent came from 11 American companies, reports U. S. commercial attache K. L. Rankin, in Athens. The increase in the total released reached nearly 30 per cent, since only 195 were released during the 1932-33 season. . . .

"WHITE RATS" REBORN

Recently organized in New York was the American Federation of Actors, a rebirth of the "White Rats" a vaudevillian group which started in 1900, expired more than a decade ago. The new AFA holds the original American Federation of Labor charter, is a means of collective bargaining for circus, vaudeville, cafe and other performers. First meeting was held last week with Joe Laurie, Jr., vice-president, presiding. . . .

TO THE DOGS

The object of a strenuous battle by exhibitors in and about Spokane, Wash., currently are dog races, with local newspapers lending all possible editorial cooperation. Merchants are fighting to prevent their business from "going to the dogs." Leading exhibitors have declared in print that betting has a demoralizing effect on the populace of the community. . . .

BLOCK BOOKING HIT

Objection to block booking was registered last week by speakers at the Western Federation of Women's Clubs convention in Portland, and a resolution passed accordingly. The Legion of Decency was defended. The quality of films may be improved by women, said Mrs. W. A. Burk, since they contribute 85 per cent of the box office gross of the country. . . .

PROMISING NOTE

A promising note of upturn is indicated in the theatre building programs underway in certain sections. In Philadelphia, several new intimate film houses are under construction; in Virginia and neighboring states more than $200,000 is being spent; in Baltimore circuits are adding houses; in Detroit a fall reopening, a new theatre shortly to be opened, point an optimistic way. . . .

STAGE CIRCUIT

To be discussed by Actors' Equity Association at a New York meeting September 28 will be organization of a legitimate theatre roadshow circuit to play 12 performances weekly in small towns at $1 top for drama, $1.50 for musicals. The plan came from Producer Max Gordon, is backed by the League of New York Theatres. Union wage concessions will be necessary for success. . . .

ASPIRATIONS

Unique is the offer made by Paramount to its several hundred non-acting employees, bidding them try out for roles in "Here Comes the Hero," to be produced by the Paramount Employees' Dramatic Club. Director will be James Moore, of the camera department. An opportunity is thus presented for aspiring actors, directors, writers. . . .

RICH COMEDIANS

Annual records of the Los Angeles tax collector indicate Charlie Chaplin still the wealthiest individual in Hollywood, with a property valuation of $3,279,230. Will Rogers, according to the figures released, is the richest landowner in the county, with properties assessed at $322,920. . . .

THEATRE PAYROLL GETS 18 CENTS OF EACH DOLLAR

Eighteen cents of each dollar paid at the box office window by the public is the average spent by exhibitors on payrolls.

This observation was obtained from reports covering the first 17 states to be completely surveyed by the federal government in its first real door-to-door canvass of motion picture theatres.

Outstanding in these reports, which were made public at Washington on Monday by the United States Census Bureau, and which embrace some 1,500 theatres, is the fact that they represent the first wholesale accumulation of actual box office earnings in their relation to salaries and wages paid in exhibition. The principal conclusions were:

1. Admissions grossed during 1933 by 1,586 theatres in 17 of the less important of the 48 states—the first group to report—totaled $33,233,000.
2. Total payroll expenditures for the year made by the 1,586 theatres approximated $6,171,000.
3. Eighteen per cent of the gross receipts was spent on payrolls. In the large cities the average was 21 per cent.
4. Average gross receipts per theatre for 1933 was $20,900, and $59,332 per theatre in the large cities.
5. Average weekly gross receipts per theatre was $1,141 for the states so far reporting. In the 17 cities the average intake per theatre was $20,950.

Results of the investigation will be made public shortly for the remaining 31 states.

SOUTH SHOWING FIRST SIGNS OF IMPROVEMENT

Spending Activity Geared Higher With Benefit Payments and Increased Crop Prices

Encouraging signs of a business upturn are seen at last in the hard-hit South, as "New Deal" dollars sent below the Mason-Dixon line by the Administration for crop reduction begin to trickle through the box-office windows of theatres in that sector, which during the entire period of deflation has been one of the slowest to report recovery. And, too, in the drouth-stricken area of the Midwest, the bolstering influence of federal funds has struck a note that is cheery. The improvement noted in theatre receipts is marked.

From the Associated Press and Dun and Bradstreet and from the Prairie Farmer and the Southern Agriculturist, together with a first-hand study made independently, there came over the weekend verification of the fact that benefit payments for acreage reduction and better prices for the products raised have elevated spending activity throughout the south and in parts of the midwest. Theatres are up front in the list of local business enterprises which reflect the improvement.

Buying New Cars and More Gas

Returning this week from a personal survey of 16 southern and southwestern states, Francis L. Burt, Washington correspondent of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, brought back word of the better business tone. Driving 4,400 miles to talk with local business men and to visit film theatres from the Capital to the tip of Florida and from the Atlantic to east Texas, Mr. Burt reported, "They are buying new cars in the South—and driving them fast, which to the uninitiated doesn't mean a thing, but to those 'in the know' it means that the downward line of the business graph is at last pointing upward."

"One year ago," continued Mr. Burt, "they were driving old cars down South, and they were driving them at 15 miles an hour so as to make their gasoline burn slower.

"But this year the 'New Deal' has been putting a lot of money into Dixie. And Dixie has been putting it into circulation. The spending habits of the South have been elevated.

"It is true that the motion picture theatres in the South are not playing to capacity houses every show. But they are doing well, and one of the reasons for many of the empty seats appears to be the fact that there are too many seats in many towns. Most of them, however, appear to be 'in the black,' and the offers of free cars, which many houses are extending, seem due to the competition arising from overseating rather than from an actual lack of business."

"Even on the fringes of the drouth area," Mr. Burt continued, "it was difficult to realize that not all of the country had been lifted out of the depression. Maybe the tempo of productive activity was a little slower due to code restrictions, but the wheels were moving. In the drouth-stricken counties, of course, there was a sadder picture, but the spirit is getting better."

Mr. Burt learned that while the agricultural sections have benefited most from the Government's acreage reduction plan and the better prices for crops which have resulted, the money is rapidly drifting toward the larger centers.

"And there is one thing more," concluded Mr. Burt. "There is a lot of travel noticeable in the South. A 300-mile drive through any southern state takes one past cars from every section of the country—tourists, not 'tin canners.' Hotels are doing a pretty good business. Feet tired from sight-seeing find rest in a motion picture theatre. It all helps."

Midwest Theatres Reopening

Kansas City film circles point out that a smaller number of theatres are closed than since the depression, that some are reopening this fall and several theatre construction projects are under way in the Kansas City territory.

Surveys by the Associated Press and the larger dailies based on first hand observation reveal that farmers, in the aggregate, will receive a larger crop income this year than in any since 1930. The short crop has created spectacular price increases. In addition, cash benefits from the AAA program and other Government agencies are of material assistance. In Nebraska alone, benefit checks from the AAA under the corn-hog reduction program will total $30,000,000.

Merchants and bankers report almost unanimously that business has improved in their lines substantially, according to an Associated Press report.

The payments being made by the Administration to drouth sufferers and for crop reduction are regarded as likely to overcome adverse economic effects of the textile strike, in the opinion of representative agricultural and business publications.

NRA Reports Employment Gain; Tax Revenue Off

According to statistics released by the NRA in Washington last week, 40,180,000 people were employed in the United States in June, 1934, a gain of 4,120,000 over the low point of March, 1933, and an increase of 2,320,000 over June, 1933, when NRA became effective.

The factory work week, according to the report, was reduced by six hours from June, 1933, to June, 1934; the estimated increase in labor's share in the national income was from 68.3 per cent in June, 1933, to 62.5 per cent in June, 1934, and the increase in the wholesale price index was from 60.2 per cent in March, 1933, to 74.6 per cent in June, 1934.

The total weekly wages in manufacturing industries increased from $96,000,000 in June, 1933, to $132,000,000 in June, 1934, or 37.5 per cent. Despite an increase in the cost of living of 9.6 per cent, this represents a net rise of 25 per cent in the total purchasing power of workers in manufacturing industries, says the report.

From February to May, 1934, business failures are reported as having been far fewer and involving much less in liabilities than at any time during the depression, a reduction of 40 per cent from the 1929 level. The index figure of corporation profits changed from a deficit figure of 6.9 in the first quarter of 1933 to a profit figure of 33.2 in the second quarter of 1934.

Decline in Box Office Receipts Is Indicated

Box office receipts for all amusements—motion pictures, vaudeville, burlesque, dance halls, prize fights and the like—during the fiscal year ended June 30 last, were $684,073.75 under those of the preceding year, it was disclosed this week in a preliminary report issued by the U. S. Bureau of Internal Revenue at Washington.

Tax collections on all such admissions amounted to $13,343,619.94, against $14,027,693.69 in the fiscal year 1933. Total admission taxes from all sources, including tickets sold in excess of the box-office price, free admissions, brokers' sales and roof gardens and cabarets, totaled $14,613,414.42, against $15,520,512.30, a loss of $907,097.88.

ELECTING SWOPE AND THOMPSON ENDS MEEHAN—RKO DIFFICULTIES

Swope Is Chairman of Keith-Albee-Orpheum and B. F. Keith Corp.; Thompson, President of Theatre Companies

Herbert Bayard Swope, one time editor of the New York World, and an RKO director, was elected chairman of the board of directors of the Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, at a New York directors' meeting late last week, in what amounted to a mutually satisfactory settlement of difficulties concerning the relative position of KAO in the Radio-Keith-Orpheum setup.

Those difficulties, which had arisen some time previously, had come to the point last spring where M. A. Meehan, owner of 51 per cent of the KAO stock, requested that that circuit be established as a distinct corporate organization, separate from the other RKO subsidiary corporations. At that time it was reported that Mr. Meehan was considering disposal of his interest to Warners.

The election of Mr. Swope is understood to have brought about the solution of the corporate problem, with the election satisfactory to both Mr. Meehan and the RKO interests.

Mr. Swope succeeds Merlin Hall Aylesworth, who is president of RKO, and also becomes chairman of the board of B. F. Keith Corporation, KAO subsidiary. Major L. E. Thompson was elected president of the two corporations, and of RKO Proctor Corporation, Stadium Theatres Corporation, RKO Midwest Corporation and RKO Service Corporation.

Other officers elected in the realignment of corporate entities which was described by RKO officials as a unification of RKO theatre subsidiaries, are: Malcolm Kingsberg, vice-chairman of the board of directors; I. E. Lambert, vice-president and general counsel; Leon Goldberg, vice-president and treasurer; A. E. Reoch, vice-president in charge of real estate; Nate Blumberg, vice-president in charge of theatre operations; O. R. MacMahon, comptroller.

While Mr. Kingsberg is noted as vice-chairman of the board of KAO and B. F. Keith, Major Thompson and the other officers hold their positions in all six of the subsidiary corporations involved.

J. R. McDonough, former president of KAO and other RKO theatre subsidiaries, who is succeeded by Major Thompson, will devote his entire time to the picture company, as president of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., and associated companies, with permanent headquarters in Hollywood. B. B. Kahane continues as vice-president of Radio and president of RKO Studio Corporation.

The balance of Meehan and RKO representation on the directorate has been maintained as heretofore. The unification of the theatre subsidiaries under Major Thompson finds the entire group of theatres under the direct operation of Mr. Blumberg.

RKO Radio's directorate this week appointed William Mallard, counsel, as vice-president and general counsel of Radio.

ROBERT F. SISK

S. BARRET McCORMICK

Robert F. Sisk was advanced this week from advertising and publicity director of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation to the post of assistant to J. R. McDonough, president of RKO Radio, motion picture subsidiary. At the same time S. Barret McCormick assumed executive control of advertising and publicity in Radio Pictures.

The advertising-publicity structure of the RKO interests has been remodeled so that the advertising divisions of Radio Pictures and RKO Theatres become separate entities, John Aloysius Dowd directing the activities for the theatre subsidiary. Rutgers Nielson is handling Radio publicity.

Mr. Sisk will make his headquarters with Mr. McDonough at the studio in Hollywood, leaving New York shortly to travel westward with his family.

Maryland-born and 31 years old, Mr. Sisk went to RKO in March, 1932, from the Theatre Guild in New York, where he spent some six years as general press representative. He had three years of newspaper experience on the Baltimore Sun, doing makeup and political reporting, and spent three years, from 1923, on the Variety staff.

Mr. McCormick, born in Missouri, was likewise newspaper trained, in Denver. In the Triangle days he wrote for Thomas H. Ince and engaged variously in production activities on the western coast, shifting suddenly to exhibition and the Circle theatre in Indianapolis, later operating the Allen in Cleveland. At both places Mr. McCormick was accredited with introducing many program policies unique at the time. He was one of the first midwestern "presentation" producers. Pathe engaged him for his theatre experience to do exploitation and publicity, a department which he headed for five years, resigning to represent Douglas Fairbanks in the East. He returned to advertising and publicity with Lord, Thomas and Logan, and joined RKO with Mr. Sisk in 1932.

John Dowd has been with the Radio-Keith-Orpheum interests for 14 years, concentrating on theatre promotion from the days of B. F. Keith.

Francis Succeeds Heyl at Photophone

E. O. Heyl has resigned as general manager of the Photophone Division of RCA, effective immediately and is succeeded by J. E. Francis. Mr. Heyl has been identified with Photophone since its inception in 1927 when he was vice-president in charge of foreign development.

Mr. Francis joined Photophone in 1929 and for a time had charge of installations, later taking charge of recording. He had been with General Electric 20 years and was active in developments pertaining to sound-on-film which were the basis for the present technique.

Photophone has combined its recording and reproducing divisions and Mr. Francis will have charge of both.

Presnell Associate Producer

Robert Presnell, former Warner writer on the Coast, has returned to the studio as an associate producer, after an absence of 10 weeks.

GOVERNMENT DROPS PLAN FOR SUBSIDIZING FREE STAGE SHOWS

Plans for National Entertainment Program Dropped, Due to Prohibitive Transportation Cost When Army Refuses Trucks

By FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Correspondent

The alarm felt by motion picture theatre owners over what they fear would be destructive competition coming from itinerant theatrical performances staged on the wholesale by jobless actors under direct federal subsidy is entirely without foundation in fact.

The Administration at Washington never intended so to engage in the show business. "Forget it," was the word passed out of Washington this week to all owners. "There will be no national theatre movement sponsored by the Government."

Misinformation or Propaganda

With the extensive publicity given the subject of free stage shows, Emergency Relief Administration officials this week apparently were of the opinion that either there is a great deal of misinformation on the subject, or else some interests are attempting a little propaganda.

Denying vigorously that there is anything like a national theatrical program under consideration, these officials pointed out that it is up to the individual states to make such use of their federal relief funds as the state governments see proper, and if there are actors and musicians on the state relief rolls it is permissible for them to be organized into companies for the giving of free entertainment.

Administration spokesmen at the Capital expressed the opinion that the subject has been unduly emphasized, explaining that unemployed actors in sufficient numbers to permit the formation of companies are to be found in only two or three states—principally in New York, and almost entirely in the congested New York City zone, and, perhaps, in California.

Many of these companies are operating in and around New York City, where it is known neighborhood theatres have been affected.

No Federal Funds Earmarked

However, it was declared, no federal relief funds have been earmarked for this purpose, nor is any state being given money with the idea of using it for free shows.

The way it works out, explained the Washington officials, is for state or city governments which have received federal funds, to organize any talent available, employing it at the regular relief wage, which averages around $20 a week. Such talent is usually on the payrolls of the state Civil Works Administration agency.

The theatrical companies so organized give performances within the city of organization and, if transportation is available, throughout the state. In at least one instance, two or three state agencies got together and routed shows throughout a considerable area.

Where shows are given in camps of the Citizens' Conservation Corps, and practically all camps are so entertained, the camps provide board and lodging, and the pay of the performers is reduced by an amount to make up for that expense.

Cost Found Prohibitive

Plans for a national entertainment program were at one time under consideration, but it was found that the cost of transportation made such an idea impracticable. Army officials were approached with a request that they provide trucks for transportation, but they refused to do so on the grounds that the War Department had no funds for the purpose.

These plans for a national entertainment program were first discussed at Washington when Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt brought the matter up to the Administration's relief officials after actor friends had sold her the idea that it would be quite wonderful to send theatrical companies out into the hinterland to feed the stage-starved souls who never had seen a stage play. A lot of enthusiasm was worked up in relief administration circles until somebody mentioned the fact that it would cost considerable, whereupon interest waned rapidly.

Up to State Agencies

The attitude of Washington officials is that unemployed actors and unemployed musicians must be taken care of the same as any other type of unemployed persons, and if the state relief agencies believe a good purpose can be served by organizing them for free entertainment in CCC camps, or in public parks and other places, such an action is as logical as putting other unemployed men to work cleaning up the parks.

Officials believe in free shows for the unemployed, but they are not apparently interested in providing the general public with entertainment, possibly having in mind the fact that the Government is deriving a considerable revenue from the amusement admission tax, which undoubtedly would be reduced by any extensive free-show program.

Vaudeville Unemployed Aided

Vaudeville's unemployment ranks in New York will be depleted immediately as the result of an expansion of the eastern circuit of free stage shows for Civilians' Conservation Camps. Some 300 additional dramatic and vaudeville actors will be mustered into 20 units to tour 200 camps in the district embracing New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and eastern Pennsylvania.

Colonel Earle Boothe, director of the drama division of the Department of Welfare's public works section in New York, said last week that 900 actors will be on the roster when these 300 have been recruited. Some are employed in the workshop where sets and props are built and painted.

Broadway expressed hopes this week that the circuit will be extended to play a nationwide route of CCC camps.

It was learned this week that the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, which is generally accepted as having quite some power in local sociological matters, will advocate theatres controlled by local boards of education or city recreational departments, showing motion pictures financed by the Government, if suitable pictures are not available through the regular motion picture channels. Such a program should be made a part of the federal relief movement, the Parents and Teachers hold.

Fox Metropolitan Plan by November

Federal Judge Julian Mack in United States district court Wednesday directed Fox Metropolitan creditor groups to prepare a reorganization plan by November 1. Fox Theatres Corp., owner of all Metropolitan common stock, may intervene to approve or oppose the plan. Judge Mack named Irving Trust Company permanent trustee, and was told Fox Metropolitan is still "in the red" about $2,000,000, despite cash on hand of $2,172,000.

Central Hanover Bank, trustee of Fox Metropolitan $13,000,000 gold note debenture issue, on Wednesday, was granted its petition to intervene, but was prevented by Judge Mack from bringing foreclosure action against Fox Metropolitan properties, pending submission of the reorganization plan. Judge Martin Manton's order authorizing Fox Theatres to effect a settlement of its claim of $4,536,000 against Fox Metropolitan was vacated.

Settlement of the Fox product situation in New York is awaited the end of this week following the return of Sidney R. Kent, president, on Wednesday from Hollywood. Under one proposed plan Loew's would turn over to RKO the Fox output for 1934-35, contingent upon an agreement between the two circuits on disposition of theatres recently acquired in the New York area by RKO. Loew's is reported to be insisting that unless RKO drops recent acquisitions its holdings on the lower east side and in midtown would be threatened.

Fifth Memphis Sunday Showing

M. A. Lightman's New Strand theatre is the fifth Memphis house to give Sunday showings. The plan followed by the New Strand is that of the Warner and two Loew houses, a $50 Community Fund guarantee.

UNIFORM SYSTEM IS FRAMED FOR REWRITING CLEARING SCHEDULES

End of Delay in Film Sales Seen As Code Authority Rules Board Schedule Supersedes Clearance in the Contracts

That important part of the code machinery controlling the zoning of theatres for clearance of product over later runs, which has been in need of repairs for some weeks because of a breakdown due to a lack of uniformity of operation, is expected to be completely reconstructed, finally, by Thursday afternoon, when, at its regular weekly meeting at headquarters in the RKO Building, New York, the Code Authority, it is understood, will officially adopt a new system providing all Local Clearance and Zoning Boards with uniform basic principles for drafting or rewriting schedules, subject to special conditions in the individual sections.

Product Deals Delayed

Up to press time, late Wednesday evening, there had been no inkling as to the nature of the new system, and extraordinary effort was being made at Code Authority headquarters, and elsewhere, to conceal its provisions—this in order to assure its immediate adoption.

The delay in effecting clearance and zoning schedules has caused such uncertainty in spots that consummation of new product arrangements has been seriously interfered with. Both distributors and exhibitors appear to be in agreement in their desire to remove the obstacle.

The Code Authority decreed that hereafter clearance under the code schedules in all cases shall supersede any contract specifications for clearance, regardless of whether the contract was executed prior to establishment by the Local Clearance Board of the clearance involved in the case. Text of the resolution follows:

"Resolved: That clearance for any theatre established by a Clearance and Zoning Board in any decision affecting a schedule of clearance and zoning for a territory or part thereof, shall supersede any clearance specified in any license agreement between distributors and exhibitors, irrespective of whether such license agreement was executed prior to the decision of the Local Clearance and Zoning Board."

Quickened Sales Seen

Speculation immediately arose in sales circles as to the effect of the decision. In some quarters it was believed the ruling will quicken those sales delayed because some exhibitors found that they were given better clearance in pending board schedules than they would ordinarily receive in a contract. Now that they are guaranteed that the code board's clearance supersedes the contract clearance, it is expected they will consummate their arrangements for new product.

In future contracts written by distributors for 1934-35 product it is expected that, as a general rule, they will follow the specific schedules of local boards.

Whether the Code Authority has any legal right to upset any contract between an exchange and an exhibitor by nullifying the clearance clause in favor of the schedule of its own local board was a question discussed in legal circles, especially because the decision affects contracts drawn prior to adoption of a clearance rule by a local board.

However, defenders of the decision argue that it is intended in the best interests of the industry, and, therefore, is in keeping with the spirit of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

When the Code Authority meets on Thursday afternoon to adopt the new principles for drafting or rewriting clearance schedules it will be asked to accept a form prescribed by a special committee composed entirely of distributors, both independent and "affiliated," and both members and non-members of the Authority. This committee consists of: George J. Schaefer, Paramount, chairman; Ned Depinet, Jules Levy, Neil Agnew, James R. Grainger, Al Lichtman, Felix F. Feist, A. W. Smith, Gradwell Sears, John D. Clark, Abe Montague, Edward Golden, Jack Skirball and Harry Thomas—all sales managers or sales executives of large companies, except Mr. Golden, who directs sales for Monogram, and Mr. Thomas, president of First Division.

Some 14 basic principles will be incorporated in the committee's recommended plan, it is understood. One undoubtedly will specify that double featuring be eliminated from consideration in the drafting of schedules. The specification of first runs in a territory based on admissions is also expected to be treated.

The committee of distributors took over the complex clearance and zoning problem a few weeks ago, on appointment by the Code Authority, when appeals to the Authority by exhibitors in the field for relief from new schedules drawn by Local Clearance Boards tied the entire clearance structure into a knot.

Appears on 37 Schedules

Appeals on some 37 territorial schedules are awaiting an answer.

If any schedule is believed by the Code Authority to be impractical, then such schedule will be sent back to the Local Clearance and Zoning Board, with specific instructions to amend it to conform with the principles of the new pattern to be adopted Thursday.

Such schedules thereupon shall be redrafted by the local board and presented again to the Code Authority with the right of appeal from any of its provisions by any person affected thereby.

If in the opinion of the Code Authority any submitted schedule of clearance and zoning is sound in structure and practical in operation, a date for hearing before the Code Authority appeals committee will be set as soon as possible thereafter.

In any territory or part thereof where no schedule of clearance and zoning has been promulgated, or where a schedule is not now in operation, the Local Clearance and Zoning Board shall promptly reconvene and shall, at the discretion of its members, hear individual protests against any existing unreasonable clearance.

If any exhibitor has failed to file a complaint, or has been denied a hearing through misinformation as to the procedure to be followed by the Local Clearance and Zoning Boards, and in any case where the clearance granted any exhibitor is greater for 1934-35 than existed for the season 1933-34, then the individual protest of any exhibitor adversely affected shall be heard by the Local Clearance Board, the hearing of such case not being discretionary with the local board.

No Statute of Limitations

Other divisions of the Code Authority were engaged in maintaining order along different lines. The Authority sent official word to the fields boards that no statute of limitations exists in code board procedure, it being left to the discretion of the Grievance Board to decide whether a complaint on an old violation under the trade practice clauses of the code should be heard.

Said John C. Flinn, secretary of the Code Authority, to the local boards: "If it is apparent old complaints would not serve a constructive purpose, then the board is privileged to throw them out—common sense should maintain in all procedure."

The question was on a complaint filed three months after the violation took place.

A New Phase to "Compliance"

Some few weeks ago, A. G. Smith, of Dickinson's Uptown theatre, in Kansas City, was ordered by the Local Grievance Board to terminate 10-cent admissions because his contracts stipulated a 15-cent minimum—the contract minimum always prevailing under the code. When the practice continued the complainant, C. B. McAleer, of the Orpheum, at nearby Parsons, Kansas, called for an explanation, which Mr. Smith answered by showing written authorization from two distributors permitting him to lower the 15-cent contract minimum to 10 cents. Authorization was given Mr. Smith by the distributors after the board's cease and desist order had been issued.

The problem was turned over to the Code Authority in New York, which ruled that distributors have no right whatsoever to alter the minimum admission stipulated in their contracts once a cease and desist order has been issued against an offending exhibitor found guilty of violating the minimum admission clause of his contract.

The Authority said that such action will not be tolerated because the complaining competitor's contracts are predicated on the price charged by his opposition.

Mr. Smith was to appear before the Kansas City board Wednesday to agree to abide by the contract provision or show cause why film service should not be stopped completely by the board.

Salary Control Clause Dropped

Moving to clear up all doubts as to possible code control of salaries, the NRA at Washington last week ordered indefinite suspension of those provisions relating to socalled excessive salaries and to the enticement of employees, and then took action to protect the "little fellow" by requiring that vaudeville and other performers appearing in motion picture theatres shall be paid a minimum of $7.50 a day by each house in which they appear.

Permanent suspension of the excessive-salary provisions was long expected, since the detailed report submitted by Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt in July received no immediate consideration from Administrator Hugh S. Johnson.

The order regarding vaudeville performers in picture houses was issued as a result of complaints that some exhibitors had been hiring "talent" for a dollar or two, or simply for supper money, and calling it "amateur," thus evading the code, which specifies a $7.50 minimum daily wage but says nothing about the number of performances. Talent also was employed to appear in more than one theatre, while a third evasion was through payment per performance.

In recommending that action be taken, the Code Authority reported that "it appears that certain performers have been engaged to appear in more than one theatre per day and have received less than the code's minimum wage. Also, certain performers have been paid on the basis of the number of performances given, and such payment has been less than the amount prescribed by the code."

The ruling of the Division Administrator provides that "the minimum rate per day in all cases shall be $7.50 regardless of the number of performances; and no performer shall be booked to play more than one theatre in any one day unless said minimum rate is paid in each theatre. This ruling applies to all performers paid in any form whatsoever, either directly or indirectly."

The formal NRA statement, outlining the reasons for suspension of the salary-and-enticement clauses of the code, follows, in part:

"The National Recovery Administration announced the indefinite suspension, by order of Administrator Hugh S. Johnson upon recommendation of Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt, of provisions of the motion picture code designed:

"First, to control payment of excessive salaries for services of executives and other employees; and

"Second, to eliminate alleged unfair competitive methods utilized by one producer in securing the services of actors or other classes of employees under contract with another producer.

"These code provisions never have been in operation. In the President's Order of November 27, 1933, approving the motion picture code, he suspended them pending an investigation by the administrator.

"General Johnson appointed Division Administrator Rosenblatt to make the investigation. After numerous conferences, investigations in California, public hearings in Washington, and an elaborate plan of sending questionnaires throughout the industry, Mr. Rosenblatt recommended the indefinite suspension which Administrator Johnson has ordered."

Mr. Rosenblatt's report to General Johnson filled 12 printed pages and, with attached exhibits analyzing salaries and other data, totaled 133 printed pages.

Thursday's meeting of the Code Authority will determine another important code problem besides clearance—this one involving the new plan of assessments of code expenses to be paid by producers and distributors. Under the schedule originally adopted during the summer, a flat assessment was made against the various grades of producers, distributors, exchanges, importers, exporters and correlated branches. Vigorous protests resulted, on the grounds that no consideration was given to business volume. The new plan is understood to be based on assessments against annual income.

Too, owners of the socalled "small" theatres are expected to be given the relief asked for from assessments under the exhibition schedule.

U. A. Will Abide by Decision

The threatened court action by United Artists to seek a legal interpretation of the 10 per cent elimination clause apparently will not materialize. The company had disagreed with a Code Authority ruling that its product was subject to the clause.

United Artists let it be known that it will continue to sell pictures on individual contracts, and exhibitors will be asked to make any and all rejections of new pictures before a deal is consummated.

Local Grievance Boards Active

Some of the important decisions made during the week by Local Grievance Boards in the field:

In Buffalo, Reliance Theatres' Palace at Lockport, N. Y., was ordered to stop displaying in the lobby a refrigerator which was raffled in the theatre by merchants. Complainant was Schine's Rialto.

The Park theatre, at Hammondsport, N. Y., was ordered, on complaint of Schine's Babcock theatre, to cease and desist from using reduced admission books.

A reduced-admission complaint before the Cincinnati board was found against Paul McKay's Avalon at Montgomery, W. Va., which had been found guilty of issuing coupons which reduced the established admission.

The Chicago board ordered E. H. Christy, of the Elmo Amusement Company, to liquidate his contract with Universal, the distributor having charged that the defendant sought to avoid completion of his contract through formation of a new organization.

In a similar case, brought by Paramount against C. G. Lekander, of Geneva, Ill., the Chicago board ruled that Mr. Lekander's new corporation was not formed for the purpose of avoiding uncompleted contracts.

Other cases, heard in Kansas City, New Orleans, Omaha, Pittsburgh and elsewhere, involved reduced admissions, double featuring "out of spot," "Bank Nights," and other trade practice provisions of the code.

J. F. Rigney, operating the Westport theatre at Kansas City, was found guilty of a third violation of the code's reduced admission provision, and, as a result, the local board ordered all distributors to stop servicing the Westport on September 22, unless Mr. Rigney files a certificate of compliance by September 21.

Film Carriers to Hold Annual Meeting October 1

The National Film Carriers, Inc., will hold its annual convention at the Hotel Statler, Detroit, October 1-3, at which, it is expected, the standardization of carriers' equipment will be planned. Exhibitor leaders, notably H. M. Richey of Detroit and Martin Smith of Toledo, will make addresses. A banquet will be held on the evening of October 2.

New Company in Prudential Plant; Small To Do Four

The Prudential Studios in Hollywood, long closed, formerly the Tec-Art Studio, will be reopened shortly when a newly organized company, American International Productions, starts work. Roy Fitzgerald is president, Oliver Drake vice-president in charge of production, and Willard Ditmars production supervisor.

The company plans a series of features, a series of westerns and a series of musicals. The first to reach the cameras will be "Hell's Paradise," written by Oliver Drake. The second, a musical, will be "The Roustabout," by Rupert Hughes.

Other product and distribution announcements for the new season included the starting of Beacon Productions' schedule of six westerns, starring "Big Boy" Williams, with "Thunder Over Texas" the first to go into work.

Completion of plans for the formation of National Distribution Syndicate, Inc., were announced last week by Arthur F. Beck, who as general manager of the company has just completed a tour of the country's exchange centers. The company will handle individual productions, both domestic and foreign, and will guarantee 100 per cent distribution coverage. Contracts for the first have been closed with Harry O. Hoyt for "Eagles Over the Border."

Fairhaven Productions announced contracts had been closed for distribution of "Ra-Mu" in Hawaii, eastern Pennsylvania and New England.

Jack Stillman has been named head of Soy-Am Film Corporation, a new production unit which is to specialize in Yiddish all-talking pictures. The company has headquarters at 1658 Broadway, New York, and its schedule will include four feature-length films, the first of which will be "The Youth of Russia."

Edward Small of Reliance has signed with United Artists for four more pictures, in addition to the three he has already produced, "Palooka," "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round" and "The Count of Monte Cristo."

Kent Denies Reports Of Fox Studio Changes

Sidney Kent, president of Fox, before leaving Hollywood for New York on Monday, emphatically denied reports of a forthcoming shift in Fox's studio executive personnel. Winfield Sheehan, on his return to the Coast late this month, will confer with Mr. Kent on studio problems, it is understood.

Spencer Tracy Pays Fox for Delaying Film

Spencer Tracy, Fox player, accepting discipline for delaying production of "Marie Galante" for four days, has agreed to pay Fox a sum reported at $25,000, plus half his salary of $2,500 per week for 17 weeks, to compensate the studio for resulting loss. The company has resumed production with Tracy in his place.

Fountain of Plenty

Radio City Music Hall played THE FOUNTAIN and LA CUCARACHA during Labor Day Week. Bursting with modesty, we report in calm tones that its receipts were slightly—ever so slightly—under the six figure mark. And by six figures we mean 6 figures.

The lady reviewer of The New York Daily News, Miss Kate Cameron, gave it high praise and a flock of stars, saying among other things that it was a woman's picture. Which may be the reason for its high business at the RKO Keith's in Washington and the Hippodrome in Baltimore.

Abel on Variety reviewed LA CUCARACHA in last week's issue. He said it was a cinch for the world market, including these still United States. LA CUCARACHA of course is the famous

Don't Let It Bother You isn't the only song hit in The GAY DIVORCEE. Watch for that "Continental", a persuasive number with a lyric that suggests that you kiss while dancing. We doubt, of Franz Schubert, famous musician in his day, went through years of pain, travail, anxiety and labor to get his works heard. Different is the status of the Messrs. Gordon and Revel. Two of their songs are in The GAY DIVORCEE

One of these numbers, the same Don't Let It Bother You mentioned in the preceding paragraph, was first offered to the radio networks last week. The happy networks, gleeful at the sight of so gay a number, gave it 23 coast-to-coast hearings in its first four days.

Surprise! Surprise!

We expected a good picture when the RKO studio made arrangements for Miriam Hopkins to star in THE RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD. We knew the story and knew it was good. But the finished product surpassed expectations. It has the nonchalant humor of THE THIN MAN* and the swell romance of IT

Gaumont British Sales Staff Will Use Fox Exchanges

Extension of Gaumont British activities in the United States will be effected through its own selling force, in charge of George Weeks, with physical distribution through Fox exchanges. Gaumont managers and salesmen will work out of the Fox branches in the field, reporting directly to Gaumont headquarters in the Mecca Building on Broadway in New York.

Mr. Weeks was appointed general sales manager last week. He will assist Jeffrey Bernerd, who has been in New York from London for several weeks, together with Mark Ostrer, Gaumont head, organizing an invasion of this market with British product.

A. P. Waxman will handle exploitation of "Power" and "Chu Chin Chow." Mr. Bernerd said Monday that Lou Guimond continues in his present advertising-publicity post. Added to the staff was Marion Sanders, formerly of the Roxy theatre, who will write publicity.

The company concluded arrangements with the managements of the Roxy and RKO Music Hall theatres to show 14 features at both, starting with "Chu Chin Chow," opening at the Roxy September 7, and "Power," which will play the Music Hall beginning October 4.

Oldtimers to Return in Series of Short Subjects

Roxanna Pictures, Inc., was formed this week in Hollywood by Pat O'Malley, pioneer performer, to create work for veteran screen players no longer able to break "big time" parts. Old favorites will appear in a series of two-reelers. Pathe and Sennett studios in Hollywood were said to have assured the venture of their cooperation, making available most of the sets.

Sales 25 Per Cent Above Last Year Declares Johnston

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, returned this week to New York from a trip to his exchanges with word that company sales are 25 per cent ahead of last year and its 1934-35 product is already 40 per cent completed.

Mr. Johnston declared he was favorably impressed with the upswing of business conditions in general, and particularly in the theatre field. Even in the drouth sections of the middlewest, he said, theatres are not feeling the effect at the box-office nearly as much as would be expected. "On the Coast," he added, "theatres are doing exceptional business."

He heard directly from theatre owners that most of the local code boards seem to be functioning very efficiently. In a few places exhibitors are complaining of delays in settling the zoning schedules for the 1934-35 season, he said.

"Theatres as a whole do not seem to be affected by the Legion of Decency drive," he continued. "While it may be hurting the smaller towns somewhat, the larger cities are doing even better than normal business."

Mr. Johnston said Monogram has completed or has in production 10 of its 28 pictures to be released in 1934-35.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Bored with the summer lull in Capitol Hill capers, Mr. Francis L. Burt, our expert news coverer of things Congressional, decided to pilot his gas-eating buggy through the South and Near West to take a looksee at conditions in the raw. Last weekend he returned to his home in Washington, with his lungs full of dust and two observations: (1) The drouth has caused many farmers to delve into a study of higher agriculture and relative economics, one farmer having penned to a farm journal a letter of inquiry to determine "(a) what sort of a farm is best not to raise hogs on; (b) what type of hogs were best not to raise, and (c) what kind of feed is best not to give them." The farmer explained that a neighbor had received $1,000 from the Government for not raising hogs, while the most he could get for raising them was $400.

Second observation: The drouth was really not as bad as some persons believed. While it did cost the farmers millions in lost crops, it cured hayfever sufferers, having also destroyed the pollen which carries a carload of sneezes to every square inch. The afflicted will petition the Administration to create a division of the Farm Relief Bureau for bigger and better drouths for hayfever patients.

Secrets of the Chateau

(Universal)

Mystery Comedy Drama

Highly theatricalized mystery motivates everything. As is nesessary, however, the companionate elements of romance, drama, comedy, thrill and suspense have their sustaining function, while it makes no attempts at pretentiousness.

The dominating quality is continually emphasized. In the opening sequences, located in Fos' rare volume book shop, it is easy to account for the presence of Marotte, Surete inspector. It's not so simple, however, in the cases of Julia, Paul and Armand. They look like crooks. The motive for the story being established when Paul asks Fos if he would like to buy a genuine Gutenberg Bible, added uncertainty comes through the actions of Julia and Marotte and later her association with Lucien and his urging her to steal that book. But, it seems, romance has dawned for her and Paul.

Invited to the Chateau to inspect the book, the action of the various characters—Bardou, Didi, Martin, Madame, Paul and Armand—follows the established technique in building comedy, drama and suspense. The Bible is displayed and the manner in which it is guarded is demonstrated. That night, preceded by a lot of shadowy mysterious movements, Bardou is killed and the Bible stolen. Marotte comes to investigate. More suspense is created. There's another killing and the climax is brought about when the thief-killer makes a slip. Fos, the bookdealer, masquerading as a professor, is revealed as the criminal.

See it for what it is, building a campaign that dares audiences to identify the criminal until the very end and accenting its amusing entertainment.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Pursuit of Happiness

(Paramount)

Comedy Romance

Here's an audience entertainment treat and a showman's show. It's comedy romance. Newly premised, it is alive with different laugh-stimulating qualities in basic idea, presentation, dialogue, action, historical atmosphere and situation significance. Using a trade expression, it "panicked" the preview audience.

While the idea of "The Pursuit of Happiness" is new, none but proved theatre fundamentals have been used in firmly fixing its entertainment quality. Comedy predominates; romantic love interest, charming and refreshing, motivates. The subject matter is uniquely interesting and intriguing. As it creates laughter, it also makes the pulse beat a little faster. Production atmosphere, historical relationship, direction, dialogue and action accentuate that effect. Thereby light drama is made possible; so is an air of adventure, a tinge of intelligently handled feminine appeal, a combination of hokum and almost satirical realism and lots of sympathy stimulating human interest.

It's a story of Colonial America. A line from the Declaration of Independence—"life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness"—is the basis for what happens. The locale is Connecticut; the time, the early days of the Revolution. Prologued by a pair of comedy tinged situations, the reason for the Hessian mercenaries' landing in New York, the yarn actually gets under way when Washington's offer of land to any deserting Hessian is accepted by Max Christman.

Despite the jealousy of Jennings, who has tabbed Prudence for his own, and the activities of Banks, self-appointed regulator of the community's morals and super-snooper extraordinary, romance blossoms for the girl and the Hessian who wants to be an American. All their affairs, together with all the natural handicaps and obstacles, build to one smash scene —"the bundling custom."

This was a custom, which Banks had sworn to stamp out, whereby sparking sweethearts, fully clothed, to save fuel, got into bed with a centerboard between them, to do their wooing. The manner in which Prudence tries to explain its innocence to Max; his amazement at its potential intimacy, all directed with intelligence, is the show's high spot. Anyway, the in-bed lovers are discovered by Banks; Jennings comes sneaking along, the household is in a turmoil, and only by the arrival of Colonel Sherwood with a commission for Max on Washington's staff are the sweethearts saved from Banks' ire.

For adults, "The Pursuit of Happiness" is entertainment wide open for all kinds of ingenious publicity and exploitation, and it probably will benefit more by word of mouth advertising than anything else.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Comedy with Music

Hardly to be classified as a musical comedy by reason of the virtual absence of chorus dance numbers usually to be found in that variety of picture, this is more nearly a comedy with music, or perhaps operetta, since its story has that atmosphere of engaging unreality generally associated with the operetta.

With definitely pleasant music, and something of a new personality in the lead, the exhibitor should experience no particular problems in the selling. The offering is light entertainment, but entertainment it is. A tieup or two is readymade. The title in itself, will not necessarily draw patronage, but played up in a seriocomic manner it should be used in promotion of the picture.

The personality is Guy Robertson, New York stage star, who has appeared in such stage musical comedies as "All the King's Horses," "Rose Marie," "Song of the Flame" and several others.

His voice is good, and attractive, and he, as a screen player, should be found appealing, especially to the feminine portion of the patronage. The emphasis on Robertson in the advertising should be worthwhile as a buildup for future appearances. The song numbers are sufficiently "catchy" and tuneful to warrant a rebroadcasting in the lobby as a means of attracting pedestrian attention. Irene Ware, Edgar Kennedy and Franklin Pangborn are the other familiar names in the cast.

The story develops into one of those mythical kingdom themes with the princess in distress and the livewire showman from New York who rescues the girl and saves the day. As such it should not be taken too seriously, but as a light bit of musical, romantic comedy. Robertson is taking a troupe of show girls to Paris when he learns that the company will not be permitted to land in France. Kennedy is Robertson's handy man and henchman, who handles much of the comedy.

Also on board is Pangborn, an efficiency engineer en route to rehabilitate the mythical and bankrupt kingdom of Belgardia. Pangborn is attracted to one of Kelly's show girls and attempts to buy her contract. Kelly refuses, but changes his tune when he finds out he cannot land. Pangborn learns his contract with Belgardia is no good, and the two strike a deal. Pangborn takes over the whole troupe and gives Kelly his contract in exchange, each believing he has sold the other a lemon. Kelly meets a strange girl on the ship, whose name he does not know, and the two fall in love, though she keeps her identity secret.

Kelly and Kennedy go to Belgardia and find the country on the rocks, with tremendous liabilities and no assets but an ability to make mops, which no one wants to buy. He also insists that the king force his daughter to marry the elderly prince of a neighboring kingdom in order to cancel a large debt, but changes his mind when he learns the daughter is the girl of his dreams. He goes to work on a huge promotion of the palace, opening it to tourists, and sells mops via the radio. When the suitor for the princess' hand finds that hand firmly held by Kelly, he orders the salesman shot. But the women of Belgardia, in danger of losing their romantic crooner, storm the palace and the day is saved.

The mop-selling idea is the tieup angle, which should be productive. It is a film the family may see.—AARONSON, New York.

Blind Date

(Columbia)

Drama

A drama of the young working girl of poor parents who finally finds her happiness with a young heir to millions, the selling potentialities of this picture are not such as to warrant great exhibitor enthusiasm.

Ann Sothern, whom Columbia is boosting toward stardom, has the leading role; Neil Hamilton plays opposite, and Paul Kelly, Mickey Rooney and Spencer Charters have the principal supporting roles.

The film is more apt to have its greatest appeal to the younger adults, and to these the exhibitor might well direct his selling campaign. Also the film may be expected to have more of feminine appeal than masculine.

Miss Sothern, the support of a poor family, is engaged to Kelly, automobile mechanic. Her father, Charters, is a good-for-nothing who spends his time watching the racing sheets and doing little or nothing which might contribute to the happiness of his family. Comedy is interspersed with the dramatic elements, as it is supplied for the most part by Charters and young Rooney as the ubiquitous small brother.

When Kelly, in his ambition to get ahead with his small garage business, is called on a job and disappoints Miss Sothern on her birthday evening, she, resentful, goes out on a blind date with her friend and meets Hamilton, young man of wealth. His pleasant attentions, and a following quarrel with Kelly, cause her to see more and more of the attentive Hamilton. He asks her to quit her position as telephone operator, and obtains another for her as model in his father's department store. He asks her to go to Europe with him, and when she realizes he means the invitation without benefit of clergy, she returns his gifts, refuses to see him again.

Tramping the streets looking for a position that is never there, she sees her family suffer. Kelly, sensing the trouble of the family, assists by employing Charters as his helper, though business is too poor to warrant the expense. Miss Sothern, grateful, sees him again, but is still in love with Hamilton, who, on a yachting trip, returns determined to marry Miss Sothern. Kelly is hurt through the carelessness of Charters and, when he leaves the hospital, learns through Miss Sothern's younger sister that the girl really loves Hamilton.

An adult film, it is perhaps best played in a midweek position.—AARONSON, New York.

The Richest Girl in the World

(RKO Radio)

Comedy Drama

A lively, completely entertaining comedy drama, with considerable emphasis on the comedy, this picture is replete with amusing situations and rapid, engaging dialogue. For the exhibitor there are several good, if not particularly powerful selling names, an intriguing title, and an opportunity for catch lines and copy ideas which may be used to advantage.

Set in New York, and moving rapidly, the story concerning the quest of the world's wealthiest girl for complete happiness, for herself alone, rather than via her money, the selling should indicate, in not too serious fashion, the efforts of the girl to meet the man. An adult attraction, since adults will be much more apt to appreciate the yarn than will children, the chief objective of the campaign may well be the feminine element in the patronage, with the thought that this will also bring the menfolk.

For the marquee there are the names of Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Fay Wray and Henry Stephenson, with Reginald Denny the best name among the supporting players. The title should come in for a good share of attention. Taking the angle, in the appeal to women, of: "What would you do if you were the richest girl in the world"? or "She wanted romance for herself alone—without her pocketbook," and the like, should be effective.

It is made clear as the film opens that the richest girl in the world is unknown by photograph to the public and to the trustees who handle the vast wealth which is hers. Henry Stephenson, virtually her guardian, introduces Miss Wray to the trustees as Miss Hunter. Actually, acting as Miss Hopkins' secretary, Miss Wray, married to Denny, poses as Miss Hopkins to relieve her of the annoyance of publicity. A young man, engaged to Miss Hopkins, breaks the engagement, and at a large garden party Miss Hopkins, posing in her turn as Miss Hunter's secretary, accidentally meets McCrea, a guest.

She falls in love with him, but is determined to test him to the utmost. She arranges that Miss Wray, who is supposed to be the rich girl, should give McCrea every opportunity to make love to her, in order that Miss Hopkins may find out whether he really loves her. Stephenson insists she is giving McCrea too difficult a test, but she is determined.

Feeling certain, then, that he really loves her though believing her not the heiress, she invites him to her home in the mountains, and alone with him, urges him to propose to Miss Wray, as a final test. To her surprise, Miss Wray accepts him, and the situation is back where it started, and further complicated, with Miss Hopkins more disturbed than ever. That night, however, McCrea accidentally sees Denny walking into the room of the girl he thinks is his fiancee, but is actually Denny's wife. Next morning, punching Denny, berating the household, he leaves, taking Miss Hopkins with him, almost by force, thinking her the secretary.

Lively and entertaining, the film will stand an active campaign, hinged about the title, and may be played almost any time in the week.—AARONSON, New York.

Take the Stand

(Liberty)

Mystery

The screen adaptation of a story by the late Earl Derr Biggers, "The Deuce of Hearts," this independently-produced picture contains elements of dramatic interest and romance, which, combined with the solution of a murder mystery, offer a measure of entertainment.

The book origin of the film, and the mystery involved, form the best selling approach for the exhibitor. The modern journalistic note is struck in the fact that the victim of the murder was the sort of scandal-mongering columnist who had half the notable or notorious population of the city always on tenterhooks, fearing that he would reveal conditions and circumstances much better left secret.

The suspense and mystery are there in force, and intriguing catch lines should be evolved to tie in with the identity of the victim. The title has comparatively little bearing on the story itself, other than the fact that a trial takes place, and the cast offers little possibility of strong draw via the marquee. The familiar names are those of Jack LaRue, as the columnist, Thelma Todd as his secretary, Gail Patrick as the daughter of suspect No. 1, and Russell Hopton, the young detective who comes through for reputation and girl.

The film early establishes the motives of the several individuals later suspect, as they read their morning papers and each in turn feels a rising tide of anger against the man who easily may ruin all their lives. Miss Patrick, daughter of Berton Churchill, wealthy broker, goes to LaRue when an intimation in his column foreshadows a possible revelation of trust-fund dabbling on the part of her father. But LaRue is obdurate. Bradley Page, gang boss, has his own excellent reason, as has a crooner, and Jason Robards, an actor.

At the moment of important revelations on the part of LaRue in a nationwide broadcast, a shot rings out over the air, and LaRue is found dead. The medical examiner claims death is due to stabbing, and not a bullet, a theory on which Hopton works but which the other detectives ignore. Each of the suspects, at the studio, is found with a gun in his pocket, but Churchill's has been fired, and he is tried for the murder. Hopton, meanwhile, forced to resign, goes to work for Miss Patrick, uncovers the murderer, and in a last minute scene in the judge's chambers re-enacts the crime and forces a confession from the murderer. Hopton and Miss Patrick end the film on the romantic note.

The production is perhaps best played in a midweek position.—AARONSON, New York.

Gay Love

Comedy with Music

Something for most publics is provided in this high spirited and excellently directed picture, which proves that British studios are now capable of turning out real audience material. Comedy, melody, good names and snappy treatment are assets which should put it over in America with the aid of a very little showmanship. The picture offers plenty of material on which to build a campaign. Sophie Tucker's name is one selling point; the film backs it with a characteristic performance, put on much more intimately than is possible on the stage.

Florence Desmond's impersonations of Garbo, Zasu Pitts, Mae West and others are another special feature Essentially, however, it is as a sparkling comedy-romance of back stage life, with a strong story interest supported by all-round good acting and production, that "Gay Love" appeals. It would be good entertainment without the trimmings, but the trimmings are great.

Marie Hopkins, a gold-digger, entraps the likable but unsophisticated Tony, Lord Eaton, into an engagement. She has posed as a member of "Society," but is actually penniless and, on her return to London, borrows £500 from her sister, Gloria Fellowes, a musical comedy star, while at the same time indicating that her fiancé can hardly be expected to meet a sister "on the stage." Tony, in fact, meets Gloria by accident when he calls as a possible tenant of her flat, is mistaken for an actor and involved in the hasty try-out of a love scene.

Marie, gambling heavily, has to give I. O. U.'s to an adventurer, and makes further application to Gloria for a £1,000 loan. Gloria, in love with her unidentified visitor, is horrified to discover that he is her suster's fiancé and dismisses him. Unable to raise the money for Marie's debts, however, she goes to Tony and borrows the money. Shortly afterwards she is astonished and delighted to hear that Marie has eloped with an old lover. Tony also hears the news and dashes to the theatre, at which Gloria has a first night. She has been giving impersonations of stars and, receiving him in her Mae West get-up, succeeds in concealing her identity until assured that he intends to take her advice to: "Tell the girl you're crazy about her."

The action is cleverly scheduled to combine Florence Desmond's imitations and Sophie Tucker's performances with the story proper. There is, in fact, no break in continuity; a first class variety show happens as part of the logical sequence of events. It is a high spot of the film, yet no greater in entertainment value than the consistently charming acting of Florence Desmond, who has brilliant support from Sydney Fairbrother as her dresser and Ivor Maclaren as her lover.—ALLAN, London.

Produced and distributed by British Lion Film Corporation, Ltd. Directed by Leslie Hiscott. Art director, Norman G. Arnold. Photography, Alex Bryce and Harry Rose. Sound, Harold King.

Gift of Gab

(Universal)

Revue

Reference to the credits, particularly the list of screen and radio broadcast stars, with a side glance at the title, clearly indicates that "Gift of Gab" is an exploitation picture. It's entertainment to begin with, a colorful revue of screen and radio personalities, but because of the surprising completeness of its motivating story which runs the gamut of comedy, drama, music, topical spectacle and romance, it is also something decidedly novel. While it is done in semi-episodic fashion, there is coherence tying everything together, so that the sometimes almost irrelevant interludes emphatically aid in sustaining the dramatic-romantic motivation.

Gabby Gabney, with the comedy aid of his stooge, Patsy, flops as a cheap John auctioneer and sidewalk pitchman, only to talk himself into the job of announcer on the nationwide Trivers Chopped-Chicken-Liver radio hour. The world tunes in on his programs, and there are presentations of Phil Baker in a burlesque comedy skit, Gene Austin in songs, the Downey Sisters, Gus Arnheim, Ruth Etting, Ethel Walters, the Beale Street Boys in visible performances. Gabby goes big shot, a grand guy to himself but a pain in the neck to everyone else, particularly to Barbara, who has fallen in love with him.

Then he's a big-money news announcer, reciting big sporting events, disasters, and so on, always on the spot just when they happen. Barred from a football stadium, he talks Colonel Trivers into going to the big game with him and outdoes Graham McNamee as he reports the game through a chrysanthemum buttonhole microphone. No one can hold the cocky guy with that triumph under his belt. Comes a transatlantic flyer winging his way to Curtiss Field. Gabby can't be bothered going away down there. He broadcasts a lurid description of the landing, but the flier has double-crossed him by crashing at Hartford.

Fired, Gabby goes to the dogs. In the interim, the Universal players, Lukas, Karloff, Lugosi, Binnie Barns, Chester Morris, Victor Moore, June Knight, Roger Pryor and Helen Vinson enact a burlesque murder mystery.

Then a transport plane cracks up in the mountains. Seeing the one chance to bring Gabby back as a great talking reporter, Barbara, Patsy and the Colonel put him aboard a plane to fly over the site of the disaster. Unable to get close enough, Gabby bales out and gives the world its first parachute description of a sensational news event.

The stunt restores him to grace. The finale is another revue of all the talent that has appeared previously.

Creating wide popular interest for this picture shouldn't prove difficult for anyone. There is so much with which to work that picking out the element that will have the most profitable local appeal seems to be the hardest thing. Just let the patrons know that there is plenty to amuse and entertain them in many ways, by adapting some of the gags that are used in the picture.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

The Spectacle Maker

(MGM)

Decidedly Worthy

Here is a short that can be billed as a miniature feature. It has everything that one hopes to find in a big picture. A good story, fine acting, unusual music accompaniment, fine technicoloring. All combine to build a human interest feature that makes real entertainment. Additionally, there are strong cast names. In gist, the spectacle maker, caring for crippled little Peter, goes to a monastery that he may learn the secret of manufacturing a glass that will make everything beautiful. Given a book, the Bible, he is told to read it and there he will find the secret of beauty. Reading it, he discovers the way to make the glass. Sold to the Duke and Duchess, it does make everything beautiful and his reward is gold. Later, he wants to make a spectacle that will show everything in the truth. Again, he receives the Bible and reading, learns how to make such a glass. The Duke and Duchess, hearing of the new miracle, want it. But when it shows only the truth, bare of all sham and deception, they would have his life. About to be condemned for sorcery and black magic, the stranger who inspired the making of the glass arrives to defend him. An innocent child is told to look through the glass and tell what she sees. Speaking only with the voice of innocence, her testimony defeats the Duke's plans. The spectacle broken, the secret lost, little Peter is cured of his affliction and together with the Princess leads the townsfolk in a merry dance. This featurette is worthy of a place on any program. It will supplement advantageously almost any other attraction. Running time, 20 minutes.—G. M.

Tulip Time

(MGM-FitzPatrick)

Beautiful Coloring

Here, with beautiful coloring and scenic effects, the story of the tulip bulb in Holland and some of the native customs is told. Outstanding are the shots of the myriad-colored tulip fields, creating a rainbow-like illusion. Unlike previous travel-talks this tends directly towards the artistic. It should be of extraordinary interest to nature lovers. Running time, 8 minutes.—G. M.

Pagliacci

Good

Presenting something of a new technique, this subject in the Treasure Chest series offers a scene from the famous "Pagliacci," with capable actors performing the roles in pantomime, while splendid operatic voices sing the arias off-screen. The synchronization, on the whole, is good, and the subject, chiefly by reason of the excellent voices, is rather definitely effective.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Goofy Movies

(MGM)

Fast-Moving Hilarity

Departing radically from the previous numbers of this series as dialogued by Pete Smith, this is a satire, fast-moving and hilarious, on "How to Become a Movie Star." Old stock libraries evidently were ransacked to uncover the most harum-scarum type of stuff that was the movies when movies moved, a la the "Screen Souvenirs" technique. No story, no sense; just a lot of fun-stimulating, old-fashioned theatrics to the tune of modern wisecracking remarks. Running time, 9 minutes.—G. M.

Then Came the Yawn

Good Burlesque

Burlesquing the motion picture feature trailer, as currently used, this subject in the Treasure Chest series is often downright funny, as it exaggerates the caption lines on the usual trailer with its plethora of superlatives, then shoots off at ridiculous, and amusing tangents in the manner of the "meller drammer" of long ago in the motion picture. It is a novelty with a really amusing turn.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Pro Football

(MGM)

For Football Fans

Dialogue by Pete Smith, the Chicago Bears reveal the intricacies of professional football. In both normal and slow action they go through an assortment of bewildering plays, formations and pigskin tricks. An ideal short for the football fans, also one that will go well on a program featuring any of the several football pictures that will be released during the football season. Running time, 9 minutes.—G. M.

$1,008,870 EARNED BY COLUMBIA IN 1933-34

Current and Working Assets Reported Five Times Greater Than Current Liabilities

Columbia Pictures Corporation, controlled by Jack and Harry Cohn, concluded the 52 weeks ended June 30, 1934, with current and working assets five times greater than current liabilities—$6,201,328 and $1,347,-274, respectively—and reported for the period, the best in its history except 1929, a net profit of $1,008,870 on a gross income from film rentals aggregating $11,000,000.

Earnings were equal to $5.69 a share on 168,177 shares of common stock outstanding, after deducting all charges, and compared with $740,240 for the same period ended June 30, 1933, when 167,885 shares of common outstanding at that date earned $4.10 a share.

The company reflected the influence of the business upturn on the motion picture during 1933-34 with an increase in net profit totaling $268,630 over 1932-33, which earned for the common shares an increase of $1.59 a share over the per share earnings of 1932-33. Columbia's earnings were proportionately larger than many of the larger corporations.

Cash on hand was $825,185, earned surplus was $3,151,128 and total assets approximated $7,945,623.

$311,608 in Foreign Subsidiaries

Principal assets reported as of June 30, 1934, were, besides $825,185 cash: Accounts receivable, $441,617; advances to outside producers, less amortization (secured by films), $297,271; inventories, $4,637,254, including released productions at cost, less amortization, $2,744,785, completed productions ont yet released, at cost, $892,773, cost of pictures in work, $607,287, rights and scenarios, at cost, $184,351, advertising accessories, $154,135, and film stock and miscellaneous supplies, $53,921. These completed current and working assets.

Other liabilities, not current, included: Mortgages and purchase contracts payable after one year, $184,068; deposits payable, $50,000; deferred income of $248,600 for self-liquidating advance payments to both foreign and domestic customers; funds withheld from outside producers on account of contingent claims, $52,294; reserve for contingencies, $201,564; stock dividend on common, payable August 2, $54,021.

Capital consisted of $517,830 representing 17,261 shares of outstanding preferred stock without par value, (25,000 shares were authorized); and $2,109,899 representing 169,359 shares of outstanding common stock, (300,000 shares were authorized).

Harry Cohn, president, pointed out to stockholders that during the year the company opened its own exchanges throughout Great Britain, and in line with its policy of not deferring any selling or organization expense in the establishment of new distribution facilities, Columbia had written off to profit and loss some $187,036 upon the commencement of operation of its British exchanges. Appended to the corporation's annual statement to the stockholders was a memorandum explaining changes in the percentages used in the amortization scale applicable to negative and positive costs of released pictures in the year ending June 30th, 1934, and allocation between territories. This memorandum follows in full:

The plan followed in the amortization of the cost of released productions has been along the same general lines in the year ending June 30, 1934 as for the preceding two years; viz., writing off the cost as closely as possible in proportion to the receipt of income from the released pictures in each territory. Adjustments have been made in the allocation of negative costs between domestic and foreign territories and in the percentages in the previous amortization tables to reflect changes in the trend of rental income in the several territories where the pictures are distributed. These modifications are explained below:

During the first half of the fiscal year 1934 the negative cost of features and "westerns" was apportioned 83% to domestic territories and 17% to foreign territories. In view of the income from foreign countries having represented a greater proportion of the company's total income, the apportionment between the two fields for the full year ending June 30, 1934 is 80% to domestic and 20% to foreign, the latter being subdivided 15% to Great Britain and 5% to other foreign territories.

The rental income in "westerns" during the fiscal year 1934 showed that on the average a smaller percentage of the total was received in the first 39 weeks after release than previously; therefore, a smaller percentage of the cost was charged off in the earlier part of the pictures' earning life.

The amortization scale used in writing off the portion of the negative and positive costs allocated to Great Britain prior to January, 1934 was based on the experience of the distributing company through whom the Columbia product was then released. Owing to the distribution in Great Britain having been carried out since early in 1934 by Columbia's own British subsidiary, the rental experience has been somewhat different from that of the pictures released through the former distributor. The amortization table applicable to Great Britain has been revised to reflect Columbia's latest experience.

The 5% of the negative cost allocated to foreign territories other than Great Britain was written off prior to the 1934 fiscal year by applying thereagainst the total net rentals received from these sources. For the fiscal year 1934 the 5% was amortized on a scale based on the latest rental experience in those territories.

The following shows in summarized form the amortization tables used in writing off the cost of the company's product in the accounts for the year ending June 30, 1934:

United States and Canada:

No. of Weeks	Features	Westerns	Shorts
13	55%	30½%	32½%
26	86½	60¼	61
39	96¼	79	78
52	98	91½	89½
78	100	100	100

Great Britain—Features and Westerns:
14% in 3 months; 57½ in 6 months; 81 in 9 months; 90½ in 12 months; 100 in 18 months.

Other Foreign Territories—Features and Westerns:
Write-offs to start five months after release date in the United States.
23% in 3 months; 44 in 6 months; 61 in 9 months; 76 in 12 months; 90 in 15 months; 100 in 18 months.

George Akerson, secretary to Herbert Hoover when he was in the presidency, and later in executive positions with Paramount and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, was appointed last week by President Roosevelt as an associate member of the Federal Board of Veterans' Appeals. The office carries a $6,000 salary.

Dembow Leaving Paramount to Join National Screen

Sam Dembow, Jr., resigned this week as vice-president of Paramount Theatres Service Corporation, effective October 1, to become general manager of National Screen Service, Inc. The post is a new one created for Mr. Dembow by Herman Robbins, National's president. The resignation was announced by George J. Schaefer, Paramount general manager, who also made public Mr. Dembow's letter of resignation to him, which follows:

"As you know, for some time I have had under consideration a proposal to become associated with National Screen Service. Recent developments in the affairs and prospects of that organization have convinced me that I should accept their proposal.

"Because of my long and pleasant association with Paramount I want to assure you that I have reached this conclusion only after deepest thought and with considerable reluctance in bringing that association to an end.

"Accordingly, I am offering you my resignation, effective Oct. 1. If it would not inconvenience you, I would be glad to have you accept my resignation at an earlier date, but I leave that entirely to you. My commitment, however, to National Screen makes it impossible for me to remain beyond Oct. 1.

"I cannot let this opportunity go by without expressing to you personally my genuine appreciation of the fine support and cooperation you have always extended to me. Also, through you, I want to express the same sentiment to all my friends and associates in the company.

"Even though I am leaving, I want you to know that I shall continue to have the keenest and friendliest interest in the welfare and prosperity of Paramount."

It was in 1925 that Mr. Dembow, then general manager of the Herbert L. Rothchild theatre circuit, joined Paramount, when Famous Players-Lasky bought out the remaining three-fourths interest in that circuit. Mr. Dembow took charge of all buying and booking of attractions for theatres operated by Famous. On organization of Publix Theatres Corporation he became vice-president, and with the formation of Paramount Theatres Service Corporation late in 1933 he was made vice-president there. Previously, from 1913 to 1922, he had been on the sales staff of William Fox's distribution organization and had set up many of the Fox Film branch offices.

Frank Freeman Is Dembow's Successor

Appointment of Frank Freeman as vice-president and general manager of Famous Theatres Corporation and vice-president and general manager of Paramount Theatres Service Corporation, was announced on Tuesday by George Schaefer, Paramount general manager. Mr. Freeman succeeds Sam Dembow, Jr. He has been active in Paramount theatre operations.

Block Again Scenario Chief

Bertram Block has returned to take charge of the MGM scenario department.

Seattle Theatres Using Radio To Advertise Films

First run theatres in Seattle are concentrating on radio broadcasts as a means of advertising. During the past week 15-minute programs have been used by the Evergreen Circuit for "She Loves Me Not," playing at the Fifth Avenue; for "Dames," at John Hamrick's Music Hall, and for "Twentieth Century," playing at Jensen-Von Herberg's Liberty theatre. Advertisements by the theatres in newspapers urge readers to listen in on the programs.

File Objections to Paramount Plan

Minority bondholders of Paramount Publix Corporation last week filed objections in United States district court, New York, to the plan of reorganization of Paramount-Broadway Corporation, a subsidiary of Paramount Publix holding title to the Paramount theatre and office building in Times Square, New York. The action constituted the latest development in the Paramount reorganization.

The objections filed revolved about the provision of the plan which called for cancellation of Paramount's $4,822,000 claim against Paramount-Broadway and the guaranteeing of the new bonds of Paramount-Broadway by Paramount Pictures Distributing, Paramount Productions and Paramount International. A recommendation that the Paramount theatre be abandoned by the company is also a part of the briefs opposing the reorganization plan. The plan, scheduled for a second hearing before Referee John E. Joyce on September 25, provides for cancellation of a $178,000,000 claim against Paramount filed by the Broadway subsidiary. Filing of objections was extended to September 20.

Trustees of Paramount Publix asked Mr. Joyce last week for permission to accept a $25,000 offer from the Saga Theatres Corporation, a Paramount subsidiary, for claims totaling $2,006,000 against the Olympia Theatre Corporation and Olympia Operating Company, operating a group of Paramount houses in Massachusetts. The acquisition of the claims was said by the trustees to be of great benefit to Paramount and, therefore, Mr. Joyce granted permission. He will ask the federal court for endorsement.

The Paramount trustees themselves have filed some $5,000,000 in claims against the bankrupt Olympia group.

A second recommendation made by Mr. Joyce was that injunction suits against Paramount be lifted to an extent necessary to permit the corporation and Empire Theatres, Inc., to be made parties to a foreclosure proceeding in Massachusetts involving G. B. Theatres Corporation, whose assets are held by Paramount. It was explained that the proposed plan of reorganization of G. B. bonds provided for having the trustees of Paramount obtain through the Lares Theatres Corporation control of 52 per cent of the stock of the new corporations expected to acquire the mortgaged property.

Hearings of motions in the Paramount Publix action against 12 defendant banks were postponed Monday until Thursday because of the Jewish holiday.

New York Court Halts Picketing In Union Fight

Exhibitors over the country continued this week their negotiations with projectionists looking to the formulation of new contracts, most of which expired August 31, while instances of difficulty, chiefly over the problem of picketing, cropped up in various cities. Lou Krouse, assistant to the president of the IATSE, was quoted as indicating that negotiations this year are less troublesome than in several years, and that no walkouts have occurred and none are expected.

In New York Supreme Court Justice Edgar J. Lauer issued a temporary injunction against New York Projectionists' Local 306, restraining the union from picketing the houses of the Rosekay Amusement Company and Bert Amusement Corporation, in the Bronx and Brooklyn.

Suspends Theatre License

At a hearing last week before Supreme Court Justice Frankenthaler, an agreement resulted in appointment of former judge Robert Marsh as referee to try the injunction suit brought by Allied to prevent Local 306 from picketing theatres of the Independent Theatre Owners Association where Allied operators are employed, and to halt attempts to induce ITOA members to break contracts with Allied. Hearings began Wednesday morning.

License Commissioner Paul Moss of New York last week suspended the license of the Mt. Morris theatre, declaring the theatre had failed to settle a judgment for $1,500 in back wages due to operators, members of Local 306. A local magistrate last week released 31 pickets, arrested previously in front of Broadway theatres, in a test case on the police order prohibiting mass picketing.

No agreement has been reached in pending negotiations in Cincinnati between subsequent run exhibitors and Projectionists' Local 327. Representatives of the factions involved may meet shortly in Washington with Division Administrator Sol Rosenblatt. Exhibitors seek better terms than are provided in the contract just expired, which specifies scales of $45 and $55 with one man in the booth. Some 15 houses are operating non-union and almost all are being picketed.

Union operators in Detroit have won a 14 per cent wage scale increase, according to Frank Kinsor, business agent of Local 199.

Memphis Contracts Extended

Contracts in Memphis have been extended for one year in all downtown houses on the same basis as for the period ended September 1.

In Milwaukee meetings are being held between a committee of 11 exhibitors representing all exhibitors in the county, and representatives of Local 164 to negotiate a new contract. Operators seek an increase averaging 25 per cent.

Musicians' Union 123 in Richmond has suffered another setback in its effort to gain recognition in local theatres, as the court denied an application for an injunction to prevent the employment of outside musicians at the Tantilla Gardens.

At a Seattle hearing the national regional labor board decided against Local 159 of Portland, which failed to establish a minimum wage scale satisfying code provisions and failed to prove the necessity of a substitute operator at the Hollywood theatre.

AMERICANS CRITICIZED FOR INFERIOR PRINTS

Sidney Bernstein, British Circuit Executive, Blames Duped Positives for Quality of Films

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

A grievance of silent days, when complaints of "second negative" quality in American films were common, is recalled by a protest by Sidney Bernstein, principal of the circuit of that name, against the practice of American companies nowadays of making their British prints from a duped positive.

Writing to the Daily Film Renter, which had adversely criticized the screen quality of a film shown at Mr. Bernstein's Granada, Mr. Bernstein said: "We, pleading guilty, must adduce extenuating circumstances. . . . Practically all the renters of American films are at fault.

"The prevailing practice is to import only one copy or, more subtly, two copies of a film and then to trade show one copy and print all copies for provincial and suburban circulation from the second. . . . Everybody is being 'duped' today. Exhibitors are receiving films which are not as sample . . . the public are seeing films lacking in that wealth of photographic detail characteristic of the silent days and (possibly subconsciously) resenting it.

"With the renters hot on their heels, the film printers are being driven to produce cheaper prints, using inferior sections of stock. . . . The matter is one for concerted action among exhibitors."

Question of Print Quality

That British prints are produced, as a common practice, from a negative duped here from an American positive is generally admitted. On putting Mr. Bernstein's complaint before various technical experts I find, however, a tendency to dispute the accuracy of all his deductions. Said one of these experts: "It is not a question of 'duping,' but of print quality. Nowadays it is possible to make a second negative from a 'lavender' print which will produce prints indistinguishable from originals. Of course you can get bad prints from such a negative, just as you can from a first negative, but good prints from a 'dupe' will definitely be better than bad prints from an original."

This view was supported in other quarters. "Mr. Bernstein is better off with good prints from a second negative than he would be with equally good prints from a first negative which had been hard worked in producing prints for the American market," was one view.

Whatever the technical rights and wrongs of the matter, it seems important that American companies should take note of the fact that their print quality is being challenged. One of the most obvious facts about recent British productions has been their technical excellence.

Though discretion is the most obvious feature of the references to British production made by Hollywood executives on "vacation" in London, it is pretty obvious that the solution of that problem is ultimately likely to be found in the policy of production, in London, for America. Straws show how the wind is blowing and, though Dave Diamond may not like the description, he is one of the straws. Back here after a very brief visit to New York, he is declared to be discussing with Columbia the production of two films in London for general release. That's the idea he expounded to me before he sailed to America and it looks as if he may get it over.

Another "straw" seems to be Roland Brown's air trip to Carlsbad. He went to see Louis B. Mayer a day or two after walking out of his "Scarlet Pimpernel" contract with London . . . and it's common knowledge that when Metro starts making British films it wants them good enough for America.

British Production News

Gaumont-British has practically completed casting for "The Iron Duke," first of three which George Arliss is to make. Gladys Cooper will have the leading feminine role. Other names are Fritz Kortner (Blucher), Allan Aynsworth (Louis XVIII), Gibb McLaughlin (Metternich), Farren Souter, Campbell Gullan, Gyles Isham, Gerald Lawrence, Annie Esmond, Donald Calthrop and Edmund Willard. As Wellington, Mr. Arliss will make his British debut supported by a company of the most distinguished artists on the British stage and screen.

British Lion, which has a very strong production program, is shortly putting on the floor at Beaconsfield a version of the stage success, "Ten Minute Alibi." At the same studio "In Town Tonight" will be a musical revue featuring radio, stage and screen stars. "Wild Justice," a mystery thriller, will follow.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

NO. 68—HOURS OF OWNERS WHO ARE ALSO PROJECTIONISTS

QUESTION—My friend and I are two union projectionists employed regularly by the theatres in this town of 27,000. Since February 1 our number of working hours per week have averaged 26 and 30. However, lately, we had the opportunity of leasing a small theatre some distance away, in a town of slightly under 1,000 inhabitants. We propose to run this house three nights a week, with the projection work split up and performed by ourselves, which would average six additional hours a week apiece. Now, what bothers me is our position under the code.

It appears that shortly a new theatre will be opened here, which possibly will give us a 40-hour working week. Would we be allowed as owners to work the additional six hours per week at the theatre we propose leasing, or would we have to confine ourselves to working only 36 hours per week for the new theatre company, and six hours for ourselves, or, could we work 46 hours per week (40 at the new theatre and six each at our own house), until the additional surplus hours had balanced up with the number of hours we were entitled to work (40 per week) from February 1, since which time, as previously stated, we have averaged only between 26 and 30 hours weekly?

I understand there is no labor provisions under the code that apply in towns of less than 2,500.

In the event we were not allowed to do the extra projecting work, above the 40 hours, at our own theatre, would we be violating the code if we had our projecting done at our own theatre by another person, but continuing the actual management of the house and still work the 40 hours for the new theatre company as projectionists?

It appears to me that while we work 40 hours a week for the theatre company our status is that of an employee, and we are within the code, and when we work for ourselves we become thereby the owner and employer, and, in view of the fact that no labor provisions apply to employers, in so far as the length of their own working hours is concerned; and, also, because labor provisions do not apply to the town, because it has less than 2,500 inhabitants, therefore, we would not be violating the code if engaged in both enterprises.—WISCONSIN.

ANSWER—First, it is true that the motion picture code does not in any way control the number of working hours for any employer in exhibition, or in any other branch of the industry. Therefore, the inquirer most certainly is entitled to work 46 hours per week in the manner described by him in the question above—that is, 40 hours per week as an employee of a theatre and six hours per week as the employer of his own house. The very minute that the individual leaves the theatre in which his status is that of an employee, the code can no longer control his activities as an employer. All employers may work any number of hours.

By Executive Order of the President, the maximum working hour conditions of the code and the minimum salary stipulations do not apply to theatres in towns having a population of less than 2,500.

If the inquirer did hire another projectionist to do the projecting at his own theatre, which, as mentioned above, is not necessary, he could, addition to the 40 hours which he worked as an employee projectionist at one theatre, still work as many hours in addition doing the actual managing of his own theatre.

NO. 69—REFUSAL OF EXCHANGE TO ABIDE BY CLEARANCE RULES

QUESTION—I operate a small theatre, with less than 250 seats, having opened late in June. I had heard little or nothing about the code, and took it for granted it was not necessary to assent to it. I would like to know whether or not a distributor is compelled under the code to grant the 10 per cent rejection privilege of the code to non-assenters, and if said right to reject must be a part of the contract in any case.

Also, please advise me whether or not an exhibitor may reject pictures which are not made available within the time stated in the local clearance and zoning regulations—that is, if pictures under the code are supposed to be made available to a certain house within so many days after their first run in the city. What recourse has the exhibitor if pictures are not so made available, especially if he has not signed the code?

This last question would apply as well to part-block contracts as to full-block contracts.

On one of my contracts it is stipulated that the pictures contracted for are to be available within 14 days—which is the "clearance" given the city houses which play before me.—WASHINGTON.

ANSWER—No exhibitor was compelled to sign an assent to the motion picture code—although both assenters and non-assenters must abide by the code—but unless an exhibitor did execute such an assent, he cannot seek protection against unfair competitive trade practices under the code as indulged in by other exhibitors, nor can he file a complaint with the Local Grievance Board against another exhibitor for violating the trade practice provisions of the code, nor can he file a complaint with the Local Clearance and Zoning Board charging violations of clearance schedules.

An exhibitor who opens a theatre after the assent deadline was passed—many weeks ago—has 40 days after opening within which to execute an assent. This privilege is accorded all new companies.

However, it is not necessary for an exhibitor to have signed an assent in order to be eligible for the 10 per cent rejection or elimination privilege of the code. But, if any non-assenter seeks to take advantage of this 10 per cent elimination privilege, then he must pay to the Code Authority the assessment for code expenses which is levied against such exhibitor (and against other such non-assenters and aganst all assenters) who so benefit by the rejection privilege of the code.

As soon as the exhibitor notifies the distributor that he desires to take advantage of the code's 10 per cent elimination privilege, then the distributor so informs the Code Authority in New York and the Code Authority forwards a bill for the assessment to the exhibitor.

Also, in order to obtain the benefit of the 10 per cent rejection privilege, an exhibitor must have purchased from the distributor all of the pictures offered at one time to the exhibitor by that distributor. In explanation, if a distributor offers an exhibitor at one time some 40 pictures and the exhibitor purchases 30 and rejects the others, or any part of them, then such exhibitor is not entitled to the rejection privilege. But, if an exhibitor accepts the entire group of pictures offered by the distributor at one time and the distributor returns at another time with additional pictures, and the exhibitor refuses to purchase such additional product, then the exhibitor's right to reject 10 per cent of the original 40 pictures still stands on the 40.

The right of rejection under the code does not have to be a part of the sales contract between the distributor and an exhibitor.

Regarding the questions involving clearance: If any existing Local Clearance and Zoning Board schedule specifies that a particular theatre shall have product made available for playing within a certain number of days after the previous run, and the exchange does not make such picture available within the specified time, then the exhibitor has a right to file a complaint against the distributor with the Local Clearance and Zoning Board located in the key city in the territory in which such exhibitor operates. However, only assentors can file such complaints. Non-assentors may file protests on a zoning plan when it is drafted, but they may not file any complaints when it is enacted.

However, if, as stated in the inquirer's letter, one of his contracts stipulates that the pictures contracted for are to be available within 14 days after the city houses, and the exchange does not make such pictures available under such a 14-day contractual stipulation, then it is a breach of contract and the exhibitor has a right either to bring the case to arbitration—if the contract calls for arbitration—or he has the right to bring the case to a regular court.

Circuits Carry On Music Tax Fight

With affiliated theatres and large independent circuits apparently carrying the load of financing a legal fight against the increased music tax to be placed in effect October 1 by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, daily meetings were being held in New York this week by the exhibitors' emergency committee with George Z. Medalie, former U. S. district attorney engaged as the exhibitors' counsel, but no definite action had been taken.

Allied States Association had not participated in the penny a seat contribution plan for waging the court action, it was indicated, nor had the Independent Theatres Owners' Association nor the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. Nevertheless, Walter Vincent, committee chairman, declared sufficient funds would be available.

Allied, the ITOA and the TOCC first had indicated refusal to contribute to the exhibitors' fight when the Federal Government filed an antitrust suit against the Society demanding an injunction to bar any new agreements or renewals of old agreements for music royalty payments under the present system and dissolution of the system.

Exhibitor counsel was understood to be in conference in Washington Wednesday with the Attorney General's office and Justice Department concerning incorporating the exhibitor suit against ASCAP with that of the Government. It was understood the Government action will cover the exhibitor situation, and may result in a consent decree under which the society would drastically revise its methods. E. C. Mills, ASCAP's general manager, said in New York the society "won't consent to any decree."

Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, is to address the MPTO of North and South Carolina September 19 on the forthcoming music tax increase at a meeting in Charlotte. Charles Williams, president of the Nebraska MPTO, has issued a call to a gathering of Nebraskans and Western Iowans at Omaha September 20.

Fred Mordaunt Hall has resigned as motion picture editor of the New York Times, effective at the end of this week. Mr. Hall's association with the Times has been one of the longest of any of the Times Square critics of the motion picture or the drama, starting some 12 years ago.

Admitting that there might be some truth to Broadway reports that he would join one of the motion picture companies, Mr. Hall said, however, that he had not definitely made any arrangement.

After serving in New York as correspondent for the Evening Standard, of London, and later as member of the editorial staff of the New York Herald, before it was consolidated with the Tribune, Mr. Hall traveled to London in connection with the British activities of Fox Film, from 1919 to 1922. The following year he joined the Times. His successor has not been announced.

SUMMER SLUMP TAKES TOLL OF PARIS HOUSES

Revivals Featured at the Top Theatres; GFFA Ceases All Payments, May Reorganize

By PIERRE AUTRE
Paris Correspondent

Since the middle of June an early, hot summer plus a heat wave has nearly stopped all the cinema business in Paris. In the chief theatres of the boulevards and the Champs Elysées (first run theatres), they are showing "summer" pictures or revivals of old successes.

A few good features are going on: the French picture "Lac Aux Dames" (from Vicky Baum's novel), which has started its eleventh week at the Colisée; "Le Scandale" ("The Scandal," from Henry Bataille's play), in its sixth week at the Marivaux-Pathé, and "Le Train de 8 H. 47"; a popular film which is in its tenth week at the Moulin-Rouge-Pathé.

American talkers now showing in Paris are: "It Happened One Night," fifteenth week at the Ermitage Pathé; "Little Women," thirteenth week at the Edouard VII; "Sons of the Desert," eighth week at the Madeleine-MGM; "Crime Doctor," eighth week at the small cinema, Club d'Artois; "Death Takes a Holiday," fourth week at the Lord Byron; "Broadway Thru a Keyhole," seventh week at the Studio Universel; "You're Telling Me," eleventh week at the small Studio 28; "Massacre," second week at the Cinéma Marbeuf; "Female" and "The Kennel Murder Case," at the Apollo.

Shift Paramount Theatre Policy

The Paramount theatre is showing every week a new French picture generally produced by an independent, but a new policy will start with the opening of the new season in September. The theatre will return to its former policy with a ballet and Paramount pictures. These will include French talkers made in Paris at the Paramount studios and released through Paramount, and American productions of Paramount suitable for French audiences which will be shown in original or dubbed versions. Re-opening of the season will feature "The Scarlet Empress," dubbed in French.

The two outstanding successes of the moment are still "Le Train de 8 H. 47" and "Little Women." In three months "Little Women" has made $100,000 at the Edouard VII Cinema, which is unusually good for a 600-seat theatre with three shows daily.

RKO Radio - Tobis Agreement

Harry Leasim, manager of the French branch of RKO Radio pictures, has signed an agreement with Georges Loureau, manager of the French Producing and Distributing Company, Films Sonores Tobis. This company, which has produced the pictures of René Clair, will dub and release in France a number of RKO Radio pictures. RKO Radio will release its American films only for first run.

The Gaumont-Franco Film-Aubert Company (G. F. F. A.) has ceased all payments. This has been expected for a long time. The former company, Gaumont, established in 1906, had been very prosperous until 1930, when it consolidated with Franco-Film Aubert. In 1931, the consolidated company was without money, owing about 230 million francs to the Banque National de Crédit. The result was the bankruptcy of the bank, which was reestablished after intervention by the French government.

Since that time, GFFA has been in a bad way, increasing its deficit every year. These losses were paid by the bank with the government's money so that GFFA losses were really paid for by the taxpayers. For a time the government has thought to take over the affairs of Gaumont to establish a National Cinema. Socialist deputies had hoped to take a monopoly of the cinema industry.

The new national government which has had the power since February 6, has dropped GFFA and now the company has stopped all payments.

May Mean Reorganization

It is said, in official places, that this is the first step in a possible reorganization. The company owns large studios in Paris and Nice, a circuit of 35 cinemas in Paris and suburbs, among them the giant 4,500-seat Gaumont Palace in Paris. In March, 1934, GFFA had taken over the Haik Theatres after the bankruptcy of Jacques Haik. Those included the atmospheric Rex with 4,000 seats and the Olympia, both in Paris. These houses are still open, but are showing only revivals of old GFFA pictures or foreign films dubbed in French, with the exception of dubbed Fox pictures showing at the Rex.

It has been said that MGM had tried to get the company. Some French industrial companies and financial groups are reported thinking of it. An early decision by the government is expected.

British Film Shooting in Paris

The British director, Jack Raymond, in Paris, has shot exteriors for the British and Dominions picture, "The Milky Way," from the play by the late Alfred Savoir, French author. The leading masculine role is played by the British actor, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, and the feminine lead by the French star, Mary Glory, who will be seen for the first time in a British talker. Monty Banks is directing for the British firm, Vogue Films, a dramatic circus story called "18 Minutes." Gregory Ratoff is the author and star. The picture is being made in Paris at the Winter Circus. In it are Richard Bennett and the British actors, John Loder and Benita Hume.

With the summer and the holidays, the story of the quota seems to have been forgotten for a time. The industry is thinking very seriously of fighting against excessive taxes which disturb the business. The finance minister will do nothing about it before the fall. Many exhibitors plan to close their houses as a measure of protest.

Film Golfers at Omaha Will Tee Off September 21

Exhibitors in the Omaha territory, branch managers and salesmen will join in a stag golf tournament September 21. In charge are D. V. McLucas, United Artists branch manager, and A. M. Avery, RKO manager.

Tri-State Meets October 7

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee will have their semiannual convention October 7 and 8, it was announced from Memphis.

PRODUCERS EXPANDING FACILITIES
PLAYERS' EYES ON LONDON FIELD
UNDERSTANDING PRODUCTION CODE
EIGHT FILMS FINISHED, FOUR BEGUN

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

Considerable expansion of Hollywood studio production facilities is underway. A need, felt for some time, for additional film vaults and dressing room space, has been amplified in present plans by several producers for more space for other departments.

Columbia, which already has completed a new $30,000 building to house the electrical and paint departments has set plans calling for expenditure of $300,000. Contemplated are a seven-story building for casting offices, property department, writers and directors; a three-story building for dressing rooms; an electrical plant, and two double sound stages. The short subject department has expanded to the point of necessary utilization of the California Studios adjacent to the Columbia plant.

Under the supervision of Fred Pelton, studio manager, MGM is nearing completion of an extensive building program which includes a building to house suites for stars, an administration building for executive offices, an emergency hospital, dental office and fire station. The commissary and casting department buildings are being remodeled, and new storage vaults are planned.

Universal recently completed two sound stages. RKO expanded its wardrobe facilities and constructed 20 new directors' offices. A film laboratory is planned. Paramount has completed one building designed for dressing rooms and offices, and another to house the advertising and publicity department.

Fox has finished construction on one new stage and additional film storage vaults. Warner recently completed a new writers' building and is now adding 16 offices thereto.

Eye to England

Ever since the appearance of "The Private Life of Henry the VIII" from England, Hollywood has cocked an interested eye in the direction of English production. Among those known to American films and fans now working in England are: Leslie Howard, Nigel Bruce, Bramwell Fletcher, photographers Hal Rosson and Ernest Palmer, Zelma O'Neal, Helen Chandler, Allan Vincent, Lili Damita, directors Alexandra Korda, Rowland Brown, and Thornton Freeland, William Gargan, Jan Kiepura, Nina Mae McKinney, Gregory Ratoff, Benita Hume, Katherine Sergava, Richard Bennett, producer Irving Asher, and director Monty Banks.

Among the artists now in Hollywood who have received offers to appear in English pictures in the coming year are: Warner Baxter, Charles Laughton, Herbert Marshall, Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon, Kay Francis, Sally Eilers, Elizabeth Allan, Marian Nixon, and Reginald Owen.

From England to America in the past year have come Henry Wilcoxen, Binnie Barnes, Frank Lawton, Hugh Walpole, John Paddy Carstairs, Evelyn Laye, Madeline Carroll and Dr. Mordaunt Shairp.

That sex is not to be eliminated from films, that vitality and life are not to be expurgated from productions, was clearly evident to rival producers, press and creative workers who came to preview Paramount's "Pursuit of Happiness" at the Westwood Village theatre. The picture was passed by the Production Code Administration and given seal 178.

Based on the old New England custom known as "bundling," practiced during Revolutionary days, it depicts the "sparking" of two sweethearts during the cold winter nights. In order to save firewood, the man and maid got into bed with their clothes on, to whisper their sweet nothings across a center-board fence, which divided the bed and separated them.

Poking fun at this old practice, Paramount shrewdly played the film for laughter and romance, with the audience hugely enjoying the robust fun.

Today, Hollywood seems more aware of the criteria employed by Joe Breen in judging this type of film than at any time since producers agreed to self-regulation.

All along it had been stated that "good taste" would be the yardstick and "Pursuit of Happiness," coming within that category, offered concrete evidence of the basis of approval.

Hollywood had been crying before it had been hit.

Independent in First-Run

For the first time in many years a first-run house in downtown Los Angeles has booked an independent production. Mascot's "Young and Beautiful" opened this week at the RKO Hillstreet with a real premiere, at popular prices. There were the usual lights and a master of ceremonies in the person of Joseph Santley. Picture folk attending included William Haines, Judith Allen, Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon, Sally Blane and Dick Powell.

Last week Monogram's "Girl of the Limberlost" opened at the Broadway theatre, a first-run house, in Portland.

Eight Finished in Week

Clearing the decks for intense fall and early winter activity, Hollywood completed eight features last week, but only four new productions were placed before the cameras. Radio completed two; the others came from Columbia, MGM, Paramount, Goldwyn, Universal and Fox. The four new pictures were equally divided among Fox, Warner, Paramount and Radio.

Radio's finished pair include a drama and a comedy. The first, "Wednesday's Child," adapted from a stage play of the same title, features Frankie Thomas, Karen Morley, Edward Arnold, Robert Shayne and Shirley Grey. Different from their usual brand but still a comedy is the Wheeler and Woolsey vehicle, "Kentucky Kernels."

Columbia's "Part Time Lady," formerly titled "Orchids and Onions," a romance tinged drama of two women, features Carole Lombard, May Robson, Roger Pryor, Walter Connolly and Katherine Howard. At MGM, "Biography of a Bachelor Girl," a comedy romance drama, was completed. In this Ann Harding and Robert Montgomery are starred, with Edward Everett Horton, Edward Arnold, Una Merkel and Charles Richman featured.

"Ready For Love," Paramount romance, features Ida Lupino, Dick Arlen, Marjorie Rambeau, Trent (Junior) Durkin and Beulah Bondi. "Kid Millions," Eddie Cantor picture completed by Goldwyn, is a musical comedy extravaganza The support includes Ann Sothern, George Murphy, Block and Sully, Berton Churchill, Warren Hymer and the Goldwyn Girls.

At Universal the completed picture is "Great Expectations," an adaptation of a Charles Dickens novel. It features Henry Hull, Phillips Holmes, Jane Wyatt, Florence Reed, Alan Hale and Jackie Searl. At Fox was completed "365 Nights In Hollywood," a comedy satire on the town, its industry and folk, featuring Alice Faye, James Dunn, Mitchell and Durant, Grant Mitchell and Frank Melton.

Radio started "The Little Minister," the James M. Barrie story. Katharine Hepburn is starred, with John Beal and Alan Hale heading the support. Warner began work on "Sweet Adeline," a musical romance of the Gay Nineties era, in which Irene Dunne, Nydia Westman, Ned Sparks, Hugh Herbert, Joseph Cawthorn and Donald Wood will be seen.

Fox is teaming Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe again in "East River," with Marjorie Rambeau and Ruth Peterson in principal support. At Paramount, another comedy topical of the W. C. Fields personality got underway, tentatively titled "Back Porch." Baby LeRoy is costarred with the comedian, and Jean Bouveral, Katherine Howard and Tammany Young are featured.

MARIE GALANTE

Fox-Sheehan

Many features of this production are of unusual showmanship value. The yarn itself, essentially a dramatic romance, has more than ordinary timely and topical significance. The motivating qualities are portrayed against the Panama Canal, today's political cross-roads, the scene of intrigue, espionage and conspiracy that any day may be the world's headlines. A new personality, who seems to have all the potentialities for popularity, is featured. Several familiar screen names are included as well as others brand new. In production, emphasizing the importance of the Canal, the recent passage of the U. S. Fleet is shown.

In the story, a shanghaied, lonely girl, stranded in Panama, unwittingly and innocently plays an amazing role in world politics, international intrigue and conspiracy. The Jacques Deval novel, a Prix de Rome prize-winner, has been a sensational seller throughout the world. The screen play is by Reginald Berkeley, remembered for his association with "Cavalcade," "Carolina" and "The World Moves On." Direction is by Henry King, who made "State Fair" and "Carolina."

A French miss, Ketti Gallian, is the new personality, a sensation on the Continent. Months have been devoted to teaching her all the intricacies of speech and screen technique. Spencer Tracy, last in "Now I'll Tell" and "Looking For Trouble," has the opposite lead. Of the known names featured, Ned Sparks currently is in "Down To The Last Yacht" and "Servant's Entrance": Helen Morgan, the blues singer of stage, radio and nightclub note, was seen in "You Belong To Me." Leslie Fenton has been seen in many pictures; Arthur Byron appeared in "Rothschild" and "Fog Over Frisco"; Jay C. Flippen, in quite a few pictures, is better known via radio broadcasting; Frank Darien has been in the recent Irvin S. Cobb shorts and Stepin Fetchit is well known. Of the newcomers Seigfried Rumann was seen in "World Moves On" and "Servants' Entrance." Tito Coral, a concert stage singer, is new to pictures.

While not a musical, there are four or five songs, by several composers and lyricists, which are sung by Miss Gallian, Helen Morgan, Flippen and Coral. Glamorous girl groupings constitute the atmospheric background.

MUSIC IN THE AIR

Fox-Pommer

Analysis of this production clearly indicates much in every phase to merit genuine showmanship enthusiasm. As a play, "Music In The Air" has been a success on both continents, running nearly a year in New York and still going strong in Chicago after four months. The title has in intriguing tone. The story is hectic comedy romance, moving to the tempo of music written by two of America's foremost modern composers, Jerome Kern ("Cat And The Fiddle") and Oscar Hammerstein, 2nd.

In the picture, Gloria Swanson makes her first American appearance since "Tonight Or Never," although in the interim she has made a British picture, "Perfect Understanding." John Boles shares the starring honors with her. Featured are Douglass Montgomery, last in "Little Women" and "Little Man, What Now?," and Jane Lang, a protege whom Fox has had under cover for two or three years. Supporting players include Al Shean, surviving member of the famous vaudeville team, Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Shean, making his screen debut; Reginald Owen, starred with Dolores del Rio in "Madame du Barry" and currently in "The Human Side;" Joseph Cawthorn, Hobart Bosworth, Sara Haden, Roger Imhof, seen in recent Rogers pictures; Jed Prouty and Christian Rub, who was featured in "Little Man, What Now?"

For the story, which is an explosive comedy romance of a temperamental prima donna and her equally irascible leading man and lover, whose affair becomes complicated by two young folk, Fox brought to this country Eric Pommer, noted European producer, to make the show, and his co-worker in many UFA successes, Joe May, to direct. As it is a story of the theatre and theatre folk, dances were arranged and directed by Jack Donohue, who was associated with the play, and one number, Schulplattler, a Bavarian folk dance, is to be strongly featured.

Its showmanship is that which emphasizes gay comedy, romantic love interest, heart-tingling music and lavish spectacle.

IMITATION OF LIFE

Universal

This story has two phases, both dealing with unusual situations. It's a character drama of two women of different color and their children; a dramatic romance and a social race study. On the surface it should have a strong appeal to women. The original is by Fannie Hurst, noted authoress, whose recent screen credits include "Symphony of Six Million" and "Back Street." The screen adaptation is by William Hurlburt. It is being directed by John M. Stahl, whose specialty is this type of material, as "Seed," "Back Street" and "Only Yesterday" will attest.

Although but few persons carry the story thread, a large cast is listed. The leads are Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Ned Sparks, Louise Beavers, Rochelle Hudson and Fredi Washington. The support includes Alan Hale, Henry Kolker, Paul Porcasi, Henry Armetta, Wyndham Standing, Franklin Pangborn, Joyce Compton and Gay Seabrooke, and many others.

Different in many ways, it is the life drama of two women, one white (Claudette Colbert), the other (Louise Beavers) black. Poverty welding their friendship, they advanced to riches through the help of Ned Sparks. As a business woman Miss Colbert falls in love with William, only to discover that he is loved by her daughter, Rochelle Hudson. Along with her, Louise Beaver's tragedy is to learn that her child, Fredi Washington, hates being a negro girl. Disillusionment is the lot of all. The heartbroken Negro mother dies. Miss Colbert, despite the pleas of her daughter, sends William away. The Negress is satisfied to be a maid in Miss Colbert's home.

The potential entertainment and showmanship of this story is something that the screen seldom has known. The straight dramatic romance is not new, but in the analysis of the almost-white black girl, who had nothing in common with her own race, is something both unusual and daring. It indicates that it will demand showmanship testing the ability of the most astute.

THE PAINTED VEIL

MGM

This is a love story of a woman and two men, not a novel premise at first glance, but something of unusual importance from a showmanship viewpoint when all facts are considered. Only a quick resume of what it affords in the way of interest creating possibilities should be necessary to establish its potential commercial merit.

Primarily and acknowledging the status of the Greta Garbo box office power, it is the type of story with which to appeal to regain the legion of followers which because of recent pictures has seemed to slip away. The original story is by Somerset Maugham, whose current "Of Human Bondage" is a popular success. The screen play is by John Meehan, scenarist of "Sadie McKee" and "Let's Talk It Over." Richard Boleslavsky, the director, made "Rasputin and The Empress," "Men In White" and "Operator 13."

The cast supporting Miss Garbo is of more than ordinary class. The men who made her life a vivid drama of romance are Herbert Marshall, whose latest picture is "Riptide," and George Brent, currently in "Stamboul Quest" and "Desirable." In support are Warner Oland (Charlie Chan); Jean Hersholt who was seen in "Men in White" and "Cat and Fiddle;" Beulah Bondi, featured in "Finishing School" and "Registered Nurse;" Katherine Alexander, remembered for "Operator 13" and one of the outstanding players in the forthcoming "Barretts Of Wimpole Street"; Cecilia Parker, lead in many George O'Brien (Fox) pictures, Billy Bevan and Key Luke, a newcomer.

With dramatic quality paralleling that of "Arrowsmith," Miss Garbo, harried by her mother, marries Brent almost in self-defense. The scene shifts to Hong Kong. Her husband, a physician engrossed in his work, has little time for romance. With Marshall, she finds an outlet for her emotions. Deserted by him, seeking solace, even death, she goes with her husband into epidemic-infested China. In his sacrifice for humanity, she finds a great and sympathetic understanding that finally bursts into perfect love.

In story quality, dramatic and romantic content, novel locale and name values, to which must be added the intriguing title tone, the showmanship of this production is readily evident.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN

Warner

The substance of this story, dramatically dealing with a vital present social and business condition and consequently of unusual human interest, is the key to its showmanship potentialities. Topical because the situation which motivates it is familiar, it is the story of four boys graduated from college in the depression era, confident that the world will be theirs, only to find that the things they anticipated are not there and that the struggle for existence, happiness and culmination of ideals is a grim and awesome thing.

The original is by a college boy, Robert Lee Johnson. His screen credits include participation in the scripts of "Huddle" and "Tarzan And His Mate." In colaboration with Eugene Solow, who worked on "Return Of Terror" and "Fog Over Frisco," Johnson also did the screen

PUBLIC OPINION

This is the story of Columbia's opening picture on the new year's program.

Every now and then a picture proves a natural. This is a natural. Its performance in the few days that have elapsed since it opened is conclusive proof.

In RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL, New York, One Hundred and Fifty-Five Thousand people have flocked to see the picture. On Monday of the current week the picture broke all records for mid-week business in the history of the theatre. It is held over for a second week.

In San Francisco the capacity of the Orpheum Theatre has been taxed throughout the past seven days and the picture is held over.

The same story applies to Los Angeles where crowds have continuously thronged the Paramount Theatre and the picture is again held over.

In all three spots the newspapers have been unanimous in their praise and audience reaction has startled each of the three theatre managements.

That's success three ways — Box-Office, Audience Reaction and Unanimous Press Criticism.

play. Direction is by Alfred E. Green, maker of "Housewife," "The Merry Frinks" and "Side Streets."

The principal players are, in the main, well-known screen names. Franchot Tone, of "The Girl From Missouri," "Sadie McKee" and "Straight Is The Way," is the hero. Recently Margaret Lindsay was in "Fog over Frisco" and "Dragon Murder Case." Ann Dvorak's credits include "Friends of Mr. Sweeney," "Housewife" and "Midnight Alibi." Jean Muir is remembered for "As The Earth Turns," "Dr. Monica" and "Desirable." With every role of significant importance, the other players are Ross Alexander, seen in minor parts in several MGM pictures, John (Nick) Foran, Robert Light, Charles Starrett, Henry O'Neill and Marjorie Gateson.

The drama of the boys, who almost without understanding grope for what they hoped for and believed in, is accentuated by realistic romance and tragedy, the whole of which is an unusual, entertaining exposition of the axiom that where there's a will to win, success in any undertaking, no matter what the handicap, can be attained.

I SELL ANYTHING

Warner

Topical comedy, calling for rapid-fire dialogue and fast moving action, is the peg on which this production's entertainment and showmanship is hung. It deals with two familiar gags—fake auctions and fake antiques. The original story is by Albert J. Cohen, author of "Son of a Sailor" and Robert T. Shannon. The screen play is by Brown Holmes, who did "Dark Hazard" and "Heat Lightning," and Sidney Sutherland, scenarist on "I've Got Your Number" and "Hi Nellie." The director is Robert Florey, recently credited with "Smarty" and "Registered Nurse."

Pat O'Brien, valuable because of "Here Comes The Navy" and "Personality Kid," has the lead as the auctioneer. With him are Claire Dodd, whose latest pictures are "Journal of Crime" and "Smarty"; Ann Dvorak, in the forthcoming "Gentlemen Are Born," also "Midnight Alibi" and "Friends of Mr. Sweeney"; Roscoe Karns, seen in "It Happened One Night" and "20th Century"; Russell Hopton, last in "He Was Her Man"; Hobart Cavanaugh, currently in "Kansas City Princess" and "Madame du Barry"; Harry Tyler, seen in "Housewife"; Guy Shy, a newcomer, and Ferdinand Gottschalk, now in "Du Barry."

Timely modern comedy has O'Brien, a phony jewelry auctioneer, first adding Ann Dvorak to his gang of "come-ons." Claire Dodd makes a sucker of him when she peddles for $5,000 a jewel she bought from him for four bits. Forming a partnership, much to the discomfort of Ann Dvorak's romantic inclinations, they go in for the big money, peddling fake antique furniture in an old mansion. Always the auctioneer, O'Brien cleans up, but makes the mistake in the end of selling a sight unseen chest for a low price, not knowing that the day's receipts are hidden in it.

The idea of the story suggest a type of flamboyant showmanship that should be a carnival for ingenious exhibitors.

A PERFECT WEEK END

Warner

Despite the romantic title sound, this is a reversion to the type of entertainment-exploitation material with which the producers have had so much success for an action-packed, fast-moving comedy romance drama as a Cagney vehicle. The original story by Frederick Hazlitt Brennan, noted short story author, appeared in Colliers. The screen play is by Warren Duff and Seton I. Miller. The director, Ray Enright, recently completed "Circus Clown."

Cagney, now sensational in "Here Comes the Navy," is surrounded with a familiar group of Warner players. Patricia Ellis, currently in "The Circus Clown," has the feminine lead. In support are Allen Jenkins, Arthur Aylesworth, Robert Barrat, Spencer Charters, Addison Richards, Harry Woods, William Davidson, Hobart Cavanaugh, Eddie Shubert, Charles Wilson, Dorothy Dare and Gertrude Short. All these have been seen in recent Warner pictures.

As atmospheric background for the motivating elements, a composite of the recent series of farmer milk strikes provides the setting for the role that is typically Cagney. A truck driver, continually in trouble and finally falling in love, he suggests the strike which carries him through a series of jail sentences into a murder and kidnaping, a number of gang battles and finally the hero who finds both the girl and the murderer. Value of the title is seen when, in order to keep her new husband out of trouble, Patricia Ellis precipitates a situation that lands them in jail for a perfect week end honeymoon.

This being the type of entertainment in which, apparently, the public best appreciates him, publicity that ties up all the color, excitement, topicalness and romantic fun of the whole thing appears to be the most alluring interest-creating medium.

BABBITT

Warner

As a showmanship asset few books have been as widely read or their significance discussed as Sinclair Lewis' "Babbitt." The word itself became a satirical synonym for the super-civic-minded small town big shot, and a household descriptive term. "Babbitt" is a satirical dramatization of just such a character. Seconding in showmanship value is the teaming of Guy Kibbee and Aline MacMahon in the leading roles. If the old axiom holds good, that stars are as good as their last pictures, "Big Hearted Herbert," a similar satire, should serve this pair in good stead.

Lewis' most recent screen contribution is "Ann Vickers." Adaptation of "Babbitt" is credited to Tom Reed and Niven Busch, who also was associated with "He Was Her Man" and "Man of Two Faces." The screen play is by Mary McCall, Jr., who did the current "Desirable." Direction is by William Keighley, maker of "Dr. Monica," "Kansas City Princess" and "Big Hearted Herbert."

The cast supporting the newly-formed Kibbee-MacMahon comedy team lists many familiar and several new names. Maxine Doyle, soon to be seen in MGM's "Student Tour" and Joe E. Brown's "Six Day Bicycle Rider," has an important role. Nan Gray, Mary Treen, Glen Boles, comparative newcomers, although previously seen in minor roles in other Warner features, are included. The better known screen names include Minna Gombel, Berton Churchill, Alan Hale, Johnny Arthur and Arthur Aylesworth.

Comedy, particularly that of another fellow's misfortunes, which are self-imposed, is the entertainment and showmanship essence of this story. His egotistical self-importance and desire to be counted among the "big" fellows, though tolerated by his wife, leads to his downfall, from which only the ingenuity of his mouse-like mate saves him. With this material to begin with and the popular prestige of the two leading players, this story should be productive of much new showmanship.

BACK PORCH

(Tentative—probably IT'S A GIFT)

Paramount

Comedy of the type for which W. C. Fields has become noted, is both the potential entertainment and showmanship of this production. It's the yarn of an eternal good fellow, nagged by his wife, pestered by a neighborhood kid, who buys a non-existent California orange grove to help out a young fellow with whom his daughter is in love, takes a tin lizzie trip across the country and suddenly finds himself rich. The original is by Charles Bogle (Fields' writing nom-de-plume), who did "The Old Fashioned Way," and J. P. McEvoy, most recently credited with "Many Happy Returns." The screen play is by Jack Cunningham, similarly associated with "The Old Fashioned Way." Direction is by Norman McLeod, who made practically all the Marx Brothers pictures, also "Many Happy Returns."

Fields, last seen in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," is starred. Baby LeRoy is with him again in a relationship similar to that which was theirs in "The Old Fashioned Way." Kathleen Howard, former editor of Harper's Bazaar, also seen in "Old Fashioned Way," plays the part of his purse-watching wife. A newcomer, Jean Rouveral, who made a name for herself on the New York stage, and Julian Madison, one of the "Search For Beauty," winners, carry the romantic interest. The supporting cast includes Tammany Young, seen in "Little Miss Marker" and currently in "Gift of Gab"; Morgan Wallace, who was in "Many Happy Returns"; Charles Sellon, Sam Hardy and Josephine Whittel.

The Fields and Baby LeRoy combination, the comedy character of the story, and the interpolations that can be expected of Fields give a hint as to the type of showmanship it will make possible.

Germany Bans Fox Picture

The German government censor at Berlin last week banned Fox's "Stand Up and Cheer," because it indicated the "typical American movie standpoint of artificially plumped-up optimism," and "did not deal seriously with today's problems."

Laemmle Not Buying Foreign Films for U. S.

Universal is not planning to purchase pictures abroad for American distribution, Carl Laemmle, president, said this week. Such purchases, he declared in a cable from London to R. H. Cochrane, vice-president, will be for European release.

"Have no intention of buying foreign film for Universal to release in the United States," said Mr. Laemmle's cable. "Garbled trade paper reports that Universal is buying foreign film to bolster up its program are preposterous and harmful. Universal's program for 1934-35, as announced originally, needs no bolstering up. Report should have said that I may buy some foreign films while here for foreign distribution only. Please make this clear to the industry."

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 240.—(A) With what would you clean a projector mechanism after a film fire? (B) Centigrade temperature being zero, what would the Fahrenheit reading be? (C) What is the relative reflection power of the following: Mirror with silvered back? White blotting paper? Ordinary foolscap paper? Black paper? Light pink paper? (D) A mirror and white blotting paper have about the same reflection power. Hold a brilliant lamp in your hand in front of a mirror and try to look at it. You will be dazzled. Hold a sheet of white blotting paper in front of a mirror and you will look at it without noting any dazzle. Explain this in detail.

Answer to Question No. 235

Bluebook School Question No. 235 was: (A) Are there ever more than two wires in an electric circuit insofar as has to do with electric action? (B) Explain why in a three-wire circuit there are three separate circuits available. (C) Explain the different effects of these various circuits and what their effect may be on the generators. (D) Tell us what is consumed when electrical power is produced. (E) Explain what happens in a rheostat connected in series with an electric arc. (F) Would or would not it be theoretically possible to operate an arc on 110-volt current without rheostatic resistance, or something in lieu thereof?

First I wish to say that Dan Ferguson has sent in a list of belated answers which puts him on the map up to date. There has been some mix-up in numbers, so if anything is missing it is due to that. We have it all straightened out now and will start fresh.

The list this week includes the following: D. Danielson; C. Rau and S. Evans; G. E. Doe; A. F. Sprafke; J. Wentworth; D. Ferguson; H. Edwards; J. R. Walker; L. J. O'Melia; C. Oldham ; Bill Doe; T. F. Bachert; T. Van Vaulkenburg; G. Harrison and F. Halor; O. Allbright; G. Thompson; D. U. Granger; F. H. Klar and L. Klarr; T. Turk; D. L. Sinklow; D. L. Samuels; L. Thomas and D. D. Davis; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; B. S. Howard; N. L. Tomlinson and G. Lathrope; D. L. Patterson; D. Lally and F. Ferguson; M. F. Fallon; E. Hodson; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; A. L. Dodson and F. L. Benton; G. Daniels, T. N. Onby, T. Patterson and H. T. Farleigh; L. Grant and R. Geddings; B. Itt; F. L. Savlor and G. N. Guidotti; L. N. Haynes and A. Richardson; K. L. Knight and L. Henderson; J. Gensen; L. B. and D. T. Palmer; T. T. Golley; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; S. Spooner and B. H. Thaller; G. L. Bancroft and L. T. Jones; G. Mason; H. L. Smith; M. and J. Devoy; H. Hughes and T. E. Mantoll; P. and L. Felt; D. Habor and D. Breaston; L. N. Simms; G. R. Squires; T. R. Roache; C. Umphrey; J. Collins and C. Martin; I. H. Lifton and B. L. White; O. L. Daris and F. Simms; N. M. Hall; L. R. O'Leary; P. O. Brent; T. T. Davidson and R. G. Crews; R. and K. Wells; M. L. Spooner.

The answer of D. Danielson is selected from many excellent replies to Section A. He says: "Basically there are never more than two wires in any electric circuit, they being the elongation of the poles of the source of power. Electric action is merely the equalization, or attempt to equalize, potential difference between the two poles. It then follows that all that is required are the two conductors and necessary intervening apparatus. Various circuits may seem to require more wires, and do require them, but basically the action is only between two conductors, namely, negative and positive. Careful examination will discover either branches or periodic unused portions in the circuit. There may be more than two wires, but in such case more than one performs the duty normally assigned to one."

(B) M. and J. Devoy say: "A 3-wire circuit is supplied power by two generators of equal voltage and capacity connected in series, with the third wire, termed the neutral, connected to the positive of one and the negative of the other generator. The other two wires, known as the 'outside' wires in common parlance, but correctly as the true positive and true negative of the combination, are connected to the two remaining generator poles.

"Examining this set-up we see that with both generators running and no connection (lamps or motors) between any of the wires, there would be no action at all, except that the generators would generate voltage. If we now connect a lamp between one (either) outside wire and the neutral it is very evident that the generator to which those two wires are joined would supply all current used by that lamp, and the other generator remain idle except for generating voltage. If we now disconnect the lamp from the outside wire and connect it to the other outside wire, we instantly see that the condition is exactly reversed.

"If we then again alter the connection and connect to the two outside wires, it is evident the lamp will instantly burn out, since it will receive the combined voltage pressure of both generators."

(C) H. Edwards answers: "The effects of a connection to neutral and either true positive or true negative is to impose such portion of the load as may be unbalanced upon the generator that is connected to the heavy side. If the load be evenly balanced it loads both generators equally. The effect also is to supply the equipment with 110 volts pressure and amperage up to the capacity of each individual generator.

"The effect of connection to the true negative and true positive, leaving out the neutral wire, is to supply equipments with the combined voltage of both generators, or in other words, voltage equal to twice the voltage of either generator, and the amperage capacity of both generators working in series, which in effect means the amperage capacity of either generator considered singly.

(D) Messrs. Rau and Evans answer: "When electric power is produced, pressure (voltage) is consumed." Short and wholly correct.

(E) It was very difficult to decide whose answer should be published. That of G. Thompson seems complete and short. He says: "A certain pressure is required to force the desired amperage against the resistance of the arc. This requirement usually is far below the voltage of the supply, hence a rheostat is introduced for the purpose of using up the excess voltage (breaking it down, we call it) so that just sufficient remains to force through the arc resistance the required number of amperes."

(F) Suffering catfish, what a set of weird ideas this one brought forth! J. Wentworth answers thus: "It could not be done! Striking the arc would instantly establish a dead short that would either blow the fuse or burn something entirely up. If it were possible to strike the arc, then yes, in theory at least, by lengthening the arc until it had sufficient resistance to break down the entire supply voltage. However, I don't believe the theory could be made to join with practice for more than a few seconds. If it could be made to do so, would friend manager kick about carbon consumption? Answer: He would!"

DEAR HERALD:

From down in Wichita, Kansas, comes a marked copy of Our Sunday Visitor, a Catholic paper printed in Huntington, Indiana, quoting a letter of ours that was recently published in Motion Picture Herald relative to the activities of the Legion of Decency in cleaning up the films. We don't know as we would have mentioned the matter at all except for the fact that Mr. Wetzel, the man who sent us the copy, is a photographer of considerable note who printed some pictures of the writer and Gutzon Borglum, the sculptor, who is carving the images of Washington, Lincoln et al on the mountain at Rushmore, S. D. It shows also that this paper from Huntington, Indiana, proves that theatremen are not the only ones who are reading Motion Picture Herald.

It is quite evident that "Our Sunday Visitor" coincides with our views on clean pictures. We have preached clean pictures so long that we didn't know but that possibly we had become a nut on the subject, but "decency" was mixed with our milk when we first took hold of the bottle, and we have been pretty strong for the bottle ever since.

That's the Way It Goes

Maybe you baseball fans would like to know how our American Legion Junior team came out at Topeka, Kansas, last Thursday. After winning the championship of Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and New Mexico they went to Topeka to contest in the finals for the western half of the U. S. and we'll just be doggoned if Seattle, Washington, didn't clean us 7 to 5, and we didn't win a nickel on the game because we wouldn't bet against our own team, but we did lose a whole lot of sleep that night. Somehow we never could see any sense in losing a ball game.

The other night we saw Joe Brown in "A Very Honorable Guy," and whenever Joe comes to town we are going to be there unless we have a blowout and three punctures. Joe plays in pictures a whole lot like he does when he slams out a home run for the home team and wins the game. He does it simply as a matter-of-course and just what you would expect him to do. We never saw Joe in a poor picture yet.

We have just received a letter from Mr. Joseph F. Quillan of Hollywood, California (You remember that Hollywood is in California). Mr. Quillan is the father of Eddie Quillan and you will recall that Eddie is the boy who has made a number of excellent pictures and we understand that he is soon to make some more, which ought to be good news to the exhibitors because his pictures are always clean and are free from a whole lot of unreasonable things that they try to pass off as entertainment. Eddie isn't only a good actor but he is a good bowler as well. We know, for we saw him bowl once.

We thank Mr. Quillan for his letter and we trust that he will convey to Eddie our sincere hope that we may soon see more of his pictures. Our best wishes are also extended to the entire Quillan family.

But, speaking of baseball: Did you know that Joe Brown is a baseball fan? We understand that he has a team out in Hollywood that cleans up everybody, which reminds us to say again that we can't see any darn sense in our team losing a ball game.

That Colonelcy

Ted Slosser, who is connected with the Essanoe Amusement Company at Mount Vernon, Kentucky, writes us a long letter and jumps on us with both feet because we are listed as a "Colonel" when we have never received a commission from the Governor of Kentucky, and he intimates that the Governor of Kentucky is the only one authorized to issue commissions to colonels. He forgets that our commission as colonel came to us while we were commanding the army of the Quillayute in western Washington and on the Quillayute Indian reservation and was issued to us by Captain Allison and it was countersigned by Dad Ferguson (a Virginian who liked mint julips).

He wrote us principally to call us on our recent statement in the Herald that Pierre, South Dakota, was the smallest capital city, having only two theatres. He didn't call us a liar, but that was probably what he thought, for he informs us that Mount Vernon, Kentucky, also boasts of only two theatres and we were led to believe that Mount Vernon was the capital instead of Frankfort. He also told us that the Governor of Kentucky issued colonel commissions to anybody who asked for them and he also told us about the corn licker they make in the barns down there and invited us to come down.

As we said before (and we can prove it by Joe E. Brown) there is no doggone sense in our Legion team losing a ball game.

Why They Keep Coming

We have tried to figure it out and arrive at a sensibe conclusion as to why theatres are still doing a fair business out here in this dried-up country and in these depressing times, and we have concluded that it is because the public must be amused, and because pictures are the best and cheapest amusement they can get.

The film hounds who travel the grasshopper and dried-up districts of South Dakota tell us that business at the theatres has fallen off but little and that people are optimistic and going ahead just as though it had rained every other day, and that the government hadn't killed off 5,000,000 pigs and that hay was cheap at $18 a ton. There is no country in the world where optimism is so rampant as western South Dakota, western Nebraska and western Kansas. The only thing that worries the boys in these districts is for their home team to lose the ball game. Out here they will go to a picture show if they can't buy shoes for Susie or milk for Willie's bottle, just because that is the cheapest and best amusement in the world, although we know a lot of people who are on "relief" who are spending altogether too much time in the pool halls where they get nothing for their money.

We believe in pictures, features for amusement and newsreels for education. If it weren't for the newsreels one-half of the country wouldn't know how the other half lives, and the world owes a debt of gratitude to the camera boys who give us shots of foreign worlds and foreign peoples. And then there are Laurel & Hardy, Thelma Todd and Zasu Pitts, et al, who make us laugh. What would we do without them? We'd go bughouse, that's what we'd do.

Well, maybe we don't know very much about it, but when anyone tells us that we don't know what the public wants in pictures we always feel that when they were little their mothers spent most of their time in bridge parties instead of the nursery.

The HERALD's Vagabond Colyumnist

AN OPENED LETTER FROM HYDE TO J. C.

J. C. Jenkins,
En Route.

Dear Dad:

Just a hello to you, and hope your good health is constantly better.

Have an answer to that age-old question, "Why Is a Film Salesman?" Freddie Horn was calling on me and wearing out my office furniture last Saturday when my young daughter stepped in the door and announced that my home was on fire. You should have seen the film salesman in action.

Freddie proved a wicked man with a garden hose, and I will always regret that there wasn't a camera record of the event, as I know it would be of national interest. Incidentally, with a 35-mile-an-hour wind blowing and a complete bedroom on fire, we needed help. As you suffered such a loss from a fire I thought it would be of double interest to you. I guess a couple of hundred dollars and a vote of thanks to Freddie is all it will cost me. Don't believe RKO product will advance in price as I am already pretty well set on that.

We had a couple of wet clouds go by the other day and it looks like it might get around to snowing some time this fall. 'Haint rained for two years now.

Sincerely always,
Charles Lee Hyde,
Grand Theatre,
Pierre, S. D.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

DEFENSE RESTS, THE: Jack Holt—This is a dandy. Did extra large business and repeated second night. Will please almost any type audience. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Aug. 22-23.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

HELL BENT FOR LOVE: Tim McCoy—A good action picture with plenty of thrills, but we miss Tim in his western roles, especially the kids. How about some more westerns, Tim. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Aug. 17-18.—Hammond Green, Princess Theatre, Albertville, Ala. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING CODE, THE: Buck Jones, Diane Sinclair—Just an ordinary good western. Drew usual Saturday business and pleased. Personally, I wish Jones would make some more extraordinary pictures like "Unknown Valley" and "California Trail" on last year's program. They are both outstanding. Played Aug. 24-25.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: May Robson, Warren William—Enough has been said about this year-old picture. It's good and I think we made no mistake in running it in preference to a new and untried program picture. Running time, 102 minutes. Played Aug. 31-Sept. 1.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

LADY IS WILLING, THE: Leslie Howard—I pulled this one off and put it on the shelf after drawing in a few on Sunday with it. This is the nearest nothing excepting "Twentieth Century" that we have had this year. After waiting all this time we thought we had something in this one, but if you haven't played it, don't do it. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Aug. 19.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

McKENNA OF THE MOUNTED: Buck Jones—Getting short on westerns I dug up this more than two year old western. Buck Jones pictures are almost without an exception very good. However, this is an exception. There is not a single laugh in the show and very little romance. The story is rather hard to follow. I would say about the poorest Jones we ever ran.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

MASTER OF MEN: Jack Holt—Just a wee bit better entertainment than the usual run of Jack Holt programmers. Will get by with a double show. Average business. Played Aug. 8-9.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE: Jean Arthur, Donald Cook, Richard Cromwell—A very nice little picture. No adverse comments so I guess everyone was satisfied.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

NO GREATER GLORY: Frankie Darro—A different sort of show with the principals all youngsters. Personally thought it a good show. Not what he average patrons wants for entertainment, but will please most people and some will think it great. Played Aug. 21-22.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

NO GREATER GLORY: Frankie Darro, Lois Wilson—I found this to be a very good show. People liked it and told me so.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

ONE IS GUILTY: Ralph Bellamy, Shirley Grey—A good program picture played on a double bill and gave satisfaction.—Belt Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ONE IS GUILTY: Ralph Bellamy—A very good mystery show. Ralph Bellamy is becoming quite popular here. Did fair business and pleased the majority. —Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

PARTY'S OVER, THE: Stuart Erwin, Ann Sothern—The title is all I can say for this one. Mighty weak picture. Did not please our patrons. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Aug. 15-16.—Hammond Green, Princess Theatre, Albertville, Ala. Small town patronage.

PARTY'S OVER, THE: Stuart Erwin, Ann Sothern—A very mediocre type picture. Didn't get by on our bargain night. Running time, seven reels.—Paul McBride. Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

TWENTIETH CENTURY: John Barrymore, Carole Lombard—Craziest play that we have ever tried to sell to the public. Hollering from start to finish. No one spoke throughout the whole play in a mild voice. Poor from start to finish. Lost money on it. No one satisfied. I would shelve this play. Running time, 91 minutes. Played Aug. 11-12.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

TWENTIETH CENTURY: John Barrymore—Even the Barrymore fans say the world's worst, and I agree with them. Nothing to this picture but a lot of hollering and it won't do your box-office any good. If you can get out of playing this one, do so. Running time, 91 minutes. Played Aug. 27-28.—Hammond Green, Princess Theatre, Albertville, Ala. Small town patronage.

TWENTIETH CENTURY: John Barrymore, Carole Lombard—The worst picture of the year. John Barrymore is through in this locality as a result of this picture.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

UNKNOWN VALLEY: Buck Jones—Positively one of the best Jones to ever come to the screen. Far above the usual western, mostly on account of the unusual story.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

UNKNOWN VALLEY: Buck Jones—A very good action picture. Is different and will please anywhere. Played August 30.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

VOICE IN THE NIGHT: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—Good story and good action made a satisfactory Saturday picture to slightly less than average business. Running time, 59 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly—One fine show. Very dramatic, but it's the type that will send them home happy. Good business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

WHIRLPOOL: Jack Holt, Lila Lee—A fine play of a man who was unjustly sent to the pen for 20 years, of the sacrifice of his life for the benefit of his wife and daughter. Jack Holt was the type to play the part. Any one would like this play. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 7-8.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

WHIRLPOOL: Jack Holt, Lila Lee—A very fine picture and one that is good for any day of the week. A clean picture that is worth good playing time. Played August 23.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

First National

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—This was a natural and played to big business. Had good shorts to balance, which made a fine family program. Running time, 63 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. Small town patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN: Joe E. Brown—Had carnival in town and this picture helped me fight opposition. A good show and you can do good business if you advertise it like a circus. The picture has some good trapeze stunts and lots of comedy. Played August 17-18.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—This is some picture for burgs of this size. It gave 100 per cent satisfaction and drew better than any of the mammoth special productions we have been playing the past year from all the companies. This is the kind of picture we need to pay some of our past due accounts. Clean entertainment and the nearest to circus life of any circus picture we have played. This man Brown knows from experience how to do it. Let him make another one. There is lots of chance for stories around the circus lots, but it takes the guys that have lived with them to make a circus picture. 'Taint acting; just living the every-day life on the lot. Played Aug. 26-27.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—Very good comedy. Lots of laughs in this one, especially during the flying trapeze act. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Aug. 12-13-14.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town theatre.

FOG OVER FRISCO: Donald Wood, Bette Davis, Lyle Talbot, Margaret Lindsay—This has a great cast and proved quite a picture. I believe it did 50 per cent more business because I mentioned that the League of Decency had condemned it. Running time, 68 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MANDALAY: Kay Francis, Lyle Talbot, Ricardo Cortez, Warner Oland—Just another picture that can be left off your list and will never be missed. Running time, 65 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MAN WITH TWO FACES, THE: Edward G. Robinson—Very good. I think this is one most entertaining pictures I've seen in some time. Business good for two days. Play this one up. It'll surely satisfy. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Aug. 29-30.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers—A fine picture. Good singing by Powell and Rogers. Mills Bros. better than usual. Good at box office and liked almost 100 per cent. A nice little story helped this show. Pat O'Brien good as usual. Clean show. Played August 20-21.—A. E. Christian, Waynes Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers—This is a great musical production with an entirely different angle. Powell plays a great part, but Pat O'Brien almost steals the show. Had many favorable comments on the performance given by the "Four Mills Bros."—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers, Pat O'Brien—Here's a honey—but hot weather kept people away. You can't advertise it too big, for it seems to be just the kind of show most folks want to see. Running time, 89 minutes. Played July 29-30-31.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers—Looked like old times to see them flock in on this one. Drew exceptional business and pleased them all.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

Fox

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple—Shirley Temple the whole show. Played to better than average business and was very well received by our patrons. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Aug. 28.—V. C. Weschler, Colonial Theatre, Erie, Pa. General patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: James Dunn, Shirley Temple—Very good. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Aug. 26-27-28.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: "Pat" Patterson, Spencer Tracy—Comments both ways, although more favorable than otherwise. Played right after our county fair and business was not nearly what it should have been. Personally think this suitable for any class of audience. This is on the "approved" list, although there are a few scenes and situations that made me wonder how it got by.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—Can add nothing new to the many fine reports on this outstanding show. Drew above average against adverse conditions.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: George O'Brien, Mary Brian—Here is one that pleased everybody. Business picked up a little on second night. The title was terrible, and did very small business the first night. Running time, 72 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, George White, Alice Faye, Jimmy Durante—This did a little better than "Stand Up and Cheer," but revues just don't go over here. Running time, 78 minutes. Played August 21-22-23. A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, George White, Alice Faye, Jimmy Durante—I had more dissatisfied patrons on this picture than I have had in many a day. If this is the best George White can do, somebody should buy him a ticket back to New York quick before he takes a notion to make another picture. He should have consulted a few of Warner's directors for a few pointers before he started making this one. Rudy Vallee acted like a ham actor all through the picture. The "Nasty Man" number was the only thing that had any pep in it, and in some states this number is prohibited. Personally, I thought it was a fairly good entertainment, but what I am writing here is the reaction of the cash customers. I have not seen half a dozen that said they liked it. Pleased about 30 per cent. Running time, 78 minutes. Played August 5-7.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

LAST TRAIL, THE: George O'Brien—Story by Zane Grey. Pleased our western fans and all others. A western romance with plenty of comedy. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Aug. 10-11.—Hammond Green, Princess Theatre, Albertville, Ala. Small town patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—A good small town picture. Mitchell and Durante just about steal the show with their comedy. Plenty of comedy. A good song by Alice Faye and our patrons left the theatre smiling. Played Friday and Saturday to good average business. Small towns need not fear this one. Played August 31-Sept. 1.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

SPRINGTIME FOR HENRY: Otto Kruger, Nancy Carroll, Nigel Bruce, Heather Angel, Herbert Mundin—Fox surely has flowered me with a bunch of duds to wind up the season with. We had more people take special pains to tell us this was by far the worst we have ever shown on our screen. Why will companies put these actors with English accents in features? We have extra good sound, but it was beyond any one to understand Nigel Bruce. Running time, 83 minutes. Played August 15-16.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS: Warner Baxter—It's a pity to keep giving Baxter such poor pictures. Nothing to this one. No box office and Baxter is gradually losing favor, more I think on account of his parts than anything else. Played on double bill to poor business. Running time, 81 minutes. Played August 20-21.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS: Warner Baxter, Rosemary Ames, Rochelle Hudson, Henrietta Crosman, Irving Pichel—This drew slightly above average business for us and gave decided satisfaction. Had any number of people tell me they had enjoyed it more than anything they'd seen for weeks. Running time, 81 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WILD GOLD: John Boles, Claire Trevor—A good comedy romance with some good character acting by supporting cast. If all companies would try to put out more comedy romances like this one for program features, we could keep patrons in the habit of coming. This is a fine family feature that will keep your patrons interested, but it is nothing extra for Sunday, although it is a lot better than some I have shown on Sunday. Running time, 73 minutes. Played August 22-23.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Neb. Working class and rural patronage.

WILD GOLD: John Boles, Claire Trevor—A better program picture than I expected. No drawing power. Better for small towns than for larger spots. Running time, 73 minutes. Played August 13-14.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

WILD GOLD: John Boles, Claire Trevor—I put this on Saturday and think I made a mistake. There is not enough action to please Saturday patrons, and business was below average. John Boles is miscast. His admirers certainly did not like him as a drinking mining engineer. Running time, 77 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WILD GOLD: John Boles—Fair. So many Fox pictures are so long drawn out they get monotonous.—Harold Smith, Dreamland, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

WILD GOLD: John Boles, Claire Trevor—Our patrons enjoyed this. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Aug. 3-4.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

MGM

GOING HOLLYWOOD: Marion Davies—Pleasing entertainment well liked by all. Miss Davies' performance was so good that one could put up with Crosby's crooning, although it undoubtedly marred the show and the box office. Thank you, Miss Davies. Business slightly above average. Played Aug. 23-24-25.—Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Sask., Canada. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: All star—Just a lot of nothing half thrown together. One of the poorest excuses for a picture we have ever played. Let this one alone. Not even funny except about 5 minutes with Laurel & Hardy, and my patrons want more than a 5-minute show for their money. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 27-28.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

Mr. Hall's first reports appeared in last week's issue.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: All star—Metro must have had a little of Tarzan left over, so they started out to make a feature with Schnozzle Durante as Schnarzen. Never have I seen a worse mixed up mess than this picture was. Jumbled as to story, direction, too, and the people foggy as what was happening. Baron Munchausen was here the hero of Metro's other mistake, "Meet the Baron," and what a nose dive it took the second day. No happy landings with this one. Our folks do not like so much of Durante. He is in too many pictures and his stuff is the same in every picture. He has not enough on the ball to carry the star part of any feature. I hope it is a long time before we see him again. He is boring with his hotcha. Audience reaction, not mine. Picture not liked and the panning was almost unanimous. More squawks on this one than I have had for a long time. And if you ask the writer they were right. For once I agreed with them. One time they did not get any argument from me.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, William Powell, Myrna Loy—This is one of the best pictures released by MGM in the past year. Clark Gable is cast perfectly as the hard-boiled devil-may-care gangster. William Powell fits his part like a glove and Myrna Loy is also right up to snuff in her part as the woman who is loved by both men.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable—Believe this is the best picture Gable has appeared in since famous "Hell Divers." Every one that saw it really enjoyed it. They had only one objection, the sad ending. It is Gable at his best. The supporting cast, Myrna Loy and Elizabeth Allan, also carry their parts very good. The part Jean Hersholt played was made to order for him. A swell show. Played Aug. 20-21.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Ruggles—A great show for your serial night or as a substitute for a western picture. Ruggles is indistinct with his mumblings or stuttering, but you can get most of it. There's much impossible bunk, but it moves fast and furious. As I said, fine for serial nights. It's clean. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Aug. 31.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies—Best bargain night crowds I've had in two months. Pleased the customers.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford—Had more patrons stop me on the street to say they enjoyed this picture more than anything we have played in the last six months and that is saying something. Due to election in this state we had a bad break the second night, but it was no fault of the picture. We are expecting great things on her next "Chained." Hope it is as good as this one. Running time, 92 minutes. Played Aug. 27-28.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Smalltown patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone—Best picture Crawford has made in a long, long time, except "Dancing Lady." Good clean story, no sex, comedy Okay, cast fine right down the line, good ending. Did a surprisingly nice business on it and everybody liked it exceptionally well. Am looking forward to her next one, which I hope will be as good. Running time, 95 minutes. Played July 12-13.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

STAMBOUL QUEST: Myrna Loy—Not up to Myrna Loy's "Thin Man," but an okay for entertainment. More comedy roles, MGM, for Myrna. Played Aug. 23-24.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller—A good picture of its kind, but not much drawing power. The magazines have given away all the big stuff in this kind of pictures and they don't draw any more than any program picture. All the natives know just how they are made and we can't astonish them any more. Played Aug. 19-20.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—A dandy picture enjoyed by everybody. Poor title, but box office possibilities. Myrna Loy is gaining in popularity and Powell and Loy make a good team. I advertised as one of the year's surprise hits and did a fair business. Played August 15-16.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Very good production of the book. Since every one that attended school has read it, it should do business. And will please the whole family. Played Aug. 26-27.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

TURN BACK THE CLOCK: Lee Tracy—I thought this was a very good picture. The speech that Tracy makes to the departing soldiers is very good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

VIVA VILLA: Wallace Beery—This production is a masterpiece throughout, a masterpiece of acting, direction, sound, photography. Every scene shows that plenty of dough was spent to make it. I read some time ago a comment by some exhibitor that this picture was just a great big overdone western. Imagine that. Wallace Beery played his part so perfect that I think every one in this burg thinks that he is really a Mexican. It sure is great entertainment in a great big way, but we did no more than average business for some unknown reason. Although business was only average, I must congratulate Metro for such a splendid production. It is indeed a pleasure to show it. Step on this picture and give everything.—Played Aug. 12-13-14.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Robert Montgomery, Ann Harding—Very good little picture with good moral. Hot weather and crop failure hurt attendance and business poor. Played Aug. 9-10-11.—Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Sask., Canada. Small town patronage.

Monogram

AVENGER, THE: Ralph Forbes—A good mystery picture that the ones that came in enjoyed. Having a nice rain storm the first night, very few saw it and there was no way for a good word to get around to help out on the second day's run. Running time, eight reels.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, Albertville, Ala. Small town patronage.

JANE EYRE: Virginia Bruce—Some comment was good; others said thumbs down. The cast was none too well selected. It's slow, but drew well with the older folks that had read it. Played Aug. 30-31.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

LOUDSPEAKER, THE: Ray Walker—I spot booked this in from Monogram to pinch hit for "The Lady Is Willing" and it did the trick. Best Monday and Tuesday for weeks and they surely like this Ray Walker. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 20-21.—Earl J. McClurg, Grant Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

LOUDSPEAKER, THE: Ray Walker—A good funny picture played on a double bill.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MAN FROM UTAH, THE: John Wayne—Action on the range and in the rodeo. This is a swell western picture with a good supporting cast. Pleased our western fans. Running time, 55 minutes. Played Aug. 24-25.—Hammond Green, Princess Theatre, Albertville, Ala. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN LOVE SONG: Dixie Lee, Robert Armstrong—This is a fine picture. Good story and a fine cast. All liked it and told us so. Played Aug. 23-24.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RANDY RIDES ALONE: John Wayne—Another good western by this star that is getting popular with the Saturday night western fans. Played Aug. 18.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Paramount

ALL OF ME: Fredric March, Miriam Hopkins, George Raft, Helen Mack—This is big league stuff, but didn't seem to go over in the sticks. It has a swell cast, but story is highbrow. Running time, 71 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

ALL OF ME: Fredric March, Miriam Hopkins, George Raft, Helen Mack—Another excellent cast wasted. This picture, in my opinion and from the reaction of the customers, their opinion, is one of the poorest pictures of the year. It is bad enough in some pictures for the sweet little girl to have a baby, but in this one, both women have babies. Of course, the story and direction is handled very, very carefully, but there is absolutely no earthly reason why a picture of this kind should have ever been made. I made a great mistake when I played this on a family night, and if any of you exhibitors expect to hold the respect of patrons and friends, don't give them this one on a family night. In fact, if you can afford it, pay for it, and put it on the shelf. Running time, 71 minutes. Played August 15-16.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

BIG EXECUTIVE: Ricardo Cortez, Richard Bennett, Elizabeth Young, Sharon Lynne—Another picture that is just summer filler and hurts the business because it is not good enough to hold the interest. One that can be shown, but which won't be shown in any good theatre that can find enough entertainment to fill all their dates. Running time, 72 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

CRADLE SONG: Dorothea Wieck, Evelyn Venable, Sir Guy Standing, Gertrude Michael—As an educational picture for schools, convents, colleges, Catholic classes, etc., this would be a beautiful production; in fact, it is really a marvelous production, but, not in a theatre. We opened a double feature program with this, and got by, but I can pity the poor exhibitor who just uses this one picture. Running time, 77 minutes. Played August 1-2.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY: Fredric March—Our patrons enjoyed this picture. Something unusual showing that love is stronger than death. Fredric March did outstanding acting in this picture, also Evelyn Venable. I thought this picture better than Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Aug. 13-14.—Hammond Green, Princess Theatre, Albertville, Ala. Small town patronage.

DOUBLE DOOR: Evelyn Venable, Mary Morris—Good, but I don't know what for. If you can't get people to come in and see a picture I don't know what good it is. Why don't Paramount give us some stars. We can't sell their pictures without some help. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 24-25.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

DOUBLE DOOR: Mary Morris—Went good on midweek. Not a very strong picture.—Harold Smith, Dreamland, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

DUCK SOUP: The Four Marx Brothers—Played some time ago, but failed to report on same. After this, no exhibitor should pay more than program price for these boys. Business was above average, as many hadn't heard how poor this is. Running time, 80 minutes.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

EIGHT GIRLS IN A BOAT: Dorothy Wilson, Douglass Montgomery, Kay Johnson, Walter Connolly—A very amusing picture that is somewhat different, but my whole evening was spoiled, and so was every one else's, when the nice little girl said, "I am going to have a baby." The Legion of Decency will, I hope, be a cause to stop such unnecessary cracks as this in any picture. Pleased about 60 per cent. Running time, 78 minutes. Played August 8-9.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

HELL AND HIGH WATER: Richard Arlen—Would rate this not better than an average show suitable for bargain nights or midweek. Draw about average.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

HERE COMES THE GROOM: Jack Haley—This is a very good comedy for a double feature program. Do not believe that it would go so good by itself. Some good comedy in it.—Harld Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West—To much "West" for my patrons and they got bored and so did I. Mae West would have lasted longer playing featured parts, in my opinion. I predict she has seen her best days, and if she wrote this screen story it might be well for her to let somebody else try it. Played September 3-4.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

KISS AND MAKE UP: Cary Grant, Genevieve Tobin—Fair picture with Wampas Baby Stars. Could have been made much better with the talent these Wampas stars represent. Business above average. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 19-20.——Ralph Larned, Paramount Theatre, LaCrosse, Kansas. Small town patronage.

KISS AND MAKE UP: Cary Grant—Will please the ladies. The men won't like it. I played it on my midweek show and it went over very nicely.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

LAST ROUND-UP, THE: Randolph Scott—One of the best westerns, although it did not please here nearly as much as "Gun Justice" (Universal). Business above average.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple, Adolphe Menjou—Shirley Temple was simply great in this play. She put this play over with a bang. Use her more, Paramount, and she will soon take all of the theatres out of the red. Great play with a great actor and that is what the patrons wish to see. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 18-19.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Adolphe Menjou, Dorothy Dell, Shirley Temple—A dandy picture that pleases every one. Shirley Temple is a wonder. Good, sound, fine acting by the whole cast and a lot of high-grade comedy. No one will make a mistake in using this one. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 24-25.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple, Adolphe Menjou—Right now when the public is crying for clean pictures, this is a natural. In my opinion, this is one of the finest and cleanest comedies made during the past season. Shirley Temple is great. Business above average in spite of extremely hot weather.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple—One of the best pictures that we have shown in a long time and played to the best gross of any picture this year. Particularly appealing to women, who all want to bring their children. Shirley Temple the biggest box office draw since Mae West. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Aug. 14.—V. C. Weschler, Colonial Theatre, Erie, Pa. General patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Guy Lombardo, Burns and Allen—A dandy musical slapstick comedy with Burns and Allen pleasing every one that ever was pleased by their asinine form of humor. Running time, 60 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Gracie Allen, George Burns—Just another picture, only this one has Gracie in it to help make it worse. No box office. These are the kind that drive another nail in the exhibitor's casket. A fancy price and nothing in return. Running time, 67 minutes. Played August 26-27-28.—Earl J. McClurg, Grand Theatre, Preston, Idaho. Rural and small town patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Burns and Allen—Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians are swell in this. Burns and Allen furnish the comedy. Pleased the most of them.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Lanny Ross—Drew very good business. Picture is very good. Believe that Ross will become very popular if given the right material.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Carl Brisson, Kitty Carlisle, Victor McLaglen, Jack Oakie—The best of the season's musicals. Has a real murder plot and suspense and, therefore, adds plot interest to music and comedy. Running time, 89 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Jack Oakie—Some liked this and some didn't. Consider it an average murder story with some good stage sets.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Jack Oakie—A very good picture and one that I think will please anywhere on any date. Played August 26.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES: Jack Oakie—This picture has everything. Music, romance, songs, action, mystery and a plot that fits into the musical production. Very well acted, directed and produced. Played to good business. Running time, 89 minutes. Played Aug. 7.—V. C. Weschler, Colonial Theatre, Erie, Pa. General patronage.

NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG: Gertrude Michael, Leon Errol—Right snappy, exciting story of a lady "Raffles." Good movie entertainment, nothing big, but will entertain. Leon Errol gives some laughs as the athletic detective. Played Sept. 1.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—Made for nonsense entertainment and it hits. If your folks like W. C. Fields, they'll go to it. Personally I like him and he pleases the majority of our patrons. Played Aug. 25.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—Burlesquing the old kerosene light circuit. Not too much to the story. It was an innovation, but one like it will be plenty. And W. C. Fields is all right in support, but not to build the entire picture around him. The juggling of Fields was the high spot of the picture, but I say one like it is enough. Some laughs, but the audience was very much divided as to whether it was good or bad.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—Fields' style of comedy seems to click in this town. Every picture seems to be better at the box office. Pleased 100 per cent. Business okay. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 26-27.—Ralph Larned, Paramount Theatre, LaCrosse, Kansas. Small town patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—This is the best Fields to date. It pleased my people and the box-office.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SHE MADE HER BED: Sally Eilers, Richard Arlen—If they had given this a name, it might have done a fair business, but as it is titled, it should be left on the shelf, though the cast warrants considering it as entertainment. Running time, 78 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie, Ben Bernie—

SUPER-SONOTONE

NOW . . . Licensed for Group Installation in RCA-Victor Sound Equipment

Some liked it and some didn't. Not as good a show as I expected.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson Iowa. Rural patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Cary Grant, Sylvia Sidney—A well liked picture. Farce comedy. Should please. A good supporting cast and well directed. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Aug. 20-21.—Hammond Green, Princess Theatre, Albertville, Ala. Small town patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney—Good picture. Good story and acting fine. Business above average for mid-week. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 22-23.—Ralph Larned, Paramount Theatre, LaCrosse, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TRUMPET BLOWS, THE: George Raft—A very nice picture. Plenty of action and the folks all thought it plenty good. The women do not go so hot for the bull fighting, but the men eat it up and you have to please them once in a while. Good for any date. Funny thing, though, all the way around the arena are Mexican signs and only one in American. A big one on Orange Crush, and it seemed that every other shot was taken with it as a background. Wonder what they got out of it? Played August 19.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields, Joan Marsh—This is a very good comedy and one that pleased all of our patrons. It is full of laughs and that together with a good love story makes this good entertainment of the family type. If you want a good comedy, book this and you are sure to please. The excellent cast turns in some good acting. We played this on a late Saturday night show and to good business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 18.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RKO

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix, Elizabeth Allan, Ralph Bellamy—Poorest sound we have had for months—photography also quite dark. Drew better than I expected. For those that like this class of show, it would have gone over better if it could have been understood. Several remarked that my sound was going "haywire." Whenever we get a show that doesn't have the proper sound, our equipment gets blamed. Running time, 74 minutes.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

BACHELOR BAIT: Stuart Erwin, Pert Kelton—Good comedy. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Aug. 5-6-7.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town theatre.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—For the first time since this ace of comedy teams made pictures I had walkouts. This picture was sold as a super special at an advance in rental of about 100 per cent. That's not what is biting me. I hate to see this team that at one time were my best cards being killed by the material they are given. "Cockeyed Cavaliers" is much too silly for even weak-minded people. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 18-20.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is an exceptionally clean Wheeler and Woolsey and proved very pleasing entertainment. Ten more nice pictures like this, and they will have lived down "So This Is Africa." Running time, 72 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is a very good Wheeler and Woolsey picture. Song "Big Bad Wolf Is Dead" was amusing. Picture has a good supporting cast.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—While this was a better picture than their last three or four, the box office drops off a little on every one of their pictures. Wheeler and Woolsey used to be top at the box office here, but now they are just average. Pleased all who saw it. Business average. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 12-13.—Ralph Larned, Paramount Theatre, LaCrosse, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CRIME DOCTOR: Otto Kruger, Karen Morley—Just another murder mystery story that won't hurt, but doesn't help and won't be missed if you can duck it. Running time, 74 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

CROSS FIRE: Tom Keene—Another good horse opera that pleased the natives on Saturday night.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—and Little Women: Katharine Hepburn, Joan Bennett, Paul Lukas, Frances Dee, Jean Parker, Edna May Oliver, Douglass Montgomery—These fine big pictures, run second-run, do better business and are better for the theatre, I think, than running some of the lesser products from the same firm, and usually find that they are glad to substitute second runs for unused lesser pictures.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix, Dorothy Wilson—A good picture and splendid action but business very poor. Just wouldn't draw for me. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 27-28.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix, Dorothy Wilson—Seemed to please. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 15-16.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

KEEP 'EM ROLLING: Walter Huston—Horse lovers, particularly, will enjoy this picture. The plot is built around the love a tough, hard-boiled artillery man has for his horse. Nothing much, but a good program picture. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Aug. 22-23.—Hammond Green, Princess Theatre, Albertville, Ala. Small town patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS, THE: Ann Harding, John Boles—A beautiful story of a remarkable love. Ann Harding and John Boles at their best. The type of picture to please any audience. Business good. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Aug. 24.—O. T. Kirby, Palace Theatre, Roxboro, N. C. Small town patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS, THE: Ann Harding—A lady's picture that gave excelent satisfaction, but failed at the box office. Play midweek and use extra selling force and your ladies will bring the men. —B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. Small town patronage.

LIFE OF VIRGIE WINTERS: Ann Harding—Pleased well. Sad, but very good entertainment. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Aug. 22-23.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

MAN OF TWO WORLDS: Francis Lederer, Elissa Landi—Lederer is a very fine actor. Picture is worth playing. Two reels too long to suit my impatient patrons.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot—An excellent show ruined by a print that had about 200 splices. This is suitable for any audience. I played this in June when business is away off and this was almost a record low.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot, Frank Albertson—Albertson made the show. It's a picture worth showing in any man's theatre. Good, clean, refreshing.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot—Dandy show for bargain night. Fair business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SCARLET RIVER: Tom Keene—Good western. Something different to start in with, but the same ending that all westerns have. Tom Keene was the big shot of this play and acted it out very well. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Aug. 14-15.—Wm. Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SING AND LIKE IT: Zasu Pitts—Pitts should have stuck to featured parts. Too much of her gets tiresome. No draw and a poor picture. Played on double bill and my patrons went out dissatisfied. Played Aug. 20-21.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

SON OF KONG: Robert Armstrong, Helen Mack—This went over well with the midweek bargain night fans. Was afraid of it on account of the adverse reports but came out O.K. and believe no small town exhibitor need pass it up.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

SON OF THE BORDER: Tom Keene—Our western fans seemed to enjoy this picture, which is about on par with the usual run of westerns. Played Aug. 24-25.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

STINGAREE: Irene Dunne, Richard Dix—Just fair. Expected a better show and gave it a holiday date and it went over fair, but was a little disappointing. Running time, 76 minutes. Played July 3-4.—Tom Fleming, Alimar Theatre, Live Oak, Florida. General patronage.

STINGAREE: Irene Dunne, Richard Dix—A good picture that pleased those who saw it. Title kept them away. A high class picture that should be played midweek. The picture failed to draw regular business, but it is extra good. Running time, 76 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. Small town patronage.

STINGAREE: Richard Dix, Irene Dunne—This is one fine production in every sense of the word, good singing, thrilling throughout, excitement, great acting and great story. Business below average but not the fault of the picture. No walkouts on this one and that means balm to the mind of the exhibitor. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Aug. 25-27.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

STINGAREE: Irene Dunne, Richard Dix, Mary Boland, Conway Tearle—We think this is one of the very best pictures we've played lately. Patrons all liked it—had scads of compliments on it. It held up to our average three-day run receipts. We would like to have more pictures like this for our town. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Aug. 5-6-7.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez—Awful is right. Patrons walked out five and six at one time. Receipts not enough to pay for feature; second night empty house. Gave tickets back to few who came and closed for the night. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Aug. 28-29.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Norman Foster, Wm. Gargan, Marian Nixon—Jimmy is not versatile enough to hold an entire feature and this proved a too long two-reel comedy. No kicks, but just disappointed, as people expected more than they got. Running time, 74½ minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE: Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Norman Foster, Marian Nixon—I'm sorry I wasted a date on this. It did not draw and was not liked. We never want another picture with Durante in it. Running time, 74½ minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—A good comedy. Running time, 68 minutes. Aug. 17-18.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

TWO ALONE: Jean Parker, Tom Brown—A good picture on a double bill. A lot of good things in this picture. The story was interesting and well acted.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WE'RE RICH AGAIN: Marian Nixon, Billie Burke, Reginald Denny, Buster Crabbe, Edna May Oliver—This is above the average in cast, and as a slapstick comedy makes a dandy Friday-Saturday show. Running time, 71½ minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

WE'RE RICH AGAIN: Marian Nixon, Billie Burke—A big cast in a dandy picture. Nothing so very big about it, just the same excellent entertainment. Played Aug. 8-9.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town theatre.

United Artists

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN: Lee Tracy, Sally Blane—This will not please the League of Decency but is pretty good entertainment and if you can get it for half what they ask for it, it will make a good program.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

BLOOD MONEY: George Bancroft, Frances Dee, Judith Anderson—Didn't do business and it shouldn't. George is not box-office, and this story and picture didn't help any. Running time, 65 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Too boisterous for small town. The title kept them away. Business below average. Played Aug. 16-17-18. —Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Sask., Canada. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY THRU A KEYHOLE: Constance Cummings, Russ Colombo, Paul Kelly, Blossom Seeley, Gregory Ratoff, Texas Guinan, Frances Williams—A fair musical romance with some clever comedy. Did not draw extra good for us. Cast don't mean much and the story weak. One of those stage show stories. All alike. Little old, but will do for midweek. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Aug. 19-20-21.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Nebraska. Working class and rural patronage.

GALLANT LADY: Ann Harding, Clive Brook, Otto Kruger, Tullio Carminati, Dickie Moore—This is a great show and worth showing in any theatre, any time. Ann Harding was never shown at better advantage. Running time, 86 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD, THE: George Arliss—A marvelous production that pleases everyone and which did good Arliss business because of the neat publicity job someone has done on it. Fine production and deserves all the pep you can put behind it. Running time, 86 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Spencer Tracy, Jack Oakie, Constance Cummings—This is a clever story, well-produced by a competent cast, and will please. I used it for a Sunday date and it fitted O. K. Running time, 77 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Spencer Tracy—Packed with action, comedy which moves along at a fast pace. Well liked by men and boys but rather lacking in feminine appeal. Played to average business. Running time, 87 minutes. Played Aug. 21.—V. C. Weschler, Colonial Theatre, Erie, Pa. General patronage.

MOULIN ROUGE: Constance Bennett—O. K. comedy with some nice music numbers. Played Aug. 19-20.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MR. ROBINSON CRUSOE: Douglas Fairbanks—I picked up this old one with a doubt as to its value. It sure pleased and drew well for me. Friday-Saturday patrons thought it O.K.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

NANA: Anna Sten—Well, here is Anna Sten. Sam Goldwyn, we are told, spent a half million dollars on this little girl, and had he given her a suitable story, he would have got his money back and then some. Miss Sten is the most beautiful of all the foreign stars. She is so far ahead of Garbo and Dietrich that there is no comparison. As foreign stars go she is in a class by herself. She is beautiful and she knows how to act. Her main trouble is her broken English. All the members of the cast are excellent, but Miss Sten stands out alone and is all that Sam Goldwyn claims for her. The picture itself is a flop in the small towns, because of the story and because of the broken English, bad sound and unhappy ending. Next to "Catherine the Great" we did the smallest Sunday business in two years. Pictures of this type have no place in the small American town, and it is usually a loss to play them. It's too bad to give a wonderful cast a story like this. Hollywood is surely a barren desert when it comes to story writers.—Played Aug. 26-27.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

PALOOKA: Jimmy Durante, Stuart Erwin, Lupe Velez—This proved good fun for a Friday-Saturday date and should certainly be run before "Strictly Dynamite," as it is a much better picture and will build up the star. Running time, 86 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General partonage.

PALOOKA: Jimmy Durante, Stuart Erwin—The first picture Durante had been in that I could sit through. It's a good comedy. Durante has just enough part and the director kept him a little quieter. O. K., Jimmy, quiet down a little and you won't "mortify" the small town patrons so much. It's an O. K. show and the customers commented on it. Played Aug. 28-29.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Universal

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi, David Manners—I was really not expecting to break even on this, but actually made $3.00, so, as it seemed to please, I guess I will have to say "The Black Cat" was a howling success. It is not every picture we can make $3.00 on nowadays. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Aug. 19-20.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW: John Barrymore — I stalled this off for a long time, but finally set it in. Entire show is set inside a large office building. More doors are opened and closed than in any picture ever produced. Comments both ways. Business poor but a show your better class will enjoy thoroughly. Best Barrymore performance since "Bill of Divorcement."—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson Minn. General patronage.

COUNTESS OF MONTE CRISTO: Fay Wray, Paul Lukas—A pleasing romance with some clever comedy, real light so that everyone can understand it. O. K. for the family. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Aug. 12-13-14.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Nebraska. Working class and rural patronage.

COUNTESS OF MONTE CRISTO: Fay Wray—A very good program picture played on bargain nights to the best business in months. Everyone enjoyed it. Running time, eight reels.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

CROSS COUNTRY CRUISE: Lew Ayres—This is an extra good entertaining picture. We played it too old but it gave satisfaction at that, as people came and saw it the second time. That's something for any picture to do nowadays.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GLAMOUR: Constance Cummings, Paul Lukas—A picture with absolutely no drawing power here. We did not take in film rental on it, although it tells an interesting story and is beautifully put on. Running time, 74 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

GUN JUSTICE: Ken Maynard—The surprise picture of the year for me. This almost unheard-of little western came along and gave me the biggest mid-week gross for over two years. "Strawberry Roan" had held the record and the unusual thing about it is the fact that Maynard is hardly established here as I have only used Maynards in the past two years. The sound was the best I ever heard and the story very good.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy—This seemed to please. Had no complaints. Usual good work by Tracy. Lots of action.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. Small town patronage.

INVISIBLE MAN, THE: Claude Rains, William Harrigan, Gloria Stuart, Dudley Digges. Drew above midweek average and was very well liked. Running time, 70 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW?: Margaret Sullavan, Douglass Montgomery—Universal having made "Only Yesterday" with Sullavan a success in that picture, they made one now in which they suffer and suffer and then suffer some more. Drab story and I suppose that some of these must be made to balance the comedy pictures. But at least there could have been some lighter moments in it to relieve the sordid story. There are no names in the cast other than Sullavan that mean anything at the box office. I grant that Miss Sullavan is fine in emotional roles, but it is too much to expect for her to carry the whole picture, not very well liked by the audience. Too much sob stuff for the small towns. Our experience has been that Universal has not delivered this year. A lot of poor ones have come through, seeing it from the small town standpoint. Business way down second day.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

UNCERTAIN LADY: Genevieve Tobin, Edward Everett Horton—Just a program picture that got by on a double bill.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Warner

AS THE EARTH TURNS: Jean Muir, Donald Woods—A mighty good program picture. Very interesting story and well acted. Both stars fine. Gave splendid satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DR. MONICA: Kay Francis—Drew good business but only pleased about half. Picture below average for Francis.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Bancroft, Iowa. Rural patronage.

FROM HEADQUARTERS: George Brent—A good detective picture that pleased.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. Small town patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy—This is a fine little picture that should make a great school benefit show. Swell tap dancing by LeRoy.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre Viroqua, Wis. Small town patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy—Played on Bargain Night and it pleased my patrons. Didn't think the picture would have much box office on account no star but it is a good small town program picture. Hal LeRoy not much to look at but he certainly can dance. Played Aug. 29-30.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: James Cagney—Well, boys, here is where you make another payment on the note. One of the best pictures produced this year. It held up and pleased for three days. This Warner bunch just continue to turn out better pictures all the time. It's a great show.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

I'VE GOT YOUR NUMBER: Joan Blondell, Pat O'Brien—Joan Blondell is proving quite an attraction at my theatre and this picture did above the average August business. It is nice entertainment.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

JIMMY THE GENT: James Cagney, Bette Davis—Typical Cagney picture and a good Friday-Saturday show.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MODERN HERO, A: Richard Barthelmess—Not very good entertainment. Barthelmess doesn't measure up to the role and it's a sordid, unpleasant story. Played Aug. 12-13.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PERSONALITY KID, THE: Pat O'Brien, Glenda Farrell—A program picture but a very pleasing one. Story gets away from the beaten path and the players do good work in their respective parts. Plenty of comedy and wisecracks throughout and a tear at the climax. Comments favorable and a little more action at the box than has been in evidence of late on mid-week attractions. Played Aug. 15-16.—William Conn, Webb Theatre, Gastonia, N. C. General patronage.

PERSONALITY KID, THE: Pat O'Brien, Glenda Farrell—This is a very good little picture that is full of action, comedy and a good romantic story. It is a comedy drama that should please any audience. Although it is a prizefight picture, there are other angles of interest. It is good entertainment for the entire family and the trailer will sell it for you in advance. Played one day to very good business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Aug. 24.—J. J. Medford. Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SMARTY: Joan Blondell, Warren William—A dandy little picture, but not up to the entertaining standard set by "Convention City" and therefore disappointed many. It is good sophisticated entertainment, however, and weak only by comparison. Running time, 64 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

UPPERWORLD: Warren William, Mary Astor, Ginger Rogers, Dickie Moore—Picture more attractive than the title—it is not particularly highbrow and Mary Astor is human enough to make all men enjoy the show. Running time, 72 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity Productions

COMICOLOR CARTOONS: These are very good for any program. Especially suitable for children, as they are all fairy tales. Running time, 8 minutes.—W. R. Boughn, Jr., Soo Theatre, South Sioux City, Nebraska. Working class and rural patronage.

Columbia

AUTO SHOW: Scrappy Cartoon—Good Scrappy cartoon.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

STAGE KRAZY: Krazy Kat cartoon—Good. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

TEN BABY FINGERS: Sidney and Murray—When these two comedians find a baby on their doorstep, you just know there will be fun. And the baby had all the women in the audience completely captivated. We think this is a splendid comedy. Running time, 2 reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

Educational

ALLEZ OOP: Buster Keaton—Pleased a Saturday audience very well. Running time, 2 reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

BEANSTALK JACK: Just fair. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

WHAT'S TO DO?: We played this one because Shirley Temple is in it, and although she does not have much of a part, it gave good satisfaction. Running time, 2 reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

Master Art Productions

SONG PARADE: Organlogue—Good. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

RASSLIN' ROUND: Willie Whopper—About like the rest of the Willie Whopper cartoons.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

REDUCING CREME: Willie Whopper Cartoon—No worse than the rest of this series. Perhaps we're too critical. Probably not enough good ideas for so many cartoons.—J. Glen Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

ROBIN HOOD, JR.: Willie Whopper—This is only fair entertainment and not as good as the last issue of this series. These are not as good as the "Flip" cartoons of last year and here's hoping Metro will improve them or discontinue producing them. Running time, nine minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orphuem Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ROBIN HOOD, JR.: Willie Whopper Cartoon—Good cartoon. The kids ate it up. Couldn't get them out after the first show as they all had to see it the second time. Personally, didn't think so much of it. Running time, 20 minutes. J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

VITAL VICTUALS: Oddities—Pete tells the wives how to save the husbands' digestion. Good short, in color.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BETTY BOOP'S RISE TO FAME: Betty Boop Cartoon—A hashed over conglomeration of some previous Betty Boop cartoons that gave excellent satisfaction and was well done. Running time, nine minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 11—It was nice to see four old-timers, Flora Finch, Florence Turner, Kate Price and Maurice Costello, as well as Clara Bow on her ranch and Jackie Cooper meeting Diana Wynyard. This is one of the best numbers in this series. Running time, 11 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

KEEPS RAININ' ALL THE TIME: Screen Songs—This is a very good screen song with Gertrude Niesen who sings that popular selection "Stormy Weather." C. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

LOST OPPORTUNITY?

Among the various comments received anent our recent editorial "What's Wrong With Business?" the following is quoted from a prominent Round Tabler's letter:

"Your editorial in the current issue of Motion Picture Herald is well taken. You have certainly hit the spike squarely. Unfortunately, I am afraid that the cross you are bearing needs more support than you can hope to secure from the field. The boys are eager enough to lend a hand in the fray, but because of 'job fear' will necessarily remain expressionless.

"It is pitiful that the opportunity presented by the formation of a code slipped by because most of us were asleep. . . . "

Whatever the reasons may be, no bettering of conditions under which many theatremen labor may be expected while managers are gripped by the above "job fear" that evidently renders them speechless.

As far back as August, 1933, we offered to go to bat for the manager, and in conversation with Deputy Administrator Sol Rosenblatt, that official expressed himself favorably in this respect. But there was little cooperation from the field.

Again we state our willingness to intercede. The opportunity is not lost, but until sufficient evidence is received to back us up, we can do little but stand by.

BUTCHER SELLS MEAT

It happened at a Midwest theatre, reports a member who records the incident by mail. The front was liberally plastered with all kinds of cooling copy, and relatively unnoticed were two modest posters advertising the current show—a double feature bill, both strong pictures.

Accompanied by his house manager, the exhibitor surveyed the scene. He asked for a copy of the evening paper, turned the pages to the display ad of a local meat market and asked:

"What's this butcher selling?"

"Why, meat," returned the puzzled theatreman.

"Right," said the boss. "He isn't trying to sell his ice box, is he?"

From way out in the state of Oregon, one of the members sends along a circus style throwaway advertising in detail the sermons given recently by a visiting evangelist. Under the preacher's name, in boldface type, was carried this caption: "The Converted Theatre Manager".

Well, that's comforting. We have always been led to believe that most of us were beyond saving.

SCHOOL SCREEN STUDY

Cooperation between the theatre and school for the purpose of a more intensive study of the motion picture by students takes on wider significance with the opening of the new scholastic year. Visual education has become more than a phrase and earnest educators are striving to perfect practical courses in this comparatively new medium.

Theatremen who are considering school tieups for the coming season should consider the possibilities of the school-and-screen movement. Regular courses are available and it is our recollection that in the past year quite a few managers secured a lot of box office benefit by assisting their local authorities in the progress of these classes.

There are, of course, other more familiar school angles which have been reported in the Club section and will again be dusted off for current use. Perusal of individual files will no doubt bring them to light.

Nevertheless, a showman's progress is to an extent gauged by his aptitude in keeping close contact with any new trend that may open an avenue for extra revenues. The spreading influence of the screen study courses is not being neglected by forward thinking managers.

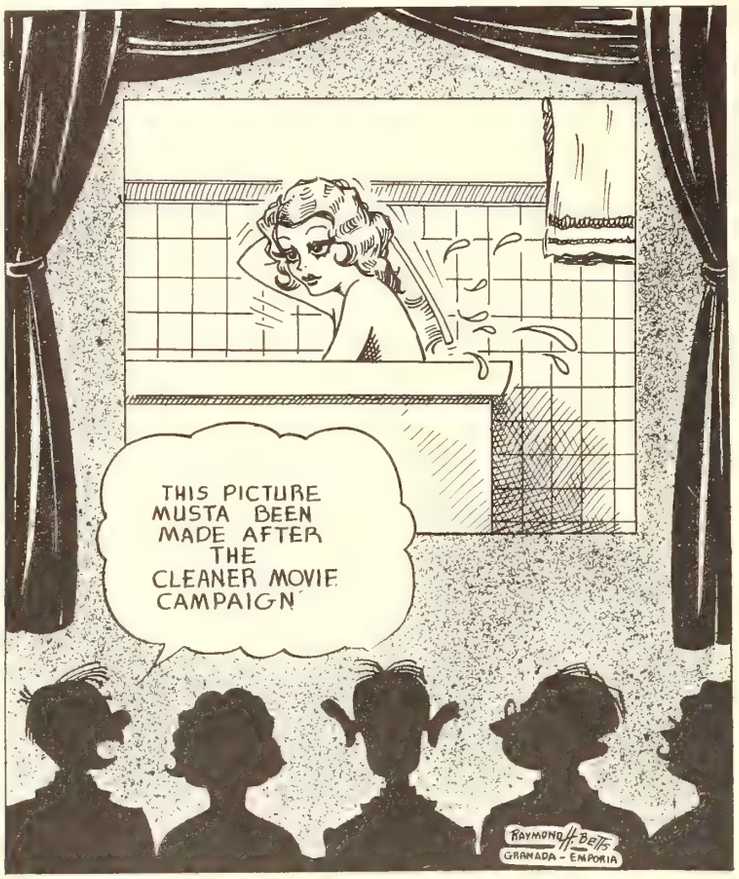
THOSE DILLINGER GAGS



As was to be expected, immediately after the Dillinger finale there erupted a flock of questionable exploitation gags in various forms, especially those tied into campaigns on "Manhattan Melodrama". Some of the stunts strove for laughs and others were "played straight," the latter in most cases intended to thrill or to shock.

One bally recently received is typical of this unfortunate trend. Photo depicts wax figure on stretcher, with theatre banner reading "Baby Face Nelson, you're next," etc., rest of copy hooking in to coming date on the MGM picture.

Seems to us that theatremen today are already involved in enough assorted grief without hunting for more. Surprising, then, isn't it, that there are managers who deliberately leave themselves wide open to further and unnecessary attacks by the use of such dubious advertising?

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Boardwalk Gag Aids "Loves Me" Opening

Sid Blumenstock, who exploits Warner Theatres in Atlantic City, under district chief Herb Copelan, in spite of rigid restrictions against advertising on the far-famed Boardwalk, worked a neat bally there on the world premiere of "She Loves Me Not." A boy dressed in college professorial robes, carrying a large diploma, was wheeled up and down the Boardwalk, and after collecting the usual crowd, diploma would be unrolled to show copy reading, "College of Mirth. You are awarded the highest degree of entertainment when you see Bing Crosby, etc. and etc." The stunt was also continued on the streets of a city, "professor" continuing his travels in bannered auto (see photo) with large cutout daisy on front of radiator.

Radio tiein had announcer and singers in lobby for three nights, putting over songs from picture and making announcements on house p.a. system that drew attention of boardwalk crowds. Another broadcast was put on with leading oil company giving over program to the ceremonies on opening night. Music stores and orchestras also aided.

Heralds were stuffed in Liberty magazines, hotel key boxes, and bus stations. Printed napkins were used by board walk and main street restaurants, and special front helped to attract further attention.

Lip Stick Teaser Used on "Cellini"

From Mrs. Vuono, capable operator of the Palace, Stamford, Conn., comes a teaser used on "Cellini," reported to have stirred up a little extra curiosity on the date. On correspondence paper, the following was mailed to feminine patrons: "Dear Lady: This is an affair you should know about"—directly under which was imprinted impression of two rouged lips, and instructions to call a certain number (the theatre's) and ask for Frederic. Carefully handled, the stunt brought results.

Doll's House Bally Builds Up "Marker"

Decidedly out of the ordinary was the doll's house created by Manager Frank Ellis, as a build up for "Little Miss Marker" at the Del Rio, Los Banos, Cal. Finished completely in every detail, the baby bungalow was planted on the sidewalk out front in advance and Ellis reports most of the town dropped by to see his creation.

Local and surrounding papers carried long stories on the exhibit, going into great detail to describe the furnishings, not neglecting to plug the date. Five feet high (see photo), the house was painted white, and a complete system of wiring provided for colored inside bulbs for interior illumination.

Walls were tinted, floors spread with linoleum, and practical windows draped with curtains. Outside, green trellises and rustic lanterns further enhanced the effect. Direct phone connection was made between bungalow and Ellis' theatre office. Warren George assisted in the designing and building of the attractive structure.

The doll house idea is a smart one for buildup on pictures with small girl appeal. It is highly recommended.

Enlargement Front Stops B'way Crowds

To catch the attention of the throngs which passed by his prominent corner, Manager John P. Goring, of the Criterion, on New York's Times Square, resorts to exceptional selling fronts, an excellent example being his display on the revival showing of RKO's "Cimarron."

The outstanding feature (see photo) was a bromide enlargement 96 inches in length, showing the start of the Oklahoma land rush depicted in the beginning of the picture. Letters immediately above and below were compo board cutouts, bordered by stills of various sizes. Title was built of solid letters six inches in thickness and painted crimson, the color motiff of the entire front.

In the display was also included a blowup of the praise letter written by Franklin D. Roosevelt, then Governor of New York, on the initial release of the picture. Featured on the opening night of the revival date was the attendance of the officers of the national Irene Dunne Club, who were photographed in the lobby, picture breaking the metropolitan dailies.

ED M. HART WINNER IN AUGUST JUDGING

Plainfield Showman Receives Quigley Award for Oxford Theatre "Clown" Campaign

by A-MIKE VOGEL

New Jersey follows New York!

Stirred to action by the honors won last month by a New York showman, and presented by Governor Lehman, the theatremen across the Hudson, up to their necks in the Quigley competetions, have speeded up their entries and produced a winner.

Ed M. Hart, City Manager, Walter Reade Theatres, of Plainfield, N. J., is the fortunate and skilled theatreman, and he rings the gong with a corking campaign on Warners' "Circus Clown," put over at the Oxford Theatre.

Following closely, in fact almost breast to breast at the finish line, the judges, Messrs. Al Lichtman, Billy Ferguson and Eddie Alperson, selected the entry of Manager William Leggiero, of Warner Brothers' Ritz Theatre, in San Bernardino, Cal., also on "Circus Clown," for the only First Mention given this month.

Ed Hart sure won the Quigley Award for August, but judging from the closeness of the returns, it will be a long time before he finds himself in so even a race. It was that close, mates.

Sid Holland, City Manager, Elkhart Amusement Co., of Elkhart, Ind., on "Baby Take a Bow," put on at the Elco, Milt Harris, who whammed over "Treasure Island" at the State, Cleveland, and Sig Solomon, on "Navy" at the Regent, Newark, also finished strong, with a flock of other showmen also grabbing off the Honorable Mentions, names and locations of these managers being listed in column to right.

All in all, the campaigns entered for the August plaque have maintained a very high standard of exploitation and advertising, and for this reason it was decided to award 22 Honorable Mentions, incidentally, the greatest number yet given.

The honors are fairly split between managers who have been so selected for the first time, and those who are repeaters, twelve of the Honorables going to those crashing the hit column for these returns, and ten having basked in the spotlight before.

September Entries Arriving

With the drive swinging into the stretch, the struggle for the rewards in the next few months promises to become keener as the finishing line nears. Already campaigns for September are coming in, and all bespeak plenty of effort and preparation.

Again we invite showmen everywhere to send in their campaigns for the Quigley Award. Never before in the history of the theatre has there been so splendid an opportunity for managers to gain recognition for their unrewarded showmanship.

The few simple rules were run in the issue of September 1, on page 59. Read them, managers, and come on in.

Post Puts Over Old Time Fiddlers' Contest

An old time fiddlers' contest was staged by A. E. Post, Iris Theatre, Red Lodge, Mont., for his "Men in White" date that proved mighty successful for him, judging by reports. Post announced that he would give two tickets for every name and address of an old time fiddler, received 102, and sent each an invitation to enter the contest. "A. E.'s" next step was to wire Clark Gable if he would award the loving cup that the theatre had bought, and Gable's wire of acceptance was placed with his photo in window of leading jeweler.

Five judges were selected, a musician, professor, salesman, businessman and a rancher. First prize consisted of the cup and $10; second, $7.50, third, $5, and then two consolation prizes. Post states he will be glad to furnish any further details on request to interested members.

Ties In All Fountains On Shirley Temple Drink

Manager George Laby, Victory, Holyoke, Mass., spotted his "Baby Take a Bow" date in many effective ways, but topping the advance was a hook-in with every place in town selling fountain drinks with window strips and mirror stickers, copy plugging drinks named after the baby star and the title. And to make the gag stronger, George had every spot serve the same concoctions made up according to a recipe he devised.

Baby stores also came in on coop ads, window displays and special sales, all featuring the starlet cutouts and credits. Toy departments cooperated, as did shoe shops on Temple slipper.

George succeeded in planting two column 10-inch shot of Temple on theatre page of local sheet, reporting this an event of note, as paper has never before given as much free space to any one theatre on any individual attraction.

STUNT PUTS OVER PICTURE

Former Paramounteer Tells of Highlight Street Gag, In Third of Series on Early Exploitation

by FRED V. GREENE, JR.

Washington & St. Cloud, Washington, N. J.

A few years ago—I'll not attempt to recall the exact one—I received a hurried order to hop to Washington and put over "Ladies Must Live" for Loew's Theatre.

Fred V. Greene, Jr.

"Ladies Must Live" had been touted to the skies, but just before leaving New York, I was told that it was far from what it was supposed to be. Even so, George Loane Tucker had directed the biggest portion of it—he died before it was completed—and I felt reasonably sure that it would be another "Miracle Man."

What an awakening I received when I introduced myself to the theatre manager. He told me the Home Office executives had previewed the picture and wanted to cancel it, but were kept from doing so by the promise of the help of an exploitation man. And I was the goat!

At first glance, it appeared a hopeless task. I couldn't break down the manager's resistance. He was sore because he had to play such a picture and nothing, in his estimation, that I could possibly do would prevent a flop that appeared to be certain. Nor was he willing to do one thing to prevent this result. I could get no help of any sort from him and what few suggestions I made he frowned upon.

Sells Idea to Paper

It was Tuesday and with the opening slated for Saturday, I had no time to lose. I walked over to Pennsylvania Avenue, bought one of each of the Washington papers, then sat down on a bench to look them over. Suddenly an idea came to me and I hustled over to the Exploitation Manager of the Hearst paper. I outlined my plan briefly and he was all for it, promising every possible cooperation.

Briefly related, my scheme was to insert a want ad in this paper along the following lines: "Ladies Must Live! 100 Girls Wanted For Immediate and Remunerative Work. Apply 9 A. M. Loew's Theatre." Of course, I couldn't use 100 girls, yet I did want 25; but if 100 applied, I could pick and choose. These girls would wear a wide white ribbon, over their clothes, of course, the ribbon lettered "Ladies Must Live" slung over their right shoulder, the lettering being on the front and back of it.

According to the arrangement with the newspaper, we would be furnished with all the copies we needed, at 50 per cent less than the regular dealer's price and I had already selected 25 spots to which I intended to assign a girl.

Gag Brings Flock of Gals

The next morning the girls came. I didn't attempt to count them, but there was a flock and then some, all ages, styles and descriptions. I assembled them in the foyer and made a general speech as to the character of the employment. As soon as this fact had fully seeped in, there was a general exodus. The majority thought they were to be used for stage work—the thought of paper selling was an insult to their artistic aspirations. I then stated that all those who felt that way could scram, while those who really wanted to make some good money could stay, when I would go further into it with them.

About 30 remained and I went deeply into the subject.

The days for work would be Thursday (this was Wednesday), Friday and Saturday. Each would receive two dollars a day salary and all the papers she could sell would be furnished free. Further, no matter what piece of money was given for a paper, they were to pocket it with a "Thank you—Ladies must live," and a smile. Of course, if a squawk was put up, give back the change; otherwise, keep it.

About 25 reported the next day and we received a bunch of the first papers run off. The girls went to their posts and I went over to the newspaper, where a photographer was waiting to go around with me.

The first girl checked up was nearly out of papers and I rushed back to the theatre with a new idea. Loading what was left in a cab, we went to every post and in most cases a fresh supply was needed. More papers were sent over from the newspaper office and the rest of the day I cruised about, replenishing depleted stocks. That evening the girls met me, as prearranged, at the theatre and they were most enthusiastic. I recall one girl who had made over $25, not counting her two dollars salary.

The next day the paper played the whole affair up in a big way, illustrating the story with the photos taken by the cameraman and giving a brief story of the picture, but playing up in a most touching and sobby fashion the sad fact that the director had finally passed on just before its completion. In other words, he gave his life for the production.

On Friday the girls were out again, with sales exceeding those of the previous day. Saturday was the biggest of the three and everyone was happy.

Then the results came, or perhaps I should say the crowds came. And they kept up. The opening day was one of the biggest the theatre had ever had.

MANAGER SAYS "NO" BUT IDEA CLICKS

Although the story happened years ago, Fred Greene, now an exhibitor over in Washington, N. J., still gets a laugh out of the lack of enthusiasm expressed by the manager of the house. And perhaps not to be wondered at, for in the early days of field exploitation, it sure took a lot of selling by the boys to persuade conservative managers that exploitation as practiced by the pioneer Paramounteers was box office.—MIKE.

Stein Puts On Ace "Premier" Contests

The "Hollywood Premier" stunt in the form of a star double and imitator contest was recently revived by Publicity Director L. S. Stein, Warner Theatres, Chicago, Ill., at the Jeffery in that city, and so successful was it reported that the gag is to be repeated in five other houses in that district.

The details are as follows: Three weeks ahead, a huge board of photos of 20 well known and easily imitated stars was put in the lobby. Opposite each star was an eight by ten space with a question mark, the spot intended no doubt for the photo of the individual winner doubling for or imitating that star.

Trailers were started at the same time, and were renewed each week copy being changed all having to do with the contest. Publicity was planted in the neighborhood and downtown newspapers, and entries solicited from dramatic and music schools. Each entrant was photographed free of charge as a result of tieup.

Promotes Ford Parade

On the night of the premier, a parade of ten Fords promoted from local dealers was led by a sound truck over the principal streets of the district each car carrying one or two of the contestants. Theatre front was lighted by huge bunch lamps and other equipment was a microphone and camera.

On arrival at the theatre after the parade, each entrant spoke over the microphone in keeping with the character being impersonated. Inside the show was continued on the stage, Stein acting as M. C. Each of the principals, wearing the costume typical of the star represented, sang or danced. Those who were merely doubles, simply said a few words to the audience, and although Stein does not say so, no doubt the prizes were awarded by audience applause. These prizes were promoted from neighborhood merchants who were given credits in lobby displays and in special program made up for the occasion. To aid the entrants in their choice of costume, a number of dresses, hats, etc., used by the Warner stars on the coast were also exhibited.

It was estimated that the total cost of the premiere was $87.50, the event pulling $225 worth of extra business, according to Stein.

OBSERVATIONS IN THE FIELD

Mr. Keene Continues His Series With Some Actual Instances of "Neglects" on Part of Managers

by LIONEL H. KEENE

Loew's Southern Representative

A manager tied up with a coiffure show held at one of the better hotels of his city. He had 300 half-sheet cards printed. At first glance, you wouldn't know it was a theatre tieup. In a case of this kind, certainly the theatre should receive at least 50 per cent of the publicity, and the half-sheet card should have been printed in two colors so that both parties to the tieup would have received full benefit.

What I have never been able to understand is why a manager will permit window cards and photographs to remain out on pictures he has already played.

A convention was in the city. Investigation disclosed more than 1,100 registered delegates, all potential customers. No "Welcome" was included in the theatre's newspaper ads—over the box office—or in any form of advertising arranged for distribution in the hotels to the visitors. Watching for local events, capitalizing on them costs nothing to speak of, and may mean money.

On an outstanding picture, window frame stills were used in merchants' stores, with the theatre name and date written in white ink, but no mention of the picture. To determine what picture it was, one had to get close to the window and read the very fine print at the foot of the still. The lobby treatment of the picture was missed by a mile. No mention of its music, nothing to indicate the type of picture. Then the manager wonders why he does not do business.

Another town did not have a single announcement in a hotel lobby despite the oppositions' attractive cards.

It is remarkable how theatres will fail to sell music of a picture by displaying the front pieces in connection with their lobby advertising in advance, and playing the records in their lobby, announcing, "the selections you now hear are so and so from such and such a picture coming to this theatre," or words to that effect.

Some theatres have their lobbies so cluttered with announcements of coming pictures, a patron cannot tell which is the next picture. My personal opinion is the manager should concentrate on his current picture, the next picture and the coming picture.

I was impressed with the manner in which a theatre's telephone was answered, with a cheerful "Good Morning," or whatever time of the day it was, the name of the theatre, and the intelligent manner in which the caller's question was replied to—the name of the picture, its stars, and the exact time of its showing. This is important in every theatre's operation, especially that the time of screening is correct. How often have you asked a theatre this information and were annoyed to find on your arrival, the time was all wrong, and your spare time was limited. The makeup of the running order of your program, and the time each unit is to show during the day is important to good management.

This Ace Gag Cost Little

Who? Why, Charninsky, of Course

Giant Street Bally Is Right

(Right) ED CRAWFORD, Loew's 167th Street, New York, planted this over-size cutout on "Viva Villa" ten days ahead for advance lobby flash. Ed refrained from smothering his display in atmosphere, and sold the idea with a few desert cactus plants, flittered title and star lettering.

Simplified but Effective Selling

An Excellent "Tarzan" Lobby

Clever Disney Window Display

EXTENSIVE MISINFORMATION

IT has been manifest for some time that considerable politics is played in the organization of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers and its ramifications. Currently we find the Washington Herald quoting Mrs. B. F. Langworthy, national president, in a letter sent to local organizations as saying:

> The most subtle and dangerous plan that has been devised since Mr. Will Hays' public relations committee is the organization of Better Films Councils.
> Better Films Councils are integral parts of the National Board of Review, which is a subsidiary of the M. P. P. D. A.
> Parent-Teacher members cannot cooperate in Better Films Councils because we are resolved not to cooperate with the industry in making the wolf look and talk like Red Riding Hood's grandmother.

Mrs. Langworthy speaks with an exceeding assurance out of her very large store of misinformation. If the National Board of Review is a subsidiary of the motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., then Mr. Deets Pickett is a charter member of the Crusaders.

The Better Films Councils, with their very large membership of socially minded and eminent citizens, will properly resent the implications of Mrs. Langworthy's letter. All persons reasonably informed will be most aware of the fact that the M. P. P. D. A. is the trade association of the motion picture industry, and that its functions, purposes and interests, proper enough to a trade association, have often been and likely will continue to be in some respects highly divergent from those of the Better Films Councils fostered and served by the National Board of Review out of an independent interest in the art of the screen older than the existing structure of the industry itself.

This is but the latest of several manifestations of inept propaganda by persons seeking to elevate their own movements to authority to confuse the work of the Better Films Councils and the National Board with the commercial interests of the industry.

The Parent-Teachers' campaign for censorship, with its continued pratings about block booking and blind buying, is rendered considerably more of a menace because of the inherent respectability of the words "parent" and "teacher," but both can be politicians and the instrument of poilticians serving selfish special purposes.

Once again it may be gently suggested to the Parent-Teachers organization that the educational systems and schools are in a state which might well occupy their exclusive attention for yet a while.

TO ALIGHT WHERE?

A HOLLYWOOD dispatch to Motion Picture Daily quotes Mr. Harry Cohn as saying that if Mr. Upton Sinclair is elected governor of California Columbia's studios will be moved to the East. While one can appreciate Mr. Cohn's alarms about California, it will not be amiss to suggest to him that what with lotteries, city income taxes and the like in New York, it may be well to look over the landing places before taking off. The revolution is not localized.

THE appointment of Mr. Robert F. Sisk to an executive post in the production machine of the Radio pictures organization is one of those steps by which the motion picture is beginning to evolve its creative personnel out of its own fields of experience. In its furies of development the motion picture all too often has had to buy ready made manpower rather than to bring forth its own. And meanwhile too many promotions have been from and within dynasties and cliques. Mr. Sisk brings to his labors equipment of experience gathered in journalism on papers of merit, with the very competent organization of the Theatre Guild and more recently with the motion picture nationally and on Broadway. He has been rather more the student of the drama and production than is common to publicity craftsmen.

ANYTHING FOR A DOLLAR

ONE hears with dismay reports from sales offices in New York that here and there across the land exhibitors have been and are resorting to threats of product cancellation, under the "moral protest" provision set up for Pre-Production Code Administration pictures, for the ignoble purpose of compelling rental reductions.

To threaten a production with besmirchment of moral attack and in the same breath express a willingness to play it at a lower rental is a confession that reflects no honor.

The motion picture industry is still and will long continue to be on trial in the courts of public decency.

TO those several contemporary publications, here and abroad, which are given to making so free with Motion Picture Herald materials it may be pointed out that our circulation in their own regions is sufficient to make their ungraceful "borrowings" obvious to their own readers. It would seem they might observe that press associations and newspapers have no reluctance in crediting The Herald, which is continuously quoted across the land. Also, it may be observed, Motion Picture Herald is a copyrighted publication.

THIS WEEK - - -

LOEW - RKO DEAL

As a result of a Loew-RKO New York agreement, to Loew will go first choice of Universal and Columbia product before RKO books half the new releases of both companies. Loew will transfer all of Fox and 50 per cent of Universal, Columbia films in the greater city. RKO must first dispose of several houses in the area, none of which is wanted by Loew. Some will go to Randforce, others to Skouras. . . .

TAXATION

Planned by New Orleans exhibitors is a court fight contesting the amusement tax enacted at the special legislative session and imposed by Mayor Walmsley. Night clubs, restaurants have not paid, considering the tax unconstitutional. Certain now appears defeat in the aldermanic board of a St. Louis city sales tax to meet deficits. Danger to showmen lies in special taxes seen in the offing. . . .

UPTURN NOTES

New evidence of upturn came last week from widely separated sectors. In Los Angeles Charles Skouras reported a 27 per cent attendance increase at all Fox West Coast houses in the area within the past six weeks. Better entertainment, new personalities, were assigned as reasons by managers. In Miami, Fla., Mark R. Chartrand, Biltmore theatre manager, saw the state in better shape than since 1929, with general building on the increase, and reflected at the box office. . . .

BAR AND SCREEN FARE

Utilizing the value of the screen is the Arcadia Cafe in Philadelphia, planning, for its new International restaurant, the showing of short subjects and newsreels having particular pertinence to the Philadelphia scene. So illuminated will be the cocktail room that there will be no necessity of darkening it for the picture exhibition. . . .

AKERSON TO PAPER

Declining an appointment by President Roosevelt as a member of the Board of Appeals of the Veterans' Administration at Washington, George Akerson, secretary to Herbert Hoover as President, and former Paramount executive, will become secretary to the code authority of the paper distributing industry. . . .

VAUDEVILLE OUT

Somehow significant appears the bare statement of fact that the Gates theatre, Loew house in Brooklyn, N. Y., within the next two weeks will go to a straight picture policy after having played vaudeville as an adjunct to films for the past 15 years.

SOLUTION

Mrs. Charles Holton, state chairman of motion pictures for the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, addressing the Milwaukee Better Films Council last week, offered this solution for "socalled movie problems": "Make the public motion picture conscious, urge families to attend in groups, arrange weekend 'family' bookings, discourage children from attending midweek movies." . . .

FIRST-NIGHTER'S AID

A persistent "first-nighter" was the late Eugene W. Handlan of St. Louis. In his will he left $40,000 as a trust fund to be used in aiding needy players. Early in 1933 it began. It is estimated 600 have been assisted thereby, with the fund now exhausted and no one receiving more than $66. From the Actors Fund of America was the distribution made. . . .

FREE SHOWS' END

Action of the Better Business Bureau, following complaint of the Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas City, has successfully eliminated free shows presented by Milo Cornell and J. Charles. Showing in vacant lots, without admission, getting revenue from local merchants for advertising on the screen, was the promotion.

BETTER THEATRES

In this month's Better Theatres, appearing as the second section of this issue of Motion Picture Herald, is a detailed and practicable study of the National Housing Act and its application to the motion picture theatre.

SCORING THE SCREEN

An ally of the liquor interests was the motion picture during the battle for repeal, it was declared in a report read to the annual convention of the pastors of the Indiana Conference held last week in Columbus, Ind. The policy of the MPPDA in producing pictures the public want was scored, and the report urged pastors to aid a cleanup of the screen. . . .

FILM STUDIES

Courses in sound recording, dramatic and cinematographic acting will be offered this year by the University of Southern California, adult evening division. Heading the acting course will be veteran performer J. Farrell MacDonald, while Hugh B. Gunter, Coast engineer, will take the other. Frank Capra, Mervyn LeRoy, directors, will be lecturers. . . .

SCREEN MARATHON

A continuous showing, 23½ hours, at the Publix Newman, will introduce Paramount's "Belle of the Nineties," with Mae West as the "belle," to Kansas City. George Baker, manager, who has tried the stunt before, said it increased overhead but paid for itself, was good publicity.

BEST OF THE MONTH

To W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram, last week went the special medal of the Parents' Magazine, national publication, for the best picture of the month, Monogram's "A Girl of the Limberlost," from the famed Gene Stratton-Porter novel. The presentation was by George Hecht, Parents' Magazine editor. . . .

THEATRE SETTLEMENT

Closing negotiations, Harry Huffman's Centennial Theatre Corporation, Denver, has bought the Orpheum for $500,000. RKO lost the house following a bond default, and since then bondholders and courts have been actively engaged. . . .

COLUMBIA DEAL

On the Coast last week were closed two film deals involving Columbia product and approximately $1,000,000. The Paramount and Warner's Downtown, Los Angeles houses, were leased for first run Columbia showings, 15 for one, 25 for the other. Fanchon & Marco first runs in other cities were included, that firm leasing the Warner house. . . .

$10,000 EYE

Awarded to Projectionist Tomes Jones, Kansas City, last week was a verdict of $10,000 against J. P. Deo, former operator of the Lyric. When in 1930 film became ignited as Jones was handling it in the projection booth, he lost an eye. . . .

FILMS PAY 6 CENTS MORE PER LINE TO NEWSPAPERS

Survey of 99 Newspapers in 33 Cities Shows Motion Pictures Pay Higher Advertising Rate, Both National and Local, Than Does Other Business

The motion picture industry as a whole pays an average of six cents per single agate line per insertion more than the general run of advertisers to advertise its product in the newspapers of the country.

Despite the fact that the industry is one of the largest and most consistent advertisers in the press, rates for film ads are as much as 100 per cent higher than those charged others.

That little or no progress is being made by the film business in its long but intermittent fight to obtain an equitable adjustment in advertising scales was again demonstrated this week by a comparison of the basic average newspaper rates now in force, as obtained in a first hand investigation of the schedules of 99 representative newspapers circulating among 15,000,000 readers in 33 large cities, and which shows:

	Average Daily Flat Rate Per Agate Line
	1933	1934
General Advertising.	.31	.31½
Combined Motion Picture	.38	.37
Local Theatre	.35	.35
National Motion Picture	.41	.39

The net reduction, therefore, in the newspaper rate for motion picture advertising granted by the publishers to the industry as a whole during the past 18 months was only one cent per agate line.

However, no relief was granted to the local independent theatre owners in the field, who continue to pay the same average rate of 35 cents per agate line that was in force last year. And, although the national motion picture advertisers, principally the large distributor-circuits, received a reduction of from 41 cents per average agate line to 39 cents, the rate still represents some 7½ cents per line more than that charged the general run.

All of which finds theatre owners still seeking an answer to the perennial question: "What is an amusement rate?" The newspapers have continued the same high tariff since the days when the classification had a velvety meaning all its own—in the days when motion picture houses and

Theatre and General Advertising Rates

Rates and circulation totals in this comparison of 1933 and 1934 advertising scales for general, national motion picture and local theatre advertising are for daily editions. Figures for Sunday issues differ proportionately, according to the relation of the Sunday circulation to the daily. Too, rates are average basic scales for single insertions. Rates would be proportionately lower according to contractual amount of space agreed to and the length of the advertising contract.

Films Pay 6 Cents More Than Others

legitimate theatres were classed with itinerant medicine shows and carnivals.

The average basic motion picture rate for national film advertising was slightly reduced during the past 18 months by 17 newspapers in nine cities, and increased by ten papers in seven other places—net reduction: two cents per agate line.

Local theatre advertising rates for "flat" insertions were also lowered slightly by 14 publications in six cities and were increased by 12 papers in seven other towns—the national average remaining at 35 cents per agate line.

On the other hand the comparatively low rate for general advertising for the country as a whole was not disturbed by the reduction in rates granted by nine newspapers in four cities, these reductions having been offset by increases effected by ten papers in eight other towns.

Eighty newspapers maintained their rates for general advertising; 72 maintained national motion picture rates and 73 continued their scales for local theatre advertising, during the 18 months.

In many territories the campaigns conducted by local theatre interests for lower scales have been vigorous, and on occasion have resulted in theatres boycotting advertising columns, always answered by a retaliatory boycott of exhibitors' publicity notices.

Newspaper publishers and their advertising managers in a few territories apparently are beginning to realize the unfairness of the rates charged for motion picture advertising and are effecting a sliding scale for the various classes of theatres in their zone. Too, "confidential" rates, lower than those specified in regular rate cards, are being granted circuit operators who represent considerable space buying power.

Many newspapers that give agency advertisers and others a 2 per cent discount for cash by the 10th of the month following publication, refuse to grant the theatres the cash discount, but insist on weekly payment.

There are a few exceptions where theatre and commercial rates for similar lineage are the same or nearly so. But in those cases the theatre seldom receives any reader space worth mentioning.

For general advertising, rates run as low as nine and ten cents per agate line as charged by newspapers in Salt Lake and Louisville, respectively, to $1.40 per line in Chicago.

New York City's newspapers were not included in the survey because the many divergent scales in effect would distort the pictures for the field as a whole.

Rates for national motion picture advertising range from nine cents per line in Salt Lake, 11 cents in Tampa and 12 cents in Albany and Milwaukee, to $1.20 charged by a Chicago newspaper and $1.24 in Baltimore.

Rates for local theatre advertising are scaled from 10 cents in Milwaukee, 11 in Tampa and 12½ cents in Birmingham, to 75 cents per line in Kansas City and San Francisco and $1.20 in Chicago.

THEATRE OWNERS AND EQUIPMENT MAKERS RESPOND TO U.S. LOAN PLAN

Housing Administration Besieged with Inquiries from Prospective Borrowers While Manufacturers Await Wide Open Market

Motion picture theatre equipment manufacturers are preparing to engage in one of the most extensive marketing campaigns ever launched in this industry, as a result of the interest being evidenced by exhibitors everywhere in the Administration's decision to make theatres eligible for loans for remodeling purposes under the Federal Housing Act.

That theatre owners in large numbers intend taking advantage of the Government's loan plan to modernize their properties became apparent last week when the official banking channels in the field leading to Housing Administration headquarters at Washington were deluged with inquiries from prospective borrowers. This followed publication September 1 in Motion Picture Herald of fundamentals of the federal plan to make available to residential and business property owners some billion dollars in credit for reconditioning.

Each theatre may apply for as much as $2,000 for remodeling. If this sum were applied to recondition each of the 16,800 opened and closed theatres some $33,000,000 would be necessary.

Plans Outlined at Chicago

Sweeping plans of the Federal Housing Administration to develop the functions of the National Housing Act as a factor of reemployment and recovery over the country were explained Tuesday to 1,000 bankers, architects, contractors and supply dealers at a meeting in Chicago to launch the better housing drive there.

Theatre owners are eligible to share in $33,000,000 for repairing and improving their theatres, and Ward M. Canaday, director of public relations, asserted that the housing campaign is destined to inaugurate improved economic conditions which may extent over the next 20 years.

In outlining the plans behind the act Mr. Canaday stressed the fact that the smallest communities will benefit. In every community, he pointed out, the Government guarantee behind loans for home repairs will give an impetus to business which should be shared by the box office.

As an example of the potentialities of the program Mr. Canaday indicated that there are approximately 16,000,000 homes out of the 29,000,000 in this country that are in need of repair. If each owner were to spend only $100 next month, $1,600,000,000 would be the total. Under the direction of the Federal Housing Administration it is planned to get a great volume of repair and improvement work going as rapidly as possible. It is said that building and material costs at present are at an average of 10 to 13 per cent of those of 1926, which is the year generally used as an index of the most balanced times.

Behind the national housing act will be one of the most completely organized publicity campaigns conceived. Home repairing will be featured in special departments of newspapers. Manufacturers will identify the movement with their products in radio broadcasts. Billboards and other media will cooperate. Latest reports disclose that 7,000 banks in various states are ready to finance improvement work under the Government plan.

Defining Movable Equipment

When the eligibility of exhibitors was acknowledged September 1 by the Federal Housing Administration, it was officially stated that all such loans shall be made applicable to repairs and improvements which shall become a permanent part of the property and shall not be expended for socalled operating equipment which is movable. Since then scores of exhibitors have asked further definition of the phrase "movable equipment." This week the Housing Administration set out to clarify that point, ruling that the difference between movable and removable is the difference between equipment that is built into the theatre and equipment which is not.

On this point, and this alone, the Housing Administration is passing on the many questions concerning movability which daily come before it from prospective borrowers.

The loans made to exhibitors may be employed for 160 different uses in remodeling and reconditioning their properties. A complete list of such uses, together with a full explanation of how the loan may be made applicable to theatre rehabilitation, is featured in BETTER THEATRES, Section Two of this issue of the HERALD.

In further explanation of the difference between movable and immovable equipment, Administration officials cited the difference between a fireplace and a stove. The fireplace is built into the walls and cannot be picked up and carted away; the stove may be screwed down to the floors, but it can be moved. On this simple analogy, all questions of movability are being decided.

Seats and Carpets Movable

From the standpoint of the exhibitor, the difference between movable and immovable equipment is the difference between an electric fan and a cooling system that is constructed when the theatre was erected, or built into the walls at a later date.

Thus, applying its simple test, the Housing Administration will not approve advances for seating or carpeting, which are considered removable.

The question of sound and other such equipment is more difficult, but has been resolved by applying the same test. The extent to which a loan that is secured under the Federal Act can be applied to equipment depends upon the kind of equipment and the requirements for its installation.

While official opinion will go little further than to indicate that no removable equipment comes within the meaning of the Act, it was said loans will be allowed for sound "and other equipment if actually built into the theatres." In sound equipment circles, however, opinion was expressed that this ruling eliminates soundheads and allied apparatus from the provisions of the Act, because so far as can be learned all sound installations may be replaced without tearing out theatre walls. Too, the fact that sound equipment, generally, is leased and not sold indicates its removability.

Report Loans Will Be Allowed for Sound and Other Built-in Equipment, but Soundheads Believed in "Movable" Class

Housing Administration officials this week suggested that exhibitors who find themselves perplexed over the definition of "removable" confer with the local lending agencies in the field which are cooperating with the Government in pushing the building program to alleviate the unemployment situation by remodeling thousands of buildings and homes, or that they address their queries to Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

The keen interest evidenced immediately by exhibitors who see in the plan an opportunity to brighten their structures indicated that the race to market by the manufacturers will be widespread to obtain some of this new revenue.

Wide Open Market Seen

Because the need for new equipment of all kinds usually appears when the owner engages in a "sprucing-up process" through remodeling, redecorating and repairing, the new theatre modernization movement is expected to open wide the market for theatre equipment sales regardless of whether the equipment is of a permanent nature and as such would come under the plan of the Housing Administration.

It is to be pointed out in this connection that while a loan for rebuilding and repainting is obtained under the Federal Housing Act from local lending agencies, this is done on the owner's notes, without any indorsement, and involves no mortgages or liens against the property. Therefore, the property retains its former integrity as a basis for additional credit.

Thus a loan for rebuilding under the plan does not necessarily impair the credit of a theatre operator in the equipment market, but is conceived as actually supporting it.

United Artists' Directors Assemble in Hollywood

Directors of United Artists were meeting in Hollywood this week for the first time in three years. Present were: Joseph M. Schenck, president; Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Darryl Zanuck, Charles Chaplin and Samuel Goldwyn. Subjects discussed were the future of the company and a dividend payment.

Mr. Chaplin indicated that following his next feature he will direct another in which he will not appear.

LUDINGTON AND FISKE ENTER FIRST DIVISION

Airline Executive and Member of Banking Family Buy Large Block in Thomas' Company

Nicholas S. Ludington, aviation enthusiast, and William M. Fiske, 3rd, member of the banking family, entered the motion picture business together this week through the purchase of a substantial block of the outstanding stock of First Division Pictures, an independent distribution system of which Harry Thomas is the president.

Mr. Thomas did not dispose of any of his holdings, reputed to total 50 per cent, and he will continue as operating head. However, the corporation will undergo the usual reorganization to give effect to the necessary changes in the structures of the board of directors. J. A. Curtis, who negotiated the deal, also became a stockholder.

$500,000 Expansion Reported

The immediate result of the entrance of Mr. Ludington and Mr. Fiske into the company will be the expansion of its distribution facilities internationally and its participation in production, which it heretofore has not entered. Some $500,000 is said to be available immediately for the first expansion activities.

First Division is one of the country's largest independent distribution organizations, handling territorial rights on 53 features and some serials and shorts, including 24 Monogram features, 10 for Chesterfield, nine for Invincible, an unnamed number for Allied Pictures and the product of other independents.

The company at the moment has 11 branches, principally in the east and located at Albany, Boston, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, Buffalo, Louisville, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Washington. When completed the new system will embrace 33 branches, besides several foreign offices. It will distribute some pictures which will be produced by others and to be financed by Pathe. In addition, productions planned for the company on its own include four specials and eight other features.

Incorporated in 1927

First Division Pictures, Inc., with headquarters in the RKO Building at Radio City, on Sixth Avenue, New York, was incorporated in April, 1927, under the laws of New York State. Officers, besides Mr. Thomas, are vice-president Murray Rosenbluh and secretary Otto Lederer.

Harry H. Thomas, 42 years old and Boston born, started in this business some 27 years ago, in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn, where he opened the Bushwick Palace theatre. Six years later he became associated with Greater New York Film Company. He then went to Fox as a special sales representative, after which he organized the old Alexander Film Company, in 1921, thereby becoming an independent distributor.

Mr. Thomas also managed Merit Film Exchange for I. E. Chadwick, who eventually appointed him vice-president and general manager. In 1926-27 Merit Film was absorbed by Mr. Thomas when he organized the present First Division Pictures.

Nicholas S. Ludington heads Ludington Air Lines in the East. Also, he is a large stockholder in the TWA aviation corporation and in Curtis Publishing Company. He is 32 years old and lives at Ardmore, Pa. As in the case of Mr. Fiske, he is prominent in the circles of society in the East.

William M. Fiske, 3rd, 28 years old, has on occasion participated inconspicuously in production enterprises. As the son of William M. Fiske, 2nd, who is in charge in Paris for Dillon, Read and Company, banking house, young Mr. Fiske has spent considerable time in the French capital.

Wilby to Build In Birmingham

Further verification of the upward trend in Alabama came this week with announcement from Robert W. Wilby, pioneer circuit operator in the South, that a modernistic $100,000 theatre to seat 1,000 will be erected in the fashionable Birmingham suburb of Five Points, to be ready for occupancy January 1. Mr. Wilby's new enterprise will be one of the first theatre structures to be erected in Alabama since the business deflation curtailed virtually all construction in that territory.

Mr. Wilby's Valatenga Theatres, Inc., operates theatres in Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee. He is more familiarly known in the industry through his partnership with H. F. Kincey in some 52 properties in the South, principally in North and South Carolina.

RKO Theatre Companies Get Rebates on Assessments

Taxes aggregating $315,466.45 were lifted from the shoulders of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, B. F. Keith Corporation and Orpheum Circuit, Inc., last week by the Treasury, it was made known this week by the Bureau of Internal Revenue at Washington.

Overassessments totaling $244,157.96 are to be returned to the RKO and Keith companies in compliance with decisions of the United States Board of Tax Appeals, while the Orpheum Circuit is to get back an overassessment of $36,816.34. The remaining $34,492.15 represents a portion of the interest assessed against the companies on previously asserted deficiencies.

Michigan Allied Meet Tentatively Set for Oct. 16

Allied Theatres of Michigan, at Detroit, has tentatively set October 16 and 17 as the dates of the annual convention, to be held in Flint, Michigan, according to H. M. Richey, general manager.

Hammons Sells 52 Shorts to Gaumont For $5,000 Each

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Pictures, Inc., this week sold the United Kingdom distribution rights on 52 of his company's 1934-35 short subjects to Jeffrey Bernerd of Gaumont-British for the extraordinarily high price of $260,000, on the flat basis of $5,000 a subject. Many features sold in England do not bring this price.

Contracts were signed in New York, where Mr. Bernerd has been actively participating in Gaumont's American invasion.

The arrangement will continue in effect for next season's product, too, at another $250,000, and follows consummation last season of a ten-year British distribution agreement between Educational and Gaumont interests. Options were secured by Gaumont for continuing the new deal after 1935-36.

Court Gets Reorganization Plan for Allied Owners

Plans for reorganization of Allied Owners Corporation were filed in federal court, Brooklyn, Tuesday, through Allied's attorney, Robert P. Levis, who prophesied that reorganization would be effected by January 1.

The plan calls for a new contract with Loew's, Inc., which agrees to make total payments of $12,875,000 over a period of 15 years for three of the seven houses owned by Allied in Brooklyn in lieu of $10,807,260 which it earlier had agreed to pay in 10 years.

Provision also is made for reduction of the 6 per cent interest on Allied bonds and debentures to 4 per cent on the former and 3 per cent on the latter until June 1, 1938, to be raised after that date to 5 per cent on the bonds and 4 per cent on the debentures. The plan further specifies that $490,455 due on loans to New York, Inc., the parent company, be cancelled.

Approval of creditors representing three-fourths of Allied's total indebtedness must be received.

Horace Watson Dead; London Theatre Man

Horace Watson, 67, London stage theatre manager and producer, died Monday after more than 40 years in show business. It was in 1892 that he was appointed assistant manager of the Haymarket theatre under Beerbohm Tree, whom he accompanied on his American tour three years later. For a season assistant manager of the Lyceum under Frederick Harrison and Forbes-Robertson, he returned in 1896 to the Haymarket and became manager. "The First Mrs. Fraser" was the hundredth play produced at the Haymarket while he was there.

Sennwald Doing Hall's Work

Andre Sennwald has been appointed by the New York Times to serve as motion picture editor in place of Fred Mordaunt Hall, resigned, until a successor is appointed on January 1. Mr. Sennwald had been Mr. Hall's assistant.

CLEARANCE BASED ON ADMISSIONS IS NEW FOUNDATION FOR ZONING

Local Grievance Board to Establish Competitive Zones; Double Featuring or Stage Show Policy Not a Factor

Uniform basic principles for writing new clearance and zoning schedules under the motion picture code and for redrafting existing schedules were formulated last Thursday by the Code Authority, which acted after general dissatisfaction in the field caused a breakdown in the clearance and zoning machinery, resulting in a temporary abandonment, in many sections, of negotiations being conducted between exchanges and exhibitors for new product. Highlighting the new principles for drafting schedules were these basic points:

1. Clearance will be based on admission prices. As a result, it is expected that admissions will be increased by many owners desiring to get better clearance.

2. Competitive zones will be established by each Local Grievance Board.

3. Clearance shall not be based on double featuring or stage show policies.

4. Clearance specified in schedules of the boards shall take precedence over clearance specified in contracts.

5. Maximum periods of clearance shall be established between the various runs which may exist.

The Authority immediately acted to hear appeals from exhibitors in the field pending against those clearance and zoning schedules which meet with the basic requirements adopted for all schedules. Appeals against those schedules which do not meet with these requirements will be returned to the Local Boards for revision, drafts having been already returned to boards at Atlanta, Cleveland, Kansas City, Memphis, Milwaukee and New Orleans.

Hearings were started by the Authority in New York this week. Dissatisfaction against the Chicago draft has caused a buying stalemate in that territory.

Eight other hearings were set as follows: Los Angeles, October 3; Cincinnati-Columbus-Dayton, October 4; Buffalo, October 9; Indianapolis, October 10; San Francisco-San Jose, October 17; Detroit-Grand Rapids, October 18; Portland-Seattle-Salt Lake, October 23, and Denver, October 24.

Since May 11, the Authority has disposed of 140 clearance and zoning and grievance cases. There remain some 32 appeals on grievance decisions and 29 individual protests against new clearance and zoning schedules. The calendar as it now stands will be cleared by October 1.

Reopening of the code for further assents, asked by the Code Authority, will be approved by the NRA, it was made known late Wednesday by Sol A. Rosenblatt, division administrator.

The Authority reported total operating expense in August was $23,173, against $24,966 in July.

In the field, exhibitors and exchangemen were awaiting the new principles for drafting clearance schedules, which follow in full:

1. Members of local Clearance and Zoning Boards should familiarize themselves thoroughly with the provisions of Article VI, Part 1, Section 4 of the Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry, as follows:

"Each Board when making any classification of theatres, or when fixing the maximum period or area of clearance in respect of any theatre shall, among other things, consider and give due regard to the following factors:

(a) that clearance to a very considerable extent determines the rental value of motion pictures;

(b) that exhibitions of the same motion picture within the same competitive area at too short an interval after the conclusion of a preceding run or runs thereof by unduly restricting the competitive area in which clearance is limited, depreciates the rental value of motion pictures; and

(c) that all such depreciations of the rental values of motion pictures tend to reduce the number of motion pictures produced, discourage the production of motion pictures of quality involving large investments of capital, labor, skill, and enterprise and thereby tend to reduce employment.

(d) that unreasonable clearance to a considerable extent affects the value of motion pictures for subsequent-run theaters.

(e) that unreasonable clearance depreciates the potential return from motion pictures to subsequent-run theaters.

(f) that unreasonable clearance as to time and area diminishes the potential revenue to the Distributor from the subsequent-run Exhibitor."

2. The competitive geographical area included in schedules should be clearly defined both as to first run in cities and suburban districts. In defining geographical areas affecting first runs, clearance should be given not only against theatres in the particular city but also against competitive theatres within a trading area or within a metropolitan district. First run theatres should have clearance over nearby towns and cities which are considered competitive.

3. No prohibition may be placed upon the run which an exhibitor may be able to buy or a distributor may be able to sell to any theatre, and no theatre shall be designated by name as first run, as second run, or as any other run in a city or in a zone area. Schedules including statements to the effect "The Blank Theatre may purchase no clearance" cannot be approved. It is within the jurisdiction of the local board, however, to state that a theatre is not in competition with any other theatre.

4. Geographical areas of competition which shall be designated as zones shall be established by the local board. Such zones shall be established by dividing the territory affected into groups of competitive theatres. Any theatre shall have the right without restriction to buy any run it is able to negotiate for with any distributor, and any distributor shall have the right without restriction, to sell any run he desires.

5. Maximum periods of clearance shall be established between the various runs which may exist. For instance, the board shall define the maximum clearance between the first run in a city and the second run in a city and also the maximum clearance between the second run, if there be one, and the first runs in any competitive geographical zones. The Local Board may make provision for the booking of any extraordinary picture which may play first run at substantially increased admission prices, which substantial increase in admission prices shall entitle a theatre to additional clearance unless the next subsequent run also increase its admission prices in the same proportion; and this principle shall apply to all other subsequent runs.

6. In establishing maximum clearance for first run, consideration may be given to the differential between the first run admission prices and the admission prices charged by the second run and/or subsequent runs in the respective competitive cities or zones.

7. Provision may be made for the revision of clearance of subsequent runs where a prior run reduces admission prices, and of clearance of prior runs where a subsequent run reduces its admission prices. Notwithstanding, any theatre which purchases a specified run shall retain such run irrespective of any increase in admission prices of subsequent runs.

8. In the event that two theatres are in separate zones which overlap and are in competition, the maximum period of clearance between such theatres shall be established by the board.

9. The period of clearance shall not be affected by reason of any theatre using a double bill policy or stage shows.

10. The schedule shall provide that in the event of the building or opening of a new theatre or the reopening of a closed theatre the Clearance and Zoning Board shall immediately meet and determine the zone in which such theatre shall be placed. Such theatre shall of course have the opportunity of purchasing such run as it is able and which the distributor may desire to sell.

11. It shall be provided that if any first run theatre permits an earlier exhibition than provided in the schedule by a waiver of clearance or by any other means with respect to any second run theatre, then third, fourth and subsequent run theatres shall also move up and receive a like benefit from the above mentioned earlier exhibition in accordance with the clearance period established between the runs involved. If any second, third or subsequent run theatre permits an earlier exhibition than provided in the schedule with respect to any theatre in the following run, then the same principle as set forth above with respect to the first and second run shall be applicable in accordance with the clearance period established between the runs involved and any runs thereafter.

12. The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Code Authority on August 23rd, 1934:

"RESOLVED: That clearance for any theatre established by a clearance and zoning board in any decision affecting a schedule of clearance and zoning for a territory or part thereof, shall supersede any clearance specified in any license agreement between distributors and exhibitors, irrespective of whether such license agreement was executed prior to the decision of the Local Clearance and Zoning Board."

REORGANIZING OF PARAMOUNT NEAR

Zukor on Way East for Final Conferences; Trading on Company's Stock Is Stronger

The atmosphere was merrier than usual this week along the Paramount Publix corporate front as several developments signified the definiteness of an early reorganization and the unwinding of the complex entanglements of the bankruptcy court.

After having made several premature starts, Adolph Zukor, president, finally boarded a train for New York to be on hand for the final conferences of reorganization. It has been generally known that Mr. Zukor would participate in the discussions when reorganization had progressed sufficiently to talk about rates of conversion for claims and the like. He is now traveling eastward.

Too, Wall Street heard the first factual details of the reorganization plan, and trading in Paramount stock on the Exchange reacted strongly, selling as high as $4.38 a common share from $3.00 earlier in the week.

Net $1,200,000 Ahead of 1933

Paramount's net profits are running at least $1,200,000 ahead of last year. Earnings for the second quarter of 1934 were $1,282,000 and for the first six months were $3,883,856. This compares with a net of $5,029,252 for all of 1933.

With the corporation's production, distribution and exhibition divisions operating on such a substantially profitable basis, those in charge of reconstructing the bankrupt corporate structure were making equal progress with the reorganization plan. It appears that they have arrived at the point where, according to Wall Street Journal, tentative plans have been drawn by various creditor groups participating in the reorganization to pay the bank creditors some $3,600,000 in cash and the remainder of the $13,200,000 owed to them in equal shares of new debentures and new convertible stock; and to pay general creditors, represented by $25,800,000 in bonds and $11,300,000 in trade credits, half of their claims in the new debentures and half in the new convertible preferred.

Paramount unofficially said that the plan is progressing along these lines.

Prior Securities $56,000,000

The banks would become general creditors for the reaining $9,600,000 owed to them after they were paid $3,600,000 in cash.

Further, according to Wall Street Journal, common stockholders would retain their equity, with shares probably consolidated, one for two, and stockholders offered the right to subscribe to a new convertible security in the total amount of about $6,000,000, the proceeds of which would be used by the corporation for reducing bank loans. Said the Journal:

"On the set-up as indicated, prior securities will amount to about $56,000,000 on which charges at six per cent annually would amount to $3,360,000. Earnings in the first half of this year were estimated at $6,000,000 and $6,500,000 for the full year after taxes and depreciation. This would leave a balance of between $2,600,000 and $3,100,000 for the new common stock which is expected to total about 1,700,000 shares.

"The company is expected to start its new existence with over $15,000,000 in cash on hand. Full details of the plan including rates of conversion have not been definitely completed.

As Mr. Zukor was preparing to leave Hollywood for New York to be on hand for the concluding reorganization conference he said: "I am happy over the progress that has been made under the circumstances of our present operation."

Court Hearings Conducted

In New York, Special Master John E. Joyce was conducting court hearings pertaining to the reorganization procedure. Creditors complained quite vigorously against the petition for $700,000 in interim allowances, special fees and expenses, as requested by the three trustees—Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles Richardson—and by their counsel, special counsel and accountants. The fees were for services rendered from April, 1933, to June, 1934.

Especially attacked by the creditors were the trustees' petition for allowances of $100,000 each and the petition of Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballantine, their counsel, for some $350,000.

Mr. Ballantine, answering the protestations of the creditors, disclosed the current earnings of the corporation and said that Paramount had profited by $1,500,000 from foreign exchange.

Frank A. Vanderlip, chairman of the bondholders' protective committee; Alfred C. Cook, counsel for the stockholders' committee, and Morton Bogue, counsel for the bank creditors, publicly declared they thought the fees were too high. Mr. Vanderlip and Mr. Cook recommended $250,000 for counsel and $50,000 or $60,000 each for the three trustees. However, these representatives agreed that the trustees and their counsel have made commendable and significant accomplishments. The remarks of Stuart Brandon, attorney for holders of $1,500,000 of Paramount debentures, were also laudatory in connection with services performed by the petitioners.

There were stormy discussions when Samuel Zirn and Saul Rogers, counsel for small bondholders, and John L. Flynn, counsel for Allied Owners Corporation, which has a claim for $12,000,000 against Paramount, registered their objections to the payments.

Special Master Joyce, in answer to Mr. Zirn's declaration that he would carry the fight to the circuit court of appeals, gave him until Thursday to file a brief listing his objections. The trustees and their counsel were given until Monday to file a reply. Mr. Joyce makes his report to the district court shortly thereafter.

Dismissal of Complaint Asked

Dismissal of the complaint filed against members of the 1930-32 Paramount board of directors by Trustees Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson, is asked by the defendants in their answer filed in the supreme court, New York. The trustees seek to recover up to $13,800,000 alleged to have been authorized by the directors for repurchase of Paramount stock at guaranteed redemption prices in the acquisition of theatres from 1929 to 1932. A hearing date is to be set.

Defendants named in the action are: Frank A. Bailey, Jules E. Brulatour, Daniel Frohman, John Hertz, Felix E. Kahn, Gilbert W. Kahn, Sam Katz, Sidney R. Kent, Austin C. Keough, Ralph A. Kohn, Jesse L. Lasky, Elek J. Ludvigh, Sir William Wiseman, Adolph Zukor, Eugene J. Zukor and executors of the estates of Casimir I. Stralem, Emil E. Shauer and William H. English.

The period for filing claims against Paramount Publix as a debtor corporation under Section 77-B of the bankruptcy laws expired last week. Numerous additional claims not filed against the company in its bankruptcy proceedings have been listed by creditors since June 16, the date on which it was made a debtor corporation for reorganization under the new laws.

A. H. Blank, acting as president and general manager of Tri-States Theatres, Inc., last week signed a contract with Paramount Publix for partnership operation of 26 theatres in Iowa, Nebraska and Illinois. He will control 50 per cent of the corporation's securities. The deal terminates the temporary arrangement under which Mr. Blank had been operating the houses since shortly after the start of the Paramount receivership. Under the terms Tri-States has a 10-year Paramount Pictures franchise, and $800,000 worth of debentures will be issued to cover the financing costs.

A future rent claim of $460,000 was filed against Paramount Publix by Robert Lieber, Indianapolis, who alleges Paramount Publix was guarantor on leases on his Indiana and Circle theatres in Indianapolis, when the houses were taken over by Skouras in 1928. He claims they were vacated in 1930 and are now being operated by Monarch Theatres. The new bankruptcy laws permit filing of a future rent claim for a maximum of two years following default of a lease.

'GOOD FARE OF AN ANCIENT VINTAGE'

Says DeCasseres, Critic and Essayist, of "Too Many Boats"; Other New Stage Plays Are Discussed

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

TOO MANY BOATS

Owen Davis snores plays. About 137 as we go to press. Some of them have been very good (as entertainment), some of them have had engine trouble after the first week, and some others were just the cat's mush.

His latest opus, "Too Many Boats," made from a story by Charles L. Clifford (beautifully staged and produced by William A. Brady, Jr.), is in 10 highly exciting scenes, carrying a cast of 25.

It is good Hollywood fare of an ancient, solid and ordinary program vintage. If the essence of a "good" picture is strenuous action, suspense, thrills and noise, "Too Many Boats" is the real McCoy.

Camp Blaisdell in Manila, 1918. Opens on a Negro being court-martialed.

Swing to the officer's quarters. Now you can, if you are an old wise-guy, smell just what's coming. And yet when we see these army life marital infidelities and shootings and mutinies it always gives us another ephemeral kick, particularly if it is done well—and "Too Many Boats" is done pretty well.

You see, as of old, there is a Big Shot army officer, his pretty wife and a polo-playing subordinate officer. You know just as well as you know that the Schnozzle will never play "Alice in Wonderland" that the ranking officer is going for to shoot the handsome young fellow, or ought to, anyhow.

Add to this a German villain (played splendidly by Horace Braham), a raft of noisy, roistering captains, lieutenants, corporals and sergeants and a bellowing mutiny—well, you can see Vic McLaglen and Eddie Lowe already polishing up their larynxes for their parts.

FIFTY YEARS AFTER!

After 50 years the Savoy Players, of London, under the junior D'Oyly Carte, returned to us with the Gilbert and Sullivan operas.

It may be 50 years (1984) before they come again, so I urge all those within the hearing of my hoarse and cheering voice to drag out their sequestered gold and see this company in the greatest of all productions of the Gilbert and Sullivan masterpieces—and I have seen them all for gadknows how long!

And I urge all Hollywood producers, directors and literate scenarists who are now in New York to go to the Martin Beck Theatre and bribe, browbeat or otherwise induce, cajole or wheedle this company to go to Hollywood to screen (in color, in color, in color, gentlemen!) the best of these paragons of comedy and song, which, as I have pointed out before on this page, have received the greatest advance publicity on the radio, the metropolitan stages and in small-town performances that any musical comedies have ever received.

"The Gondoliers," "The Mikado," "Iolanthe" and "The Pirates of Penzance" especially scream for color-treatment, with trick camera backgrounds illustrating the action described in the songs (the fake beheading of Ko-Ko, the comic doings of the Pirates of Cornwall, etc.).

The D'Oyly Carte company squeezes every ounce of comedy out of these operas. The players are all master-comedians, the voices of the principals are cathedral-filling, the male and female choruses a Glory (capital G is O. K., Mr. Proofreader, for I'm esthetically lit).

League of Decency fans and others interested: Plug for the D'Oyly Carte versions of Gilbert and Sullivan on the screen.

And from a sordid point of view of the jack? There's millions in them—my immortal soul against Jack Holt's mustache that I'm right.

LADY JANE

The first play of the new producing firm of Arch Selwyn and Harold B. Franklin (in association with Arthur Hopkins) is hardly headed for the screen. It will cause Mr. Breen to hump his eyebrows like a cat's back, give the League of Decency a poignant shock in the very centre of its ethical gizzards and incite even the most sinbesotted scenarist to cry out, Hoity-Toity!

It's "Lady Jane," by H. M. Harwood, who gave us that fine stage and screen work, "Cynara." It is an amusing play, although too talky by far and is loaded down with a lot of glamorous and naughty epigrams that were a sensation in the days of Wilde and Pinero, but that now sound like fifth carbon copies of a staled and corrupt sophistication.

The play was generally pish-tushed by the critics; but it drew a packed house the night I was there and the audience reaction was extremely favorable. There is a bedroom scene in the second act, where all the real action of the play is laid. And 'twas fitting that Al Woods, the Robert Fulton of all American bedroom farces, should be there.

Briefly, Lady Jane Kingdom (Frances Starr) is married to, apparently, a scientific fossil. He is on the way to swap the sex of lizards. They have a daughter, Liza, aviatrix, with a post-war swagger and benecked ad infinitum. She also has a daughter-in-law, Sybil (Frieda Inescourt).

There shows up at the country house a fiction-plumber, Douglas Allenby. There is also Seven Rains, the some time lover of the speedy Liza. That's the human lay-out.

Lady Jane deliberately arranges by a shuffle of bed-rooms an affair (in which there is a moonlit balcony scene) between her daughter-in-law and Allenby. While this is going on Liza and Rains (a drunken, pistol-toting, drug-using bounder) return. There is a mix-up of bedrooms, almost a murder, and much ancient hokum.

In the third act Lady Jane boastingly relates to the contrite Sybil how she has deceived her science-mongering husband for years with a lover. Liza is present, and thinks Ma is all to the good. (This is somewhat putrid.)

The final curtain is a good one. It reveals to the audience and to the astonished Lady Jane that her preoccupied begoggled spouse has for years winked at her infidelity. (Scientists are all gentlemen. So few ladies are.)

Lila Lee, as Liza, came back to the speaking stage after nine years. She looked beautiful and acted well.

Marie Tempest did the part of Lady Jane in London. It is certainly not a Frances Starr part (too red-hot mamma).

A speciously "immoral," unconvincing, but often amusing play.

TIGHT BRITCHES

The hick drama never got very far with our post-war picture audiences. Since the advent of the talkies, indeed, it has almost disappeared. If backwoods stuff does appear occasionally it must be tied up with some big burg, Europe or a circus to get it across.

That is because our rural picture clientèle is big-city minded. It seeks escape into places and atmospheres that are strange to it. And our city picture fans will simply have nothing to do—except hilariously—with "Ah reckon" epics.

Rowland Stebbins, of "The Green Pastures" fame, produced "Tight Britches." It is a play of the North Carolina mountain folk by John Taintor Foote and Hubert Hayes, two fellows who evidently are tarheel from derby to toenail.

The story is about a precocious lad, one Ulys Palmer, who wanted to grow up and become a preacher. But Ulys is, first of all, a man with all those weaknesses that have been the eternal theme of fiction, fable and sacred literature from Adam's downfall to the peccadillos of that fellow your wife told you about at breakfast.

Well, Ulys has a sinful affair (on guard, ye picture beatifiers!) with loose-like Sallie Tabor.

And things might not have been so bad in the final shuffle if Sallie had not given birth to a baby about the time that Ulys was beginning his evangelical career to Make the World Chemically Pure.

It is my honest belief that Ulys would have done right by Our Nell if her father, a man of the old strip and stripe, had run otherwise than true to mountain form. So, he up and kilt Ulys with that gun that no God-fearin' North Carolinian is without.

The only thing that saved the piece in my eyes was the excellent work of Joanna Roos and Shepperd Strudwick. There was also some rich comedy relief in various local character-studies indigenous to mountain towns in the Southland.

Still, I do not see how Hollywood can help matters.

JUVENILE MATINEES WIN WIDE RESPONSE

Wilmer & Vincent's Harrisburg Experiment with Shorts Will Expand If Civic Units Help

by V. N. BERGHAUS
Harrisburg Correspondent

Active cooperation of civic organizations, particularly women's clubs, and churches is recognized by theatre executives as a definite prerequisite to the success of children's matinees as a continuing policy. To that end, executives of the Wilmer & Vincent circuit this week are helping organize Film Committees for each community organization in Harrisburg, Pa., where the first of a series of 10 special shows for juveniles was launched last Saturday forenoon, with a distinctly favorable reaction throughout the city. Gordon S. White, Educational's director of publicity and advertising, was on the ground cooperating in the project.

In quest of a new type of motion picture entertainment for children, designed both to return a profit to the management and to answer objections to controversial films, Wilmer & Vincent undertook its experiment, at the Majestic theatre in Harrisburg, by presenting an assortment of eight short subjects, without a feature.

Specially invited local civic leaders were enthusiastic in commending the film program for juvenile consumption. From the theatre men's standpoint the verdict was that the practicability of presenting such programs regularly would depend entirely on the amount of public support they receive.

It was stated by the Wilmer & Vincent representatives that if the experiment, to be carried through a 10-week period, with one program a week—on Saturday morning—proves successful, the plan will be extended to other theatres in Harrisburg and in other cities.

Harmonica Club Tieup, Too

"The World Today" is the general title of the series. The initiatory program covered a wide range of topics. The first picture, scenes from the opera "I Pagliacci," sung in English, was followed by Mack Sennett's "Rustling Swordfish," Shirley Temple's "Pardon My Pups," the Terry-Toon cartoon "Hansel and Gretel," the Santa Claus fantasy "Day Dreams," the Magic Carpet travelogue of Ireland with songs by John McCormack, and Mary Warner's "Winter in the Bavarian Alps." All but the two last-named subjects are Educational product. There were also numbers by the famous Philadelphia Harmonica Band of more than 50 boys. A tieup in that direction was announcement of plans to form a harmonica band in Harrisburg, with membership open to holders of season tickets in the "World Today" series.

Herbert Y. McMullen of New York, a director of the Wilmer & Vincent circuit, who is in charge of the new project, said he will not be able to tell until after several performances whether the project will be successful. It is entirely a matter of public support, he said, with a weekly attendance of 500 or more required to make it feasible. Attendance at Saturday's invitation performance was estimated by C. Floyd Hopkins, district Wilmer & Vincent manager, at 500.

Mrs. McMullen, chairman of international relations of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, explained the purpose of this type of films as aimed at developing the personalities of children and providing entertainment free of questionable influences. She invited criticism and suggestions, and after the performance a number of Harrisburg civic leaders, parents and others interested in young folk, offered their views.

Approve Equipment

Among those who expressed approval of the pictures as meeting the need for wholesome and interesting entertainment were:

Mrs. Harvey F. Smith, president of the Harrisburg Community Theatre and former president of the Civic Club; Mrs. W. Minster Kunkel and Mrs. Edwin S. Rockefeller, active Junior Leaguers, who were present with their children; Mrs. Walter Spofford, chairman of the municipal department of the Civic Club; Boy Scout Executive Thomas Sparrow and School Director John Yates.

Opinions of the program itself differed. Mrs. Smith thought the opportunity for presenting opera one of the most desirable features, but Mr. Sparrow said he believed that was "over the heads" of many youngsters.

BETTER THEATRES WRITER WARNS OF RUNDOWN HOUSES

That emphasis on pictures has caused widespread forgetfulness of the effect of theatre appearance and mechanical facilities on the box office, is asserted by J. T. Knight, Jr., writing in the BETTER THEATRES section of this issue of the HERALD. He adds that theatres are in the "worst physical condition in the history of the industry," appearing even worse to the public than they really are "because the public has watched fine properties become dilapidated and rundown right in front of its eyes."

Those who think all that is needed is good pictures forget, declares Mr. Knight, "that in the days when business was regular and consistently good we were showing good, bad and indifferent pictures" just the same as today. "But in those days," he points out, "every operator and manager prided himself on the condition of his theatre."

"Decadent theatre operation," Mr. Knight asserts, "is Exhibition's greatest hazard in its efforts to attain profitable returns."

Exhibitors Will Press Music Suit If U. S. Delays

The exhibitors' emergency committee, formed to combat the efforts of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers to increase music taxes, will file suit without delay, unless the government obtains a restraining order against the proposed increases by ASCAP, within the next few days, it was declared early this week by Ed Kuykendall, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Mr. Kuykendall was supposed to travel to Washington Wednesday presumably to talk with Government officials about procedure. Fox West Coast, Publix and RKO indicated they would contribute to the exhibitor committee's one-cent per seat "war chest" for financing the court fight.

"Exhibitors are going ahead with the original plan to sue," said Mr. Kuykendall. "If ASCAP can get away with this new increase, there is no limit to what they will do next year. This is not a fight between the MPTOA and the Society. It's a fight between all theatre owners and the music organizations. Numerous exhibitor units are joining in the move and we will have a united front when we start the action. Several thousands of dollars already have been collected by the committee for the 'war chest,'" he declared, and added, "probably the next thing the Society will demand is a percentage of the receipts. A few small voices have been raised in some parts of the country stating they would not participate. These people are either misguided or ignorant of the facts. If we are going to fight and do this right, we must have the wholehearted assistance of every theatre owner."

In proceeding with its purpose to increase the music license fees for theatres, ASCAP is relying on a 1926 ruling by the department of justice that it is not a combination in violation of the Sherman Act, it is revealed this week by Maurice J. O'Sullivan, of Kansas City, counsel for the Society in Missouri. Mr. O'Sullivan said the Society has nothing to fear from the dissolution suit brought recently by the government because there has been no change in the anti-trust laws since the 1926 determination.

Mr. Kuykendall was to discuss the proposed music tax increase at the general meeting of the MPTO of North and South Carolina at Charlotte this week, and later at the meeting of the Tri-States Theatre Owners in Memphis.

The Gulf States Theatre Owners Association, with headquarters in New Orleans, will move for action against the ASCAP when Congress convenes at the end of the year. President Harry McLeod declared no action will be taken now, but said the association would fight any move to saddle the exhibitor with increased and unjust costs.

Beck Due in New York

James M. Beck, London representative of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, will arrive in New York late this month on his annual American visit.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

HOLLYWOOD OPENING. Just one group of Show World celebrities snapshot at premiere of Warner Brothers' "Dames" at Hollywood theatre, Los Angeles: Mary Brian, Dick Powell (who has leading male role), Mr. and Mrs. Joe Penner and Jocelyn Lee.

JUST MARRIED. Frank Melton, Fox player, and Alma Gaye Maynatt, pictured following their marriage in Hollywood the other day, and preceding a honeymoon trip via motor. Melton's latest role is in a Will Rogers vehicle, entitled "Judge Priest."

SIGNED. Donald Cook, who has been signed to appear opposite Nancy Carroll in Columbia's forthcoming production, "Spring 3100."

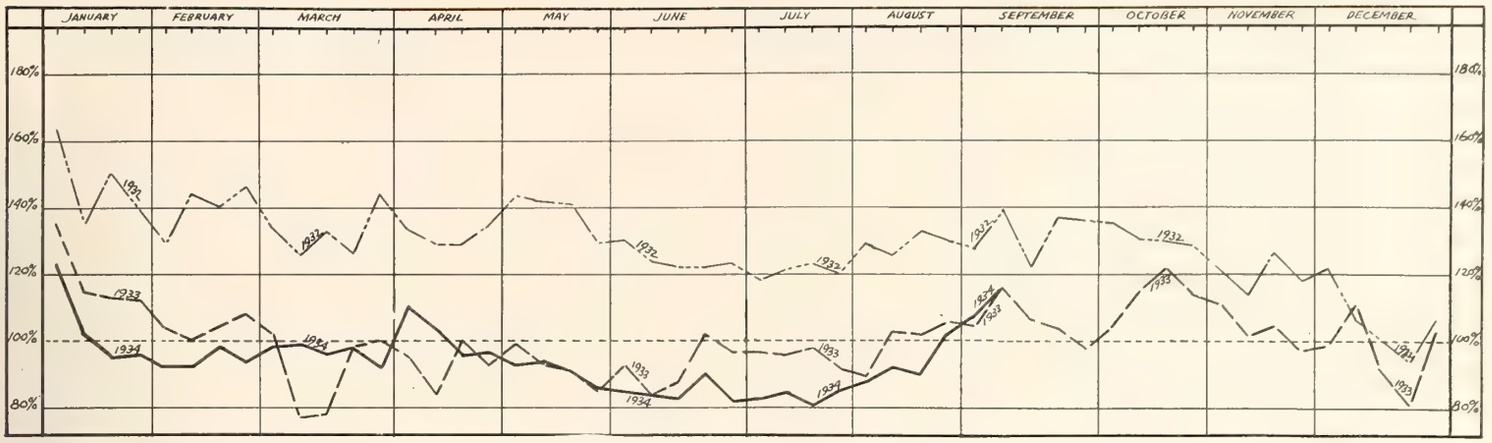
ONLY WOMAN. (Below) The sole representative of her sex, is Conchita Montenegro, in the cast of Fox's "Hell in the Heavens," which stars Warner Baxter in some very masculine exploits of the air.

AT PREVIEW. (Below) Of "Peck's Bad Boy" at Broadway theatre, Santa Ana, Cal. Shown with young patrons are Sol Lesser, producer; Louis Hyman of Principal Distributing Corporation; Lester Fountain, Broadway manager.

MAKES DEBUT. Nan Grey, former Houston, Tex., high school girl (so say our informants at Warner Brothers), who has her first part in Joe E. Brown's "Six Day Bike Race."

CIRCUS PARTY. And it was a circus they made of it, the 2,000 youngsters of Los Angeles, when they went to the Warner theatre to see Joe E. Brown in Warners' "The Circus Clown," at the invitation of the star himself. See Joe among 'em?

UNDER CONTRACT. Continuing one of filmdom's longest and most notable careers, Henry B. Walthall has signed a long-term contract for roles in Fox productions.



WINNER. Jean Gray, Rochester, N. Y., girl, who has been declared the winner of tests conducted by MGM under the sponsorship of the Rochester Journal.

AS CANTOR WITNESSETH. So does Miriam Hopkins become a Samuel Goldwyn star, joining Eddie and Anna Sten. Reading from Mr. Cantor to Mr. Goldwyn, we here observe Miss Hopkins as she signed a contract which placed her on the Goldwyn-United Artists roster of production names for four years.

PIROUETTE. An action photo of the dance, arresting Ginger Rogers very fetchingly in the middle of a pivot, which, in a way, is very representative of her doings in RKO Radio's "The Gay Divorcee," which is quite partial to matters Terpsichorean, as some would say.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, shows the business done in twelve key cities during the period from Jan. 9, 1932, to Sept. 8, 1934. The average weekly gross from these cities during the entire year of 1933 is taken as 100 per cent. The cities are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland (Ore.) and San Francisco.

Yearsley Named Warner Manager

C. L. Yearsley has been named manager of the Smoot theatre in Parkersburg, W. Va., by Harry Kalmine, Warner zone manager with headquarters in Pittsburgh.

Mr. Yearsley came into the motion picture industry many years ago through a contact with the late J. D. Williams in the Northwest. With Mr. Williams he went to Australia and became a considerable factor in the amusement world there, returning eventually to the United States as a figure in the Williams administration of First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc. Mr. Yearsley's special responsibility was the conduct of First National's publicity and advertising department. He continued with participation in Mr. Williams' various enterprises and promotions and for a time conducted the promotional activities of World Wide Pictures.

As "Bill" Yearsley in his many activities in Williams enterprises he is a widely known figure in amusement centers from London to Sydney and all points between. Despite his career in the marts and under the bright lights of Broadway, Mr. Yearsley's taste is for the bucolic life and the art of painting which has long been his avocation. More recently he has lived and painted in the highlands of New Jersey.

Universal Sales Up, Says Laemmle

An indication of better conditions is apparent in a report by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, last week on his return from abroad, that Universal sales are ahead of last year at the corresponding date by 2,000 contracts.

The Universal foreign production program for the year will include 12 features to be made in England by Hagen Films, of which six have been completed, and production in Budapest and Vienna, said Mr. Laemmle. The product is designed for foreign distribution, only exceptional films to be added to the American release schedule.

Universal has disposed of its German office to Rota Film, he declared, and Universal's quota films will continue to be distributed in Germany through that company.

BRITISH MEET NEW OVERSEATING ISSUE

One School Thinks a Theatre to 5,000 Population Permissible; Another Says 10,000

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

On the eve of issuance by the General Council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association of a pamphlet defining that organization's attitude to the problem of unnecessary theatre building, a difficulty of definition has arisen on which there are decidedly varied trade opinions.

The CEA's pronouncement, which will be finally approved within a few days, embodies a general statement of the case for regulating new building by regard for the needs of local population, a legal opinion from Tyldesly Jones, K.C., that local authorities possess an unlimited right of discretion as to the issuance of licenses, and a reprint of the paper by Sam Eckman Jr., read at the CEA Summer Conference at Blackpool, which pointed out the perils of overbuilding as illustrated by American experience.

It seems that, so far as it goes, this document will be logically conclusive. It will attempt to prove overseating to be definitely a business menace and to demonstrate the possibility of coping with it by means of existing legal powers. It seems, however, that it is unlikely to provide the one thing without which these other things may largely be rendered ineffective. There is a very grave doubt whether it will provide a definition of overseating likely to be either generally acceptable or universally applicable.

From 5,000 Seats to 10,000

Trade opinion varies as to the exact percentage of seats to population which constitutes legitimate enterprise. One school of thought thinks a cinema for every 5,000 persons permissible; another regards a 10,000 density the maximum. This is a wide range, and the CEA will not settle the question by selecting the one figure or the other, or even by setting up another ratio of its own.

Dispassionate consideration of the problem suggests that it is impossible to define overbuilding by reference to an arithmetical formula. An industrial district can carry more seats to population than a rural area, a prosperous city more than one suffering from unemployment. There is the further very important point of the quality of seating; there are territories which on the head-counting basis are adequately supplied with theatres but which may not possess a single modern building.

No doubt the CEA policy recognizes that local conditions must vary the definition of overseating, but even so the obstacles mentioned emphasize the fact that a very difficult problem is being approached.

Wages, Hours, and the Law

The Trade Union Congress, the annual Labor Parliament, in conference at Weymouth, has gone on record as supporting in full the policy of the National Association of Theatrical Employees which is agitating for a revision of the Cinematograph Act to compel all cinema owners to pay rates of wages agreed upon with the appropriate Trades Unions.

The importance of this decision is that the Trade Union Congress definitely represents the trade union opinion of the country. It is doubtful if the theatrical employees' association can succeed in its attempt to regulate wages and working hours by parliamentary action, at least in the present House of Commons; the Home Secretary has already replied to a request that he should receive a deputation by an intimation that he could not exercise the powers suggested by the amendment to the Act.

The result may be that direct action will be attempted by means of an appeal to the millions of trade unionists in the country, who would be asked to patronize only those cinemas which had given a "Fair Wages" pledge. This already has been threatened.

10,000,000 STUDENTS IN "CLEOPATRA" TIEUP

Paramount Offers Scholarships for Best Essays on Treatment of History in Motion Pictures

Paramount Pictures on October 1 will set out to enlist 10 million high school and college students between the ages of 16 and 21 years in a study and discussion of the treatment of history in motion pictures, in one of the most extensive campaigns ever conducted to stimulate motion picture appreciation. Several $500 scholarships will be used as an incentive.

Selecting Cecil Blount DeMille's current "Cleopatra" as the subject, Paramount has arranged the countrywide project so that its exhibitor clients everywhere may engage in the promotion. "Cleopatra's" general release date is October 5.

This will be the first of a series of special projects to be carried out by the company, probably on all DeMille productions, the "spectacle" type lending itself to such educational tieups.

Enlisting 20,000 Teachers

The promotion will be in the hands of the teachers and its results will be judged by a committee composed of Robert Hutchins, president of Chicago University; Richard Waldo, president and owner of McClure's Syndicate; Francis Taylor Patterson, professor of photoplay appreciation at Columbia University; Lee Hammer, head of the division of research on leisure at Russell Sage Foundation, and Mr. DeMille.

Unlike other school campaigns, usually conducted only locally, the "Cleopatra" arrangement will be based upon a study of extent to which the motion picture dramatist is entitled to take liberties with history.

Letters are now going forward to 20,000 teachers of English in high schools and colleges. In each letter is a "Study Guide and Manual" prepared by prominent educators with the cooperation of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

Every high school and college bulletin board will carry a colored poster outlining details. Newspaper and high school and college papers will be enlisted.

Contest Closes December 31

Sufficient time will be allowed for individual research by the entrants who will submit essay manuscripts. The last day for mailing the scripts is Dec. 31, 1934.

Supplementing the national contest will be regional or state or city contests on related subjects. These secondary contests are to be staged by the individual theatres.

Awards for the secondary contests are to be given by the theatres participating, with Paramount promising to tie up the plan for any theatre that desires to promote a contest in its locality.

Entrants for the major contest may also enter any secondary contest. The plans have no connection with one another except that they have for their common purpose the idea of stimulating the students to proper motion picture appreciation.

The English teachers in each school and college will receive the manuscripts from the entrants of their own school. These will be forwarded to the Paramount studio in Hollywood or to the home office in New York. All manuscripts will first be read by a committee of teachers to weed out undesirable documents.

Three best manuscripts will be chosen by the judges and the awards will then be deposited at the college chosen by the winner. The money cannot be used for any other purpose than to further the winners' education.

Aside from every consideration of publicity or promotion, the contest is designed to bring to students of the country a definite idea of what goes into the making of a historical motion picture.

The "Study Guide and Manual" now being sent to the 20,000 teachers has 32 pages, its contents including:

1. A Foreword by Cecil B. DeMille.
2. Factual background. Extracts from Plutarch, Shakespeare, Dryden, Jones and others.
3. Suggested parallel readings on some of the principal dramatists who have in the past treated the Cleopatra theme, together with some of the parallels in language used in the DeMille script.
4. Directions in detail for participating in the contest.
5. A series of questions designed to bring out DeMille's purposes and ideals in handling the Cleopatra theme for motion pictures. The answers to these questions will be the "leads" for writing of the essay, and will at the same time provide a better understanding of the changes in historical fact that were made in production of the picture.
6. Suggestions designed to show how attendance at the photoplay correlates with school work.
7. A rapid account showing how frequently the Cleopatra theme has been treated in literature.
8. A list of the books the reading of which will be useful in writing the essay.
10. Optional: Critical comments of the film.

Dietz Guest Chairman At AMPA This Week

Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for MGM, will act as guest chairman of this week's meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York. Notable guests will be Hal Roach and Pete Smith and possibly Stuart Erwin and June Collyer. Hal Horne is scheduled as chairman of the meeting September 27.

Ryan Warner Chicago Head

Charles Ryan, former Warner district manager in Chicago, has been placed in charge of all Warner houses there, under James E. Coston, manager. Harry Turrell, manager of the Capitol, has been named district manager. Mr. Turrell succeeds L. F. Gran, who has resigned to operate his own theatres in Wisconsin. Larry Stein has been named a district manager.

New Labor Board To Start Saturday

Reorganization of the 20 regional labor boards becomes effective Saturday under the new national labor relations board. There will be a full-time director and in each large city of the redefined territories two men will be named to the new labor relations board. These two may be impartial citizens not connected with industry or labor, or may be chosen from those two divisions. In labor disputes the director becomes the chairman of the board and meets with the two members in the city where the issue arises, these three constituting the board, with full authority to act.

The projectionist wage problem at Detroit has been settled for the next two years. Projectionists in independent theatres will receive an increase of 14 per cent and circuit men 7½ per cent. The circuits granted a 14 per cent increase last September.

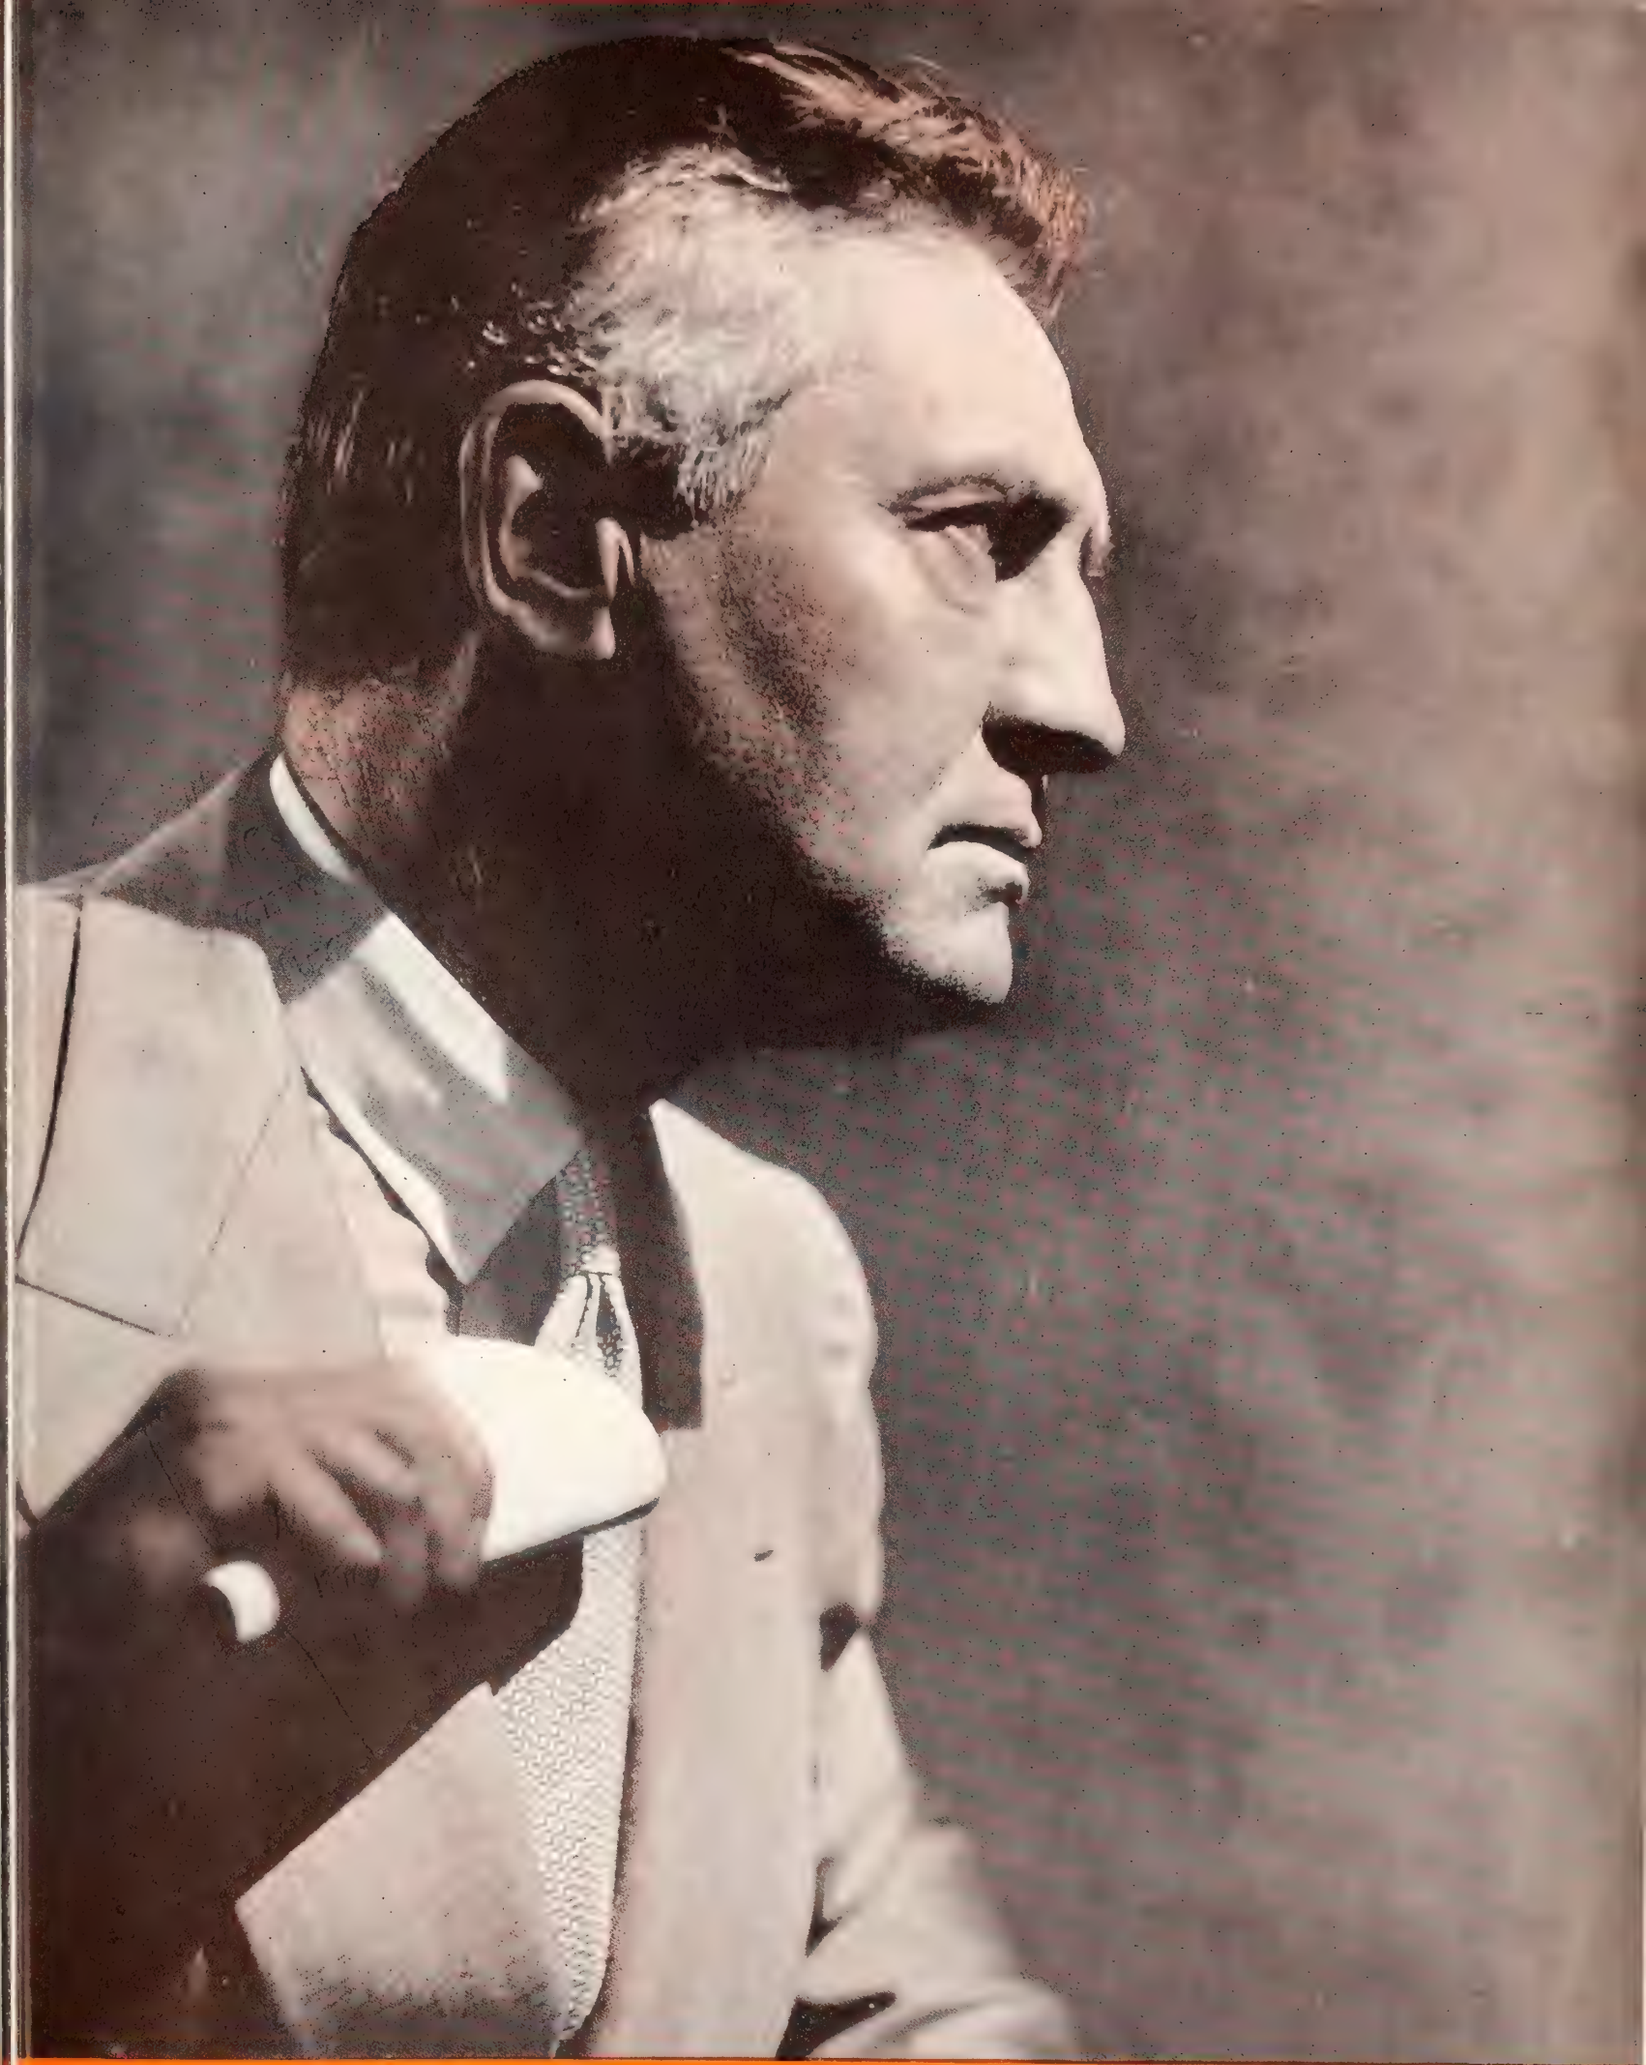
The Pennsylvania Federation of Labor and various Pittsburgh unions are opposing the Brotherhood of Motion Picture Engineers whose application for a charter is pending before Secretary of State R. J. Besmish at Harrisburg.

Direct negotiation with the studios is proposed by George Browne, president of the IATSE, in investigating the supplanting of IATSE members with men from the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. The American Federation of Labor meets in San Francisco next month.

Johnson Explains New NRA System

NRA will be reorganized by President Roosevelt so that it will function out of three branches as is the federal government —executive, legislative and administrative —Administrator Hugh S. Johnson declared Friday night at Carnegie Hall, New York, in addressing Authorities of more than 400 codes.

"Whatever reorganization is to come will be worked out by the President, and no one else. I have too much power invested in me and the sooner I am divested of it the better. Let someone else stop the dead cats."



General Johnson, after the meeting, again declared groundless reports that Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt would resign.

Dembow Set to Move

Sam Dembow plans to leave Paramount early next week to take over his new post as general manager of National Screen Service. Jack Bannon, for several years secretary to Mr. Dembow, has also resigned from Paramount and will become general assistant to Mr. Dembow at National Screen.

Marie Shotwell Dead

Death came this week to Marie Shotwell, stage and screen player, who was being treated at St. John's Hospital in Long Island City, for cerebral hemorrhage. Services were held Wednesday night at Campbell's Funeral Church in New York.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

STUDIOS EXPAND GOODWILL TOURS
MILLIONS FOR BETTER BACKGROUND
PARAMOUNT MODIFIES AIR POLICY
EIGHT FILMS START, THREE FINISHED

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

PRODUCER and showmen are finally meeting on common ground. Dating back to the Los Angeles convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, when unanimous opinions were voiced for a more thorough mutual understanding, a fair number of major studio representatives now are conducting a business-like series of good will tours to key cities.

Six MGM Directors Touring

MGM leads the parade with six directors who, at least once a year, contact several hundred theatre owners. Clarence Brown is not only making a flying trip among exhibitors but has widened his field to include theatre owners of Europe. Other MGM directors, who cover the exhibition field annually are W. S. Van Dyke, Robert Z. Leonard, Gregory LaCava, Charles Riesner and Sam Wood. Mr. Wood has just concluded a contract with the studio.

Fox is represented by Director Henry King, who is preparing for his annual plane trip.

Trem Carr, Monogram production head, is making several tours a year.

Cecil B. deMille is chief commuter for Paramount. The producer-director usually makes his contacts following the completion of each picture.

Columbia recently entertained every first-run exhibitor in San Francisco at a lavish banquet, which, although for the selling of the Grace Moore picture, "One Night of Love," succeeded in establishing a closer contact with showmen. Harry Cohn also presented the studio's leading stars.

L. B. Mayer's swing around the circuit is scheduled upon his return from overseas.

More Authentic Backgrounds

Location trips spanning several hundred thousands of miles are scheduled for the new season's product, with budgets raised several millions of dollars to register authentic backgrounds.

Independent units are vying with the majors in filming foreign locales.

MGM has three pictures on the current schedule which will mean extensive trips. One unit already has spent several months in China filming backgrounds for Pearl Buck's best seller, "The Good Earth." Another unit is about to hop off for the South Seas to film "Mutiny on the Bounty." Two ships are under construction to be used in the picture as well as for commuting purposes. The studio has definitely decided to make a third "Tarzan" picture with Johnny Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan. According to present plans it will be made in Africa.

Plans for one of the most authentic Chinese features yet filmed are being completed by Clyde E. Elliot, director-producer of "Devil Tiger" and director of "Bring 'Em Back Alive." In four weeks, Elliot and his troupe leave for the Orient, where eight months will be spent filming "China Roars," a romantic slice of Chinese life authored by Gordon Rigby. This picture will take in everything from the "Hoi Polloi" of the Orient to the Yangtze river pirates. An American player will be the only white in the cast. Erpi is financing this venture and Columbia will distribute.

Sol Lesser, heading Principal and Atherton Productions, will soon leave for England to do the entire filmization of "The Cowboy Millionaire," second of the George O'Brien series of six for Fox release. This is an unprecedented expenditure on a Western picture.

Phil Goldstone is planning a trip to the South Seas to film a yarn for Majestic.

Norman Foster, a Hollywood actor, will soon head back to Tahiti to complete an underwater picture started some months ago.

Locations within the United States include two Chicago treks, one for Columbia's "Carnival" and the other just completed, for atmospheric backgrounds for the Radio picture "Silver Streak," dealing with the new streamline trains.

MGM is sending a company to New York to shoot "West Point of the Air," and Warner Brothers recently returned a company from Manhattan where "Flirtation Walk" was made almost in its entirety.

Although Radio's "Last Days of Pompeii" will contain no Pompeian background shots, Merian C. Cooper spent much time on the native ground drawing up maps and shooting stills of the ancient city as it is today, on his recent trip to Europe. These will be used in construction of sets.

Mascot Films has launched its new season product of twelve features with something approaching éclat and élan.

"Young and Beautiful," costing about $75,000 and featuring the Wampas Babies, has been accorded first-run showings in Los Angeles and San Francisco.

"Crimson Romance" has been previewed and awaits its test runs.

Two years ago, Mascot was practically unheard of. Rumor had it that during the depression Mascot serials kept a handful of state rights boys in business in various key spots.

One time secretary to Marcus Loew, the mind behind the Mascot product is Nat Levine, young and energetic business-man producer, harboring some artistic inclinations but no box-office illusions.

Campbell MacCulloch, acting executive secretary of the NRA state Recovery board and of the Los Angeles Regional Labor Board, was appointed by the Producers Association to succeed Dave Allen as manager of the Central Casting Bureau.

The new Los Angeles open-air-drive-in-theatre out Pico way opened to capacity and continued that way through the week. The amphitheatre accommodates 500 cars.

Paramount has made a turnabout in the matter of permitting contract players to go on the air, but with reservations. It has let the bars down only on the project of creating a weekly hour to be known as Paramount week, wherein it will tie up its stars with current releases similar to RKO's "Hollywood On The Air" weekly broadcast. The proposed series will be nationwide as soon as it obtains a commercial sponsor.

Hollywood started eight pictures last week. Three were completed. Radio and Universal each have two of the new ones. The others are credited to Fox, Columbia, Warner and Monogram. Single productions from Columbia, Radio and Warner account for the trio finished.

First of Radio's starting pair is "Sea Girl," starring Steffi Duna, with Regis Toomey, Lionel Belmore, Mitchell Lewis, Raymond Hatton and Charles Middleton in support. The story is by Gouverneur Morris. The second is a Zane Grey yarn, "West of the Pecos," in which Richard Dix appears with Martha Sleeper.

The two new pictures at Universal are "Good Fairy," again starring Margaret Sullavan, with Herbert Marshall and Frank Morgan featured, and "Man Who Reclaimed His Head," with Claude Rains, star of "The Invisible Man."

The new Fox feature, "Bachelor of Arts," will offer Tom Brown, Anita Louise, Henry B. Walthall, Arline Judge, Frank Albertson and John Qualen. Columbia's new activity is a Tim McCoy western, "Wolves of Cactaw," in which Sheila Mannors, Alden Chase, Hooper Atchley, Charles King and Steve Clark will be seen.

"Flirting With Danger," Monogram, teams Robert Armstrong and Bill Cagney in the leads, with Edgar Kennedy, Marian Burns and Maria Alba heading the support. Warner began shooting "Concealment," in which Barbara Stanwyck, Warren William, Glenda Farrell and Henry O'Neill are featured.

Probably the most important of the completed pictures is Columbia's "The Captain Hates the Sea." The cast features Victor McLaglen, John Gilbert, Fred Keating, Wynne Gibson, Alison Skipworth and Leon Errol.

Radio Completed "Anne of Green Gables," in which Anne Shirley and Tom Brown are the featured leads, with Sara Haden, Helen Westley and O. P. Heggie in support. "Babbitt" is the Warner completed feature. Guy Kibbee and Aline MacMahon are starred. The cast includes Maxine Doyle, Minna Gombell, Alan Hale and Berton Churchill.

'MARVELOUS HELP BOOKING SHOWS'

From George Biehler of the Palace theatre at Hamburgh, New York, comes the following in a letter to Motion Picture Herald:

"I want to say that your column on 'What the Picture Did for Me' is a marvelous help in booking my shows. The boys seem to be sincere in their criticisms and I know my shows have been placed much better since reading your columns. I sure am going to continue sending my criticisms as I know they will help."

IT'S "NOT WHAT YOU DO"

But It's "How You Do It," Writes Traveling Show Exhibitor; Another Complains About Titles

NOT WHAT YOU DO BUT HOW YOU DO IT

To the Editor of Motion Picture Herald:

I read with great interest your article on "Jack-Rabbit" shows running around the country, but want to call your attention to one fact, that although I am running several "Jack-Rabbit" circuits (and they are among the Jack-Rabbits and Coyotes, too, being in the Oregon wheat belt and Willamette Valley), I am still an exhibitor, having been operating the theatres here for the past 20 years.

I operate only in towns where the coming of sound forced the theatres to close or where there has never been a theatre in operation. I carry only deluxe equipment, charge them the same money they would pay in any regular house in the district we play in, and stay as far away from legitimate exhibitors as possible.

I run in just as legitimate a manner on my circuits as I do in my big houses, maintain an office and shop in Portland as well as here at Hood River. I use local girls and help in each town we play in, pay off in cash every bill after each night's showing and am as much a part of the different communities on the night we play as if we were running steady.

I have over 30 people on my payroll on the circuits, not counting the local ushers or help of that kind. So you see a "Jack-Rabbit" circuit can be sublimated and made dignified just as well as that old familiar landmark was immortalized by Chic Sale. It's not what you are doing: it's how you do it. I've had chiselers try to move in on me; I've moved in on truck drivers who tried to crash the business, but as long as I have been operating I have always run legitimate, even down to the carrying of an ASCAP license for each circuit.

We pay as we go, give them a real show, even include a mailing list and the issuing of an eight-page program, and play the same day every week in the year. I have actually spent more money making a town during stormy weather than I have taken in, but they know when to expect us and know what they are going to see when we get there.

Personally I feel like you do about a great many of these fly-by-night operators, as the smell they leave is the hardest thing I have to break down when I open a new circuit, but there can be just as much dignity attached to a "Jack-Rabbit" outfit (as you call it) as there can be to a 5,000-seat house, and, by the way, I'll take the "Jack-Rabbit" layout.

Our slogan is "We bring the world to your door" and I'll tell you there are some milling towns, etc., that we play where this is an actual fact. They are isolated, away off in the woods or mountains, and the coming of the show is a weekly event.

I sincerely hope that the film exchanges and others interested will in time weed out the bicyclers and chiselers who are shoe-stringing with portables, but there will always be communities in spots like I play that will need the kind of entertainment I furnish.—A. S. Kolstad, 818 S. W. Oak Street, Portland, Ore.

THE MYSTERY OF TITLES

To the Editor of Motion Picture Herald:

The undersigned, having at several different times wondered why certain pictures bore certain titles, seeing that said titles did not even remotely suggest the story content, and, even worse than that, having noted changes in titles where the original title was far the most appropriate, has been led to wonder how or why this practice is permitted.

Honestly, some of the titles selected to adorn some well written tales are about as suitably placed as this writer would be in a lady's nightgown . . . and some of the guys who furnish these titles would probably look well, so clad.

But the worst and most inexcusable blunder is substituting a title that bears no closer relation to the story that I do to President Roosevelt, when the original title was okay.

By the time a contract is six months old, the average exhibitor is not able to identify the pictures on release sheets with those on his contract.

There may be a good reason for this foolishness, but I'm too dense to see it.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La.

MORE PAEANS FOR QUILLAN

To the Editor of Motion Picture Herald:

In your issue of September 1, I was glad to read the letter from an exhibitor who spoke highly of Eddie Quillan, and was glad to note that he concluded his letter by saying "Give Us More Eddie Quillan Pictures."

After reading this exhibitor's letter, and realizing that Motion Picture Herald is the only trade paper that gives the exhibitors the opportunity to voice their opinion about pictures and players, I thought I should write you the following:

I manage a few theatres in different towns around this territory, and I must say that Eddie Quillan is a big favorite, and he means a lot to my box offices.

I have used every picture Quillan made for Pathe, I have used Pathe reissues of Quillan's pictures, and about six months ago I played Quillan in "Big Money" for the third time, although "Big Money" was made about five years ago. This should prove that Quillan is a good box office attraction for me, and from talk I have heard around Film Row, Quillan means box office to many other exhibitors.

Let us hear from other exhibitors. The Herald gives us the opportunity to voice our opinion, so let us make use of its columns.—Gus Vaveris, Strand Theatre, Johnstown, Pa.

Sisk Goes to Coast October 1; Farewell Dinner on Sept. 28

Robert Sisk, last week appointed assistant to J. R. McDonough, president of RKO Radio Pictures, will leave New York for the Coast about October 1, following a short vacation cruise.

Home office associates of Mr. Sisk and friends in New York will give a farewell dinner Friday, September 28, at the St. Moritz Hotel on Central Park South.

Academy Subcommittees Meet

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences' subcommittee on improvement in release print quality met Monday noon in Hollywood, the screen illumination subcommittee Wednesday noon and the sound dubbing supervisors Wednesday night. The papers and program committee of the technicians branch was to convene Thursday noon and a meeting of the silent camera subcommittee is set for Friday night.

Boston Theatre Plans Series of Education Films

With the intention of indicating the motion picture, definitely in positive fashion, as a medium of pleasurably administered adult education, George Kraska, manager of the Fine Arts theatre in Boston, has undertaken the exhibition of a series of generally educational programs, with the cooperation of the Adult Education Council of Greater Boston, whose president is Professor Kirtley Mather of Harvard.

The council has prepared a series of subjects, which, with the inauguration of the program policy October 4, will be designed to concentrate on the sciences and social subjects. Supplementing its current policy of exhibiting quality feature pictures, Mr. Kraska and the Council each week will show two subjects educational in character, a travel subject, newsreel and cartoon. It is planned to treat geology, botany, zoology, chemistry, physics, physiology, astronomy, meteorology, education, psychology, sociology, and the fine arts. The first series, which will run approximately three weeks, will offer an introduction to geology and music.

The project is sponsored by a large group of prominent men and women of Boston. The special commitee of the Council named to study the motion picture is composed of: Edward H. Dewey, chairman; Professor Mather, Father Michael Ahearn of Weston College, Mrs. Elizabeth Pigeon, Mr. Kraska, James Rollins Brewster of the Harvard Film Foundation and Dr. Abraham Krasker, director of visual education of the Quincy, Mass., public schools and instructor of visual education at Boston University School of Education.

National Warner Club Elects Blackman President

Max B. Blackman was elected president of the national Warner Club at a meeting in New York last week. Mr. Blackman succeeds Al Schwalberg. Approximately 60 delegates from 40 clubs over the country attended the election session. Vice-presidents are Jules Levy, Ruth Weisberg and Steve Trilling, handling membership, welfare and entertainment, respectively.

I. T. Martin was elected treasurer, Sam S. Aldrich secretary, and Sam Schneider chairman of the finance committee. Forty governors were named. The executive committee consists of W. S. McDonald, Frank L. Gates, Harold Rodner, Mr. Schwalberg, A. McBeath, George O'Keefe, E. B. Barrison, Syd Goldberg, M. Peterson, Ruth Goldberg, W. V. Brooks, J. T. Holmes, Sally Sabin and Mr. Schneider.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" for Shirley Temple Reported

Fox is considering production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" with Shirley Temple in the role of Little Eva, according to report. Some of the studio executives on the Coast questioned the report, recalling that the silent version was not a financial success.

HERE IS MY HEART

Paramount

While this is a musical, it is more of a sustained story than other Bing Crosby pictures. The original is by Alfred Savoir, author of 'Love Parade' and many stage successes. The screen play is by Harlan Thompson, director of 'Kiss and Make Up', for which he did the screen play, and Edwin Justus Mayer, similarly associated with 'Thirty Day Princess'. Direction is by Frank Tuttle, who made 'Springtime For Henry', 'Roman Scandals' and 'Ladies Should Listen.'

The Stars of 'She Loves Me Not', Crosby and Kitty Carlisle, are again teamed. In the supporting cast are Roland Young, making his first screen appearance since 'His Double Life'; Reginald Owen, currently in 'Madame du Barry' and 'The Human Side'; Alison Skipworth, recently in 'Shoot the Works', William Frawley, Cecilia Parker, former leading woman in the George O'Brien-Fox westerns and many others.

Music and lyrics for Crosby and Miss Carlisle are by Ralph Rainger and Leo Robin, who have contributed similarly to many Paramount pictures.

In the story, Crosby, wealthy American radio star, is on a grand adventure with romance as the primary objective. Meeting Kitty Carlisle, beautiful but broke Russian princess, whose brothers, Young and Owen, are on the alert for just such a chump as the American millionaire, he takes a job as a waiter just to have the pleasure of serving her. Love is the thing that motivates their affair, but the fatness of his pocket-book is what intrigues the brothers. Eventually, to the tune of gay music, all are satisfied. Bing wins the girl and the brothers' eating worries are eliminated.

Significance of the title, strength of cast names, plus just enough of the story content should be the easiest and most effective means of creating popular attention for this new picture.

SPRING 3100

Columbia

The way this story is being made makes possible a unique and novel brand of showmanship. It all happens as a title contending prize fighter gets a sock on the chin and doesn't wake up until the count of nine. Thus people are not going to see what they think they see, and the yarn is not an out-and-out fight story. The original is by Argylle Campbell, adapted to the screen by Kubec Glasmon, who recently did 'Handy Andy', and the screen play is by Joseph Moncure March. Direction is by Roy W. Neill, maker of 'Ninth Guest', 'Whirlpool' and 'Black Moon'.

Nancy Carroll, most recently in 'Springtime For Henry' and soon to be seen in 'Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round', and George Murphy, a newcomer from the New York stage who will be seen in 'Kid Millions', are teamed in the leads. The supporting players include Donald Cook, Inez Courtney, Arthur Hohl, Clara Blandick, Josephine Whittell, Raymond Walburn, Huey White, Ray Mayer, Arthur Vinton and Ray Cooke. Additionally there are any number of prize ring figures including Jim Jeffries and Lee Ramage.

Actually the story is a drama of misunderstood romance and jealousy. Murphy, a fighter, thinks his fiancee, Nancy Carroll, is two-timing him. The condition being a source of worry to him and his managers, he goes into the ring with the champ. His actions are anything but those of a contender and comes one wallop. The referee starts to count and then the story flashes back to all Murphy thinks is happening. It takes him through drama that leads to murder, conviction of killing and into the electric chair where he asks the chaplain to count 10 over him as the juice is switched on. It goes up to 9 when Murphy comes out of the fog; the story flashes back to the fight and in the next round he, himself, puts over the kayo sock.

There's plenty of room for ingenious showmanship in this picture and also opportunity to convince fans that it's a dramatic romance, rather than a prize fight picture.

POLICE AMBULANCE

Columbia

Because of recent disclosures relative to the Dillinger case, topical timeliness has a more than usual significance in connection with the showmanship of this picture. Basically an action romance drama, the premise is motivated by the practice of surgeons secretly treating gang war and crime victims. Story and screen play are by Harold Shumate, recent author of 'Hell Bent for Love' and 'The Crime of Helen Santley'. Direction is by Lambert Hillyer, maker of 'Most Precious Thing in Life', 'The Defense Rests' and 'One is Guilty'.

John Mack Brown, recently in 'Three on a Honeymoon', is the hero. Sally Blane, recently in 'No More Women' and 'City Limits', has the feminine lead. The supporting cast includes a group of well known screen names such as Arthur Hohl, George Meeker, James Bush, Bradley Page, Ward Bond, Hooper Atchley, Al Hill and Joseph Crehan.

The title gives a clue to the story tone. It concerns a young police ambulance driver who, to protect his doctor mate, forced by a gangster boss to treat victims of crime-gang warfare, is transferred to the sticks. A romantic triangle building between the two and the girl, suspense is expertly used to build the story to a point where the gang czar, attempting to put a rival on the spot, is machine-gunned in the hero's ambulance as he tries to make a getaway. Both from remorse and fear of the law, the unethical doctor, first confessing his part, kills himself. Romance which has been growing for the hero and heroine triumphs in the finale.

The story content, title and cast names, all tying in with the peculiar timeliness of the yarn, indicate an effective interest creating form of advance showmanship.

GIRL OF MY DREAMS

Monogram

Adapting again the same basic entertainment elements, this Monogram feature, as was 'Sweetheart of Sigma Chi', is a collegiate comedy with music. The original story and screen play are by George Wagner, who authored 'Sigma Chi', and it is being produced by William T. Lackey, who teamed with Waggner in the previous picture. Lyrics and music are provided by Waggner and Edward Ward. Direction is by Ray McCarey.

Mary Carlisle, who played the lead in "Sigma Chi', again heads the cast. Featured with her are Eddie Nugent, currently in 'She Loves Me Not', Sterling Holloway, featured in 'The Merry Widow', Arthur Lake and Creighton Chaney, son of the late Lon. In support are Tommy Dugan, who was in 'Sigma Chi' 'Palooka', 'Circus Clown' and 'Let's Talk it Over'; Gigi Parrish, a 1934 Wampas Baby Star, currently in 'Girl of the Limberlost'; Jeanie Roberts, Lee Shumway and Beverly and Bettymae Crane.

The yarn, which places a novel twist on the social and political aspects of modern coed collegiate life, runs the skein of romance, drama, comedy and action, with tuneful music. It deals with a track star, whose success on the cinder path and the campus gives him a swelled head. Losing a coveted senior honor, which also means the loss of the blonde campus vamp, the picture, similar to 'Sigma Chi', departs from the traditional idea of featuring a football game as its big punch and concentrates its action and heroics on a track meet. Of course there is the clever twist that turns seeming defeat into victory and also works to regenerate the boy.

The picture looks to have the color that will appeal to the young folk and at the same time a character quality that will interest the more mature patrons. It calls for the same caliber showmanship as was given 'Sigma Chi'.

FLIRTING WITH DANGER

Monogram

This is a wise-cracking comedy romance with feminine complications, lots of action and color and plenty of thrills, as the title indicates. The original is by George Bertholon, the screen play by Albert E. DeMond, recently credited with 'Secret of the Chateau', and Wilbur Hall. Direction is by Vin Moore, whose latest picture is 'Love Past Thirty'.

The fast moving plot, filled with thrills and suspense and involving a number of dynamite explosions, revolves around three happy-go-lucky powder mixers, Robert Armstrong, William Cagney and Edgar Kennedy. Feminine lure and straight romance are provided by Maria Alba and Marion Burns.

Stressing the comedy of danger, both physical and romantic, the yarn opens in a Delaware powder manufacturing plant, then shifts to an imaginary South American republic, where Armstrong's lack of understanding of the native tongue gets him into complications with an exotic rhumba dancer, Maria Alba. The trio, out of one jam, fall into a series of others, not the least comically interesting being their participation in a typical comic opera revolution.

The title, cluing the picture's theme, and the fun and thrill look to be the outstanding selling features. Opportunities for effective exploitation based on the title tone should be many. Their use to create male curiosity in the picture is evident. For the women, sell the romantic angle.

Marcus Gets Action Films

Gene Marcus has closed a deal with Stage and Screen Productions for distribution of four series, six police dog melodramas, six Northwest Mounted action features, six Range Rider and six Rough Rider films.

5 Films, 11 Stories Rejected by Breen Staff in 2 Months

Of more than 100 features viewed by the staff of Joseph I. Breen, director of the Production Code Administration, five completed pictures and eleven stories have been rejected. Three of the pictures, after changes, have been approved and released. Most of the rejected stories have been discarded, others being rewritten.

Reporting on the results of the two months of operation of the Production Code Administration, Mr. Breen declared that most of the product approved since July 15 has been of outstanding entertainment value and artistry. He said most stories written for films comply with the industry's code or require only few changes in lines or scenes.

Observers on the Coast noted also that stories have maintained a level of health and vigor, with no tendency toward mid-Victorian priggishness, while avoiding the objectionable.

The Production Code staff of seven reads the original story, then the shooting script, conferring with studio executives on deletions or changes, and finally reviews the completed product. In cases of what Mr. Breen describes as "cock-eyed philosophies of life, back-fence humor, and raw dramatization of sex," the staff suggests improved treatment to salvage the work of the writer.

McNicholas on Air On Legion's Work

Archbishop John Timothy McNicholas of Cincinnati, under whose leadership the Legion of Decency campaign against objectionable motion pictures was started several months ago, is scheduled to deliver the first of a series of four radio broadcasts under the auspices of the Legion of Decency on Friday of this week, over an NBC-WJZ network. Speaking on the purposes and program of the organization, Archbishop McNicholas will be followed on the three successive Friday evenings by other prominent figures identified with the movement.

Monthly and weekly lists of approved pictures, rated as to family and adult suitability, are being issued by Dr. Edward S. Schwegler, diocesan director of the Legion of Decency in the Buffalo diocese.

Monsignor Felix F. Kaup, acting head of the Catholic Church in Virginia, at Richmond, has issued a statement praising Protestant action in the state in aiding the Legion of Decency in its campaign.

Active Legion of Decency support in smaller communities came from Council Bluffs, Ia.; Covington, Ky., adjacent to Cincinnati, and Elyria, O.

Columbia Meeting Delayed

The board of directors of Columbia Pictures has postponed its regular meeting from September 22 to September 29.

Will Ask Temporary Trustee for Fox Theatres

The appointment of a temporary trustee for Fox Theatres and an order approving bankruptcy proceedings for the company under Section 77-B of the new bankruptcy laws is to be asked this week of Federal Judge Martin Manton. Present receivers for the company are William Atkinson and Milton C. Weisman.

Fox Metropolitan bondholders on Wednesday started discussions with Skouras Brothers and Randforce Theatres to develop a new operating contract as a basis for a plan of reorganization.

Ivan Abramson, Producer, Dies

Ivan Abramson, 65, producer and author, who died Saturday at Mount Sinai hospital, New York, was buried Sunday at Mount Lebanon Cemetery after services in Park West Chapel.

Born in Russia September 3, 1872, he came to America and pioneered first in the field of publication of Jewish newspapers and periodicals and ventured into the theatrical field as manager of the Jacob P. Adler Company, following in 1905 with organization of the Ivan Grand Opera Company. Since 1909 he wrote, produced and directed more than 100 pictures. Forming Ivan Film Company, in which William Randolph Hearst was associated, and Graphic Film Corporation, he continued with Graphic until his retirement four years ago.

In 1917 he had written "Enlighten Thy Daughter." In 1933 he rewrote it and the production was distributed by Exploitation Pictures.

Sonotone Offers New Stock Issue

The Sonotone Corporation, organized in 1929, and actively engaged since 1930 in the manufacture and sale of hearing aid devices for the deaf, is issuing 100,000 shares of new common stock at $3 per share to the public for the financing of an expansion program and to provide new working capital for the company. The plan was announced last week at a luncheon in New York by Dr. Hugo Lieber, president.

It is expected that at least $255,000 will be realized from the sale of the stock. Employees of the company have the privilege of purchasing the stock at $2.55 per share. The greater part of the issue is expected to be subscribed for by employees and dealers.

Dr. Lieber reported that the company's net income for the six months ended June 30, 1934, amounts to $47,018, which compares with net of $90,863 for the entire year of 1933. The personnel of the company has been increased 590 per cent and the sales have gone up 700 per cent during the past two years, Dr. Lieber indicated.

Vergesslich Quits Majestic

Joe Vergesslich has resigned as branch manager in New York of Majestic Pictures.

2 Millions Paid for 200 Books Used for Films in 18 Months

Producers of motion pictures paid two million dollars for nearly 200 books purchased or scheduled for release in the year and a half from Jan. 1, 1933, to July, 1, 1934, writes William James Fadman, formerly story editor of Columbia Pictures and now associated with Leland Hayward, Inc., Agency, in The Publishers' Weekly.

More than one-third of the 500 pictures scheduled and completed during the period resulted from book purchases, at an average of $10,000 a book, Mr. Fadman says.

He predicts more mystery pictures this season than ever before, most of the purchases in this direction being as parts of series of books that have the same central character, permitting sequels. He believes more classics also will be filmed.

Mr. Fadman's second article will be on "Selling Books to the Movies."

Kuykendall Urges Higher Admissions

An appeal for slight increases in admission prices is being carried into the South this week by Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. He addressed the MPTO of North and South Carolina Wednesday at Charlotte and will speak before the Tri-State Theatre Owners at a two-day session starting October 7, at Memphis.

In Chicago, Balaban & Katz has tentatively set five pictures from three companies for 25 cents minimum admission. The companies are United Artists, Columbia and Paramount. Present admissions are 20 cents. Of the 450 theatres in Chicago, 275 or so charge 15 cents up to 6 p. m. A general move is reported aiming at an increase to 20 cents for matinees.

Admission price scales of the 80 E. J. Sparks theatres in Florida will not be increased this fall, Mr. Sparks said in New York.

At Kansas City, the RKO Mainstreet has set its increased night price at 45 cents plus tax, for combination shows. The Tower went up to 25 cents matinee and 35 cents at night last Friday. Suburbans have delayed action.

Reduction of prices has been extended in Milwaukee to the Oriental, Tower, Shorewood and Downer, neighborhoods.

Minor Changes in Pathe Reorganizing

The Pathe reorganization plan is undergoing minor changes as a result of the lack of a quorum at the stockholders meeting September 11, which was to have acted on the plan. An application for permission to hold an extraordinary meeting at which two-thirds of the stockholders are represented, and may approve or reject the plan, has been made to the New York supreme court by Coudert Brothers, Pathe counsel. The court allows 10 days for filing objections by stockholders, and if authorization is granted, 90 days' notice of the meeting is given. The plan, therefore, is unlikely to be submitted before December.

UNIVERSAL'S 'GIFT OF GAB' KNOCK-OUT MUSICAL COMEDY

Everything That Spells Box-Office

"GIFT OF GAB"
(Universal)

Universal shot the works on "Gift of Gab," and even if it were a poor picture—which it is NOT—no exhibitor anywhere need ponder for a moment over it. The cast reads like the Universal lot, with plenty of radio stars thrown in for good measure.

Good music; swell dialogue; insanely amusing sequences; an appealing, if not original, story, and grand performances throughout make this picture one of the big bets of the season.

Edmund Lowe and Gloria Stuart carry the bulk of the plot, but it isn't as important, from an entertainment standpoint, as the gags, music and comedy scenes.

Lowe plays the part of a fast-talking roustabout, who finally becomes the greatest reporter and announcer on the air. He pulls an awful boner—giving a fake interview with a famous flier who was killed twenty minutes before the broadcast—and then tries to drown his shame in many bottles. But Gloria Stuart arranges for his comeback, and they live happily ever afterwards.

That's the story. But the trimmings are something grand. Songs by Ethel Waters and Ruth Etting and the Downey Sisters and the Beale Street Boys; glimpses of Tom Hanlon, Graham McNamee and Alexander Woollcott; music by Gus Arnheim and his orchestra; one of the funniest farce scenes ever seen with Paul Lukas, Karloff, Roger Pryor and Chester Morris; a screamingly amusing scene in a doctor's office with Helen Vinson, Hugh O'Connell and Phil Baker; and very, very swell performances all around. Lowe in the role of the announcer provides the opportunity for the radio acts.

Lowe plays swiftly and with telling effect. Miss Stuart is charming. Hugh O'Connell is consistently amusing; Sterling Holloway has a swell chance and takes it as the sound effect man in the radio studio; Alice White, Binnie Barnes, Marian Byron, Andy Devine, are seen briefly, and Hymie Fink, the demon photographer, is supposed to be in the picture. But he went through too fast for these old eyes to catch him.

One of the funniest characterizations is given by Victor Moore as Colonel Trivers, head of the Trivers Chopped Chicken Livers Company. Henry Armetta has a grand bit, and Edwin Maxwell is the president of the radio station.

The picture is a lot of fun, and with such a cast, with the music and with its good direction, it's a cinch.

Karl Freund directed; Jerry Wald and Philip G. Epstein wrote the original story, and the screen play is a tribute to Rian James' sense of humor. George Robinson photographed more than well, and the music and lyrics—all good—are by Con Conrad, Albert Von Tilzer, Charles Tobias, John Meskill, Herb Magidson, George Whiting and Murray Mencher.

The picture is big and worth a lot of ballyhoo. Don't worry about it. It'll get along anywhere.

"Designed to extract a consistent flow of laughter from any audience, no matter how cynical...should appeal to all classes, especially the radio listeners, who hear but never see their favorites."

HOLLYWOOD VARIETY

Gift of Gab

Lavishly studded with ace entertainment names and a wealth of entertainment items, 'Gift of Gab' needs only intelligent, showmanly re-cutting from its long preview assembly to make it an important box office candidate.

Shaped on the revue form, with the radio world as its scene, it has catchy song, amusing skit, an hilarious travesty on murder mysteries, a parade of radio celebs interestingly introduced and good individual performances to carry the light dramatic thread.

Rian James has succeeded in cannily weaving together the wide assortment of elements into an agreeable whole, although the writing assignment was a tough one. Smart handling here saved the story thread from some obvious pitfalls.

Edmund Lowe and Gloria Stuart capably enact the romantic angles which hinge on the one dramatic situation where the girl, a radio program director, salvages the egoistic radio announcer and reporter, Lowe, from drunken oblivion when his pride makes him go temporarily haywire at the mike and in heart affairs.

Radio reportorial stunt at this point puts tension into the picture when Lowe bails out of a broadcasting plane and hangs suspended to the landing wheel to score an ether beat over a wrecked plane. This is the highlight of a series of well done news broadcasts, with their comedy and heart implications.

Karl Freund has done a sound job of direction, eking every ounce of entertainment value from his diversified material.

In the song repertoire, one of the distinguishing features of the offering, Gene Austin effectively puts over 'Blue Sky Avenue;' Ethel Waters hits the theme song, 'I Ain't Going to Sin No More,' and Ruth Etting scores distinctively in crooning the romantic number 'Talking to Myself.'

Gus Arnheim's band supplies swell accompaniment, and the Beale Street Boys are in for corking quartette numbers.

Musical contributions are especially notable, with Con Conrad, Albert von Tilzer, Charles Tobias, John Meskill, Herb Magidson, George Whiting and Murray Mencher sharing credits.

Performances and appearances are all of high level, with Phil Baker, Hugh O'Connell, Marion Byron, Sterling Holloway and Douglas Fowley clicking especially. Photography is swell.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

A KINDLY CRITICISM

John J. J. Dal, Austin, Texas, says:

"Dear Brother Richardson: As this is my first letter in a long, long while, I dislike to start it with a criticism. In Bluebook School Question 232 you ask: 'In electrical formula, what do the letters E, C and R represent?'

"It is your use of the letter C that I arise to protest. In the Bluebook you use the letter C to represent current, whereas in recognized electrical formula that letter represents capacitance and the letter I current. True, a few years back the projectionist might never have learned the meaning of the word capacitance, and as a result been in nowise handicapped by the use of the letter C to represent current. Today, however, it is different and it is with the thought that your use of the letter C to represent current may tend to confuse the newer students of projection, that I offer protest and ask that you change your practice in that respect. Remember that users of the Bluebooks also read other handbooks and trade journals.

"Brother Richardson, I am a senior electrical engineering student in a great college, the name of which I prefer that you omit should you publish this letter. I desire to congratulate you upon the manner in which you have conducted the Bluebook School. Many of the questions seem very elementary to me, but I must admit some of them make me dig out my text books and read up before I feel able to answer them.

"To those who may be skeptical of the school, I want to say this: You have to this date not asked one question that at some time or other I have not had to answer in my University work. Furthermore, many things gleaned from your columns have come in mighty handy in that work.

"Before closing I want to recommend a few books. First, the Bluebook, and that goes for every one. For those well advanced, having high school training and perhaps a year or two of college work, I would commend 'Radio Engineering Handbook,' by Henney, published by McGraw-Hill, price about six dollars. I consider this as the best radio handbook extant.

"Second, 'Light and Sound,' by Duncan and Starling, published by the Macmillan Co., of London. Price about three dollars.

"Third, 'Electrical Laboratory Studies,' by Upson. McGraw-Hill, two dollars.

"Fourth, 'Six-Place Tables,' McGraw-Hill. Two dollars. It saves much time in making calculations.

"Warning: These books are highly technical, making frequent use of complicated higher mathematical equations, especially calculus. Nevertheless, I believe the beginner, if he be really interested, will get enough out of them to justify their purchase.

"I shall try to find time to write more frequently in future. I wish to thank you honestly and sincerely for the help you have been to me in the past and to assure you I look forward to a continuance of that same. In closing, I remain a student and admirer of Mr. F. H. Richardson."

I might remark that Dal is not the real name of this friend. He has adopted a nom de plume, as have many others, first to avoid seeming to seek publicity, and second for the reason that those who do not wish themselves to do anything helpful sometimes try to make it unpleasant for others who do. In the older days very many have said: "I'm with you, F. H., but can't write any more as the other men here sneer and make nasty remarks." Later this has been gotten around by doing as Dal has done, first telling me, in confidence, their real name and address and adopting a nom de plume. "Dal" is a working projectionist.

As to the letter I, its use in question 232 was an error. I have discarded its use in the forthcoming sixth edition of the Bluebook and will correct the error in the answers to the question. Several who answered that question I find also offered the same objection, in which both they and yourself were quite right. The use of C for current seemed to simplify matters a bit in the days when projectionists were little more than machine operators; when many of them knew next door to nothing about electrical action, even often having heated arguments as to whether rheostats reduced volts or amperes. Capacitance—well, the term is a new one. Things are, as Dal says, different now and I is unquestionably the correct letter to use. Apologies!

Dal answers question 232 and I hope will find time to send in answers regularly. It is such men as he who, by their excellent answers to questions, make it possible for me to keep the school at a level where it has, as Dal says, very real value.

FLATNESS OF FIELD

With regard to answer to section C of Bluebook School question No. 222, we have the following from an optical man of large ability:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: With reference to your letter regarding test for flatness of field, it is quite true that in discussing certain matters with you recently I made reference to the fact that what is termed 'flatness of field' is sometimes ignored in the discussion of motion picture projection optics, and that much of the lack of sharp definition around the edges of the screen image is chargeable to that error.

"It is well to stress the fact that flatness of field may be tested in very simple fashion, as set forth in your answer to section C, of question No. 222 in the Bluebook School. One only needs to have a large flat white cardboard, or other white paper that can be kept flat, and to hold it against the outer margin of the screen where things are fuzzy, though sharp at the screen's center, moving it slowly toward the projector. Cases will be found where the movement will be four or five feet before the image on the paper will begin to take on some semblance of sharpness. There will be cases where it must be moved even much further before the point of perfect sharpness is arrived at.

"I am of the opinion that errors in field flatness are present in some degree in every projection lens. However, the test suggested will demonstrate the great difference in the work of high-grade projection lenses and those of inferior quality."

May I suggest that here is an interesting experiment any projectionist can make, and it should be made. I believe, however, as per my answer to the Bluebook School question, one man should manipulate the cardboard and another view it from several feet of distance. The cardboard must of course be held flat with the screen surface for best results. Would appreciate reports from those who try this out.

Textile Strike Hurts Theatres

Theatre business in the textile centers, notably Massachusetts and Rhode Island in New England, and North and South Carolina and Georgia in the south, has felt the impress of the drastic mill strike, with all theatres closed indefinitely in certain localities and heavily curtailed box office receipts resulting in numerous others.

Reports indicate attendance decreases amounting to from 10 to 50 per cent in affected areas. In Woonsocket, R. I., authorities last week closed all theatres for an indefinite period, as an emergency measure to prevent public gatherings, thus hoping to forestall rioting. Similar action was taken in certain situations in Georgia and South Carolina.

Curtailed spending on the part of striking workers, in addition to general public caution which has caused numerous people to remain indoors after dark in the strike areas, has contributed materially to the attendance reductions which in some instances reached 50 per cent off normal.

In the Atlanta area smaller cities have suffered, with many theatres operating only one or two days each week.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ending September 15, 1934, from 101 houses in 18 major cities of the country, reached $1,123,096, a decrease of $87,246 from the total of the preceding calendar week, ended September 8, 1934, when 101 houses in 18 cities reported an aggregate gross of $1,210,342.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

Happiness Ahead

(Warner)

Romance

This picture is composed of popular entertainment and showmanship elements. It's a love story, chockful of human interest. The Cinderella theme is novelly reversed; a rich girl falls in love with a regular fellow poor boy. A spirit of gay romantic adventure motivates. Yet supplementing that quality there's plenty of comedy in dialogue and situations. There's action enough to give the show a tinge of realism. Occasionally comes a pulse-quickening thrill. Logical is the touching tinge of contrasting drama, made more potent by smartly controlled suspense. Music, both in song and accompaniment, fulfills a different function than in previous Dick Powell pictures. While it is a feature by itself, its primary purpose is to accentuate the romantic quality of the theme.

In addition to its entertainment quality, it uncovers Dick Powell as a star not entirely dependent upon his singing ability. Also it introduces a new personality, Josephine Hutchinson, not an electric beauty but an actress of ability with the earmarks of potential popularity.

While it covers much that is colorful and interesting, the story is simple and natural. Wealthy Joan finds no interest in the sham and foible of high society. New Year Eve, on an adventurous quest, she lands in a Chinese restaurant. The people there thrill her; she is made one of a party, window-washers and shop girls. Romance comes, quick, clean and appealing, for her and Bob Lane. To shield her identity, she rents a walk-up flat.

All goes well until ambitious Dick, desiring to go into the window-washing game for himself, but not having the necessary dough, sees Joan get the money from her father. Not knowing the relationship, but accepting the check, he thinks he is being two-timed and there is a quick end to the romance, his making a heel of himself being tragedy to the girl. Follows his meeting with the father, mutual understanding and a quick and thrilling resumption of the love match.

There are several song numbers in the picture. The theme song, "Happiness Ahead," novelly introduced in the opening, has appeal. One, repeated several times, "Pop Goes Your Heart," looks to be the premise for the interest-creating campaign. Its adaptation, ingeniously used to convince patrons that they are going to see a charming love story, uniquely embellished with the elements they most appreciate, should go a long way.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by Mervyn LeRoy. Assistant director, G. Hollingshead. Original story by Harry Sauber. Screen play by Harry Sauber and Brian Marlow. Photographed by Tony Gaudio. Music and lyrics by Allie Wrubel and Mort Dixon; Sammy Fain and Irving Kahal; Bert Kalmer and Harry Ruby. Art director, John Hughes. Film editor, William Clemens. Gowns by Orry-Kelly. Vitaphone Orchestra conducted by Leo F. Forbstein. Production Code Certificate No. 185. Running time, 85 minutes. Release date, October 27, 1934.

Charlie Chan in London

(Fox)

Mystery

Once again the clever and highly entertaining Oriental detective from Honolulu, Mr. Charlie Chan, comes to the screen, this time accidentally drawn into a case and completing it in London. The story apparently is not a direct adaptation of one of the Earl Derr Biggers stories, but has been woven about the central character. The result, nevertheless, is a film which carries the same colorful plot structure and offers the same opportunities for performance for Mr. Chan, otherwise known as Warner Oland, as have others.

One aspect of the story opens the way for selling with a catch line slightly different from that used in the usual run of Charlie Chan pictures. Chan, suddenly called into the case by a frantic girl, has but three days in which to uncover the real perpetrator of the murder for which the girl's brother is shortly to be executed. Chan works fast, and of course successfully. The Oland name, in the role in which he is a universal favorite, is the biggest selling asset for the marquee. In support are Drue Leyton, Raymond Milland, Mona Barrie, Alan Mowbray.

Outside of the selling point indicated in the foregoing there is comparatively little opportunity for unusual showmanship. The device of challenging the audience to select the murderer from the numerous suspects should be effective. The exhibitor with past experience in the selling of Chan mysteries will know best the manner of exploitation for his territory.

Chan, called to London to receive the expression of gratitude of the English government for a piece of crime detection, is about to start for home when he is approached by Miss Leyton, whose brother is about to die for a murder of which his sister is convinced he is innocent. The crime was committed at a country estate near London, where a guest, an inventive officer in the flying service, was murdered in the stable. The condemned man was the hunt secretary of the owner of the estate, Mowbray.

The time for the execution is growing near. By a ruse, Chan causes the real murderer to admit his own guilt, that murderer being revealed as Mowbray himself, who is discovered to be the agent of foreign powers. The suspense element is well maintained.

The film is typically of the Charlie Chan mystery material which has proved popular.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Fox Film. Produced by John Stone. Directed by Eugene Forde. Original screen play, Phillip MacDonald. Based on the character "Charlie Chan," created by Earl Derr Biggers. Photographed by L. W. O'Connell. Sound, E. Clayton Ward. Settings, Duncan Cramer. Gowns by Royer. Musical director, Samuel Kaylin. P. C. A. certificate No. 171. Running time, 77 minutes. Release date, September 14, 1934.

Night Alarm

(Majestic-Darmour)

Romantic Drama

There's plenty of potential showmanship in this picture, in the good little picture class. In spots where exhibitors appreciate the business building value of civic contact, it makes possible quite a number of effective tieups with fire departments, newspapers, civic organizations, and local governments. Besides being an exploitation show, it is also entertainment with sufficient romance, drama, comedy, action and the thrill of spectacular fires and fire fighting methods to make it of unusual interest to both adults and children. The fire-prevention campaign which its newspaper man hero advocates being the basis for one kind of contact, the character which it gives its newspaperman should serve in good stead in seeking newspaper support.

In the story, Ashby, sore at his job of Garden Beautiful column editor, finds his only pleasure in chasing the fire wagons. On the carpet before Managing Editor Caldwell for neglect of duty, he talks himself out of his job and a girl, Helen Smith, gets it. He explains to Caldwell his belief that the epidemic of conflagrations is more than a coincidence; that political graft, insurance company cheating and greed are directly responsible. There follows a whole series of exciting dashes, thrilling fires and sensational news stories.

The material of which this picture is constructed, being both showmanship and entertainment intelligently administered so that realism and hokum theatricalism are evenly balanced, makes it easily possible for exhibitors to obtain the suggested contacts. If possible arrange a special showing for fire department officers, newspaper men, city official and civic club members, using the prestige of their opinions as a medium of stirring up more than ordinary public interest.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Dude Ranger

(Fox-Lesser)

Western

In this production the elements that made "westerns" one of the most popular forms of screen entertainment again are adapted. There is merit to the story that combines romance, drama, comedy, action that has only a little of that "shoot-'em-up" quality, suspense, beautiful scenery, vivid dashes of adventure and the eventual triumph of right and justice over misunderstanding.

Its lead personality, George O'Brien, is one of the foremost exponents of virile outdoor entertainment. The supporting cast includes many players who have long been associated with western stories, although the heroine, Irene Hervey, has been seen under the MGM banner in more sophisticated attractions. The fact that the story is by Zane Grey, than whom there is no more popular author of this type material endows it with prestige which enhances cast strength. Big theatre operators, seeking to give patrons diversity in their entertainment programs, and selling it for what it is, may find it a surprisingly novel attraction.

The formula story, given many novel twists, has Selby, wealthy easterner, coming into possession of a ranch. Cattle disappearing mysteriously, and the finances in none too good shape, Selby suspects his manager of being both thief and double-crosser. This situation becomes complicated as Selby falls in love with Ann, Hepburn's daughter. His affection for Ann deterring him from exposing her father, Selby finds himself in complications as the girl learns of his suspicions. Eventually, however, the real truth comes out, Hepburn is exonerated and Ann, understanding, becomes reconciled to the dude ranger.

Clean and wholesome, the picture can be sold with that style of showmanship that establishes it as an all-family attraction; a real treat for the "western" fans and something that can be boasted about as good for the juveniles.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Private Life of Don Juan

(United Artists—London Films)

Romantic Comedy

Showmanship angles abound in this picture. The British studio which made history with "The Private Life of Henry VIII" has gone one better in production and offered a picture which on its pictorial values has appeal. Costuming, like the settings, is on a gorgeous scale; completing an appeal to the eye rare in these talker days, the wearers of the beautiful things are beautifully worthy of them. Director, art director and cameraman have certainly conspired, in "The Private Life of Don Juan," to remind us, and their fellow producers, that a photoplay is still a thing which should be seen with pleasure before it can be heard with appreciation.

Over and above its selling value as a beautiful picture, "Don Juan" offers rather unusual story appeal. It is in essence a satire of the Don Juan legend. The Don himself, middle-aged, inclined to fat and nervous about his reflexes, is a figure to laugh at—and, more important, laughs at himself. The cynical frankness of the dialogue points the appeal to the more discerning public. For the general audience there is the fact that the tongue is not quite too obviously in the cheek to make absurd a conclusion which shows Juan, completely discredited as a great lover, returning to the arms of a phenomenally patient wife. In fact, the picture deftly combines an appeal to the sentimental with its main address to the sophisticated; if the lady patron can't see the joke she probably will love the romance and the spectacle.

It is obvious that the big selling appeal here is to those who are willing to laugh at the conventional Don Juan legend, with the thought that even a Great Lover is dependent on his publicity and that even Juans get fat, tired and unequal to the calls made upon them. If that line is dangerous, there is the glamorous atmosphere created by the magnificent setting of the film, the outstanding quality of the two big scenes—the funeral and the interrupted play—and the promise of a story which shows a human and defeated Juan consoled, like any other film hero, by the one faithful woman.

Fairbanks is admirable; as agile and as virile as ever and humorously conscious of the absurdities of the character. The cast all round is admirable; highlights are the Leporello of Melville Cooper, the Dolores of Benita Hume (Alexander Korda's direction shows the real quality of this frequently mishandled artist), the kitchen maid of Binnie Barnes, who certainly earns her approaching Hollywood stardom, and the beauty of Merle Oberon's dancer. Technically, "The Private Life of Don Juan" is an achievement and the immense scope of the production can be usefully exploited.—Allan, London.

Comedy-Drama

There is considerable light and lively entertainment in this picture, in which a scandal-bespattered girl and a wastrel son of a millionaire meet and work out their own destiny, with the aid of a traveling hot dog stand and a good deal of encouragement from the feminine portion of the unexpected partnership. Broke and on their own, they find their way to happiness on the battered running board of their restaurant, surrounded by hamburgers, and therein is an opportunity for the exhibitor. With the exercise of but little ingenuity, he may stir interest in the film by means of street ballyhoo, utilizing the same type of conveyance pictured in the film.

Numerous catch lines, obvious from even the sketchy indication of the story indicated above, are apparent. The picture has a competent cast, headed by Bruce Cabot and a seeming newcomer, Grace Bradley, who offers a performance which is highly satisfactory. In the support are the familiar names of Regis Toomey and Berton Churchill.

The title in itself possesses a sufficiently intriguing ring to be made a drawing point, and the exhibitor may be reasonably sure that with the combination of title and effective ballyhoo they will not be disappointed. The picture, though not outstanding, has qualities of entertainment and a basically human yarn which should be found attractive.

Miss Bradley, former artists' model, is dragged into notoriety and headlines when she is implicated in the suicide plunge of an employer. Exonerated by the police, she nevertheless finds it impossible to get a job. Cabot is continuously in headlines by reason of drunken brawls until his father, Churchill, informs him that until he proves he is entitled to it, he will not receive another cent.

He accidentally comes upon the down-and-out Miss Bradley and makes an arrangement whereby they are to marry, have Churchill buy her off for a given amount, split the money and get a divorce. Churchill fools them by refusing to be bought, and privately promises Miss Bradley $10,000 and a quick divorce if she makes a man of Cabot. She agrees. Starting off broke, they sleep in his car that night, and trade it next morning for a dilapidated traveling home and hamburger stand. Pawning his wrist watch for supplies, they start, eventually landing in front of a factory.

Cabot is mistaken for a reporting workman and put to work on machines which are causing numerous men to suffer injury. An engineer, he devises a plan for protecting the workmen by a mechanical adjustment in the machine, but cannot get a hearing. With the aid of a friendly newspaper reporter, Miss Bradley is able to get the attention of the owner, and Cabot's design is accepted.

There is no reason why the entire family cannot see the picture.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Monogram. Supervised by Mrs. Dorothy Reid. Directed by Melville Brown. Novel by Vera Brown. Adapted by Betty Burbridge. Additional dialogue by Jesse Lasky, Jr. Cameraman, Ira Morgan. Sound, John A. Stransky, Jr. Running time, 76 mintues. Release date November 1, 1934.

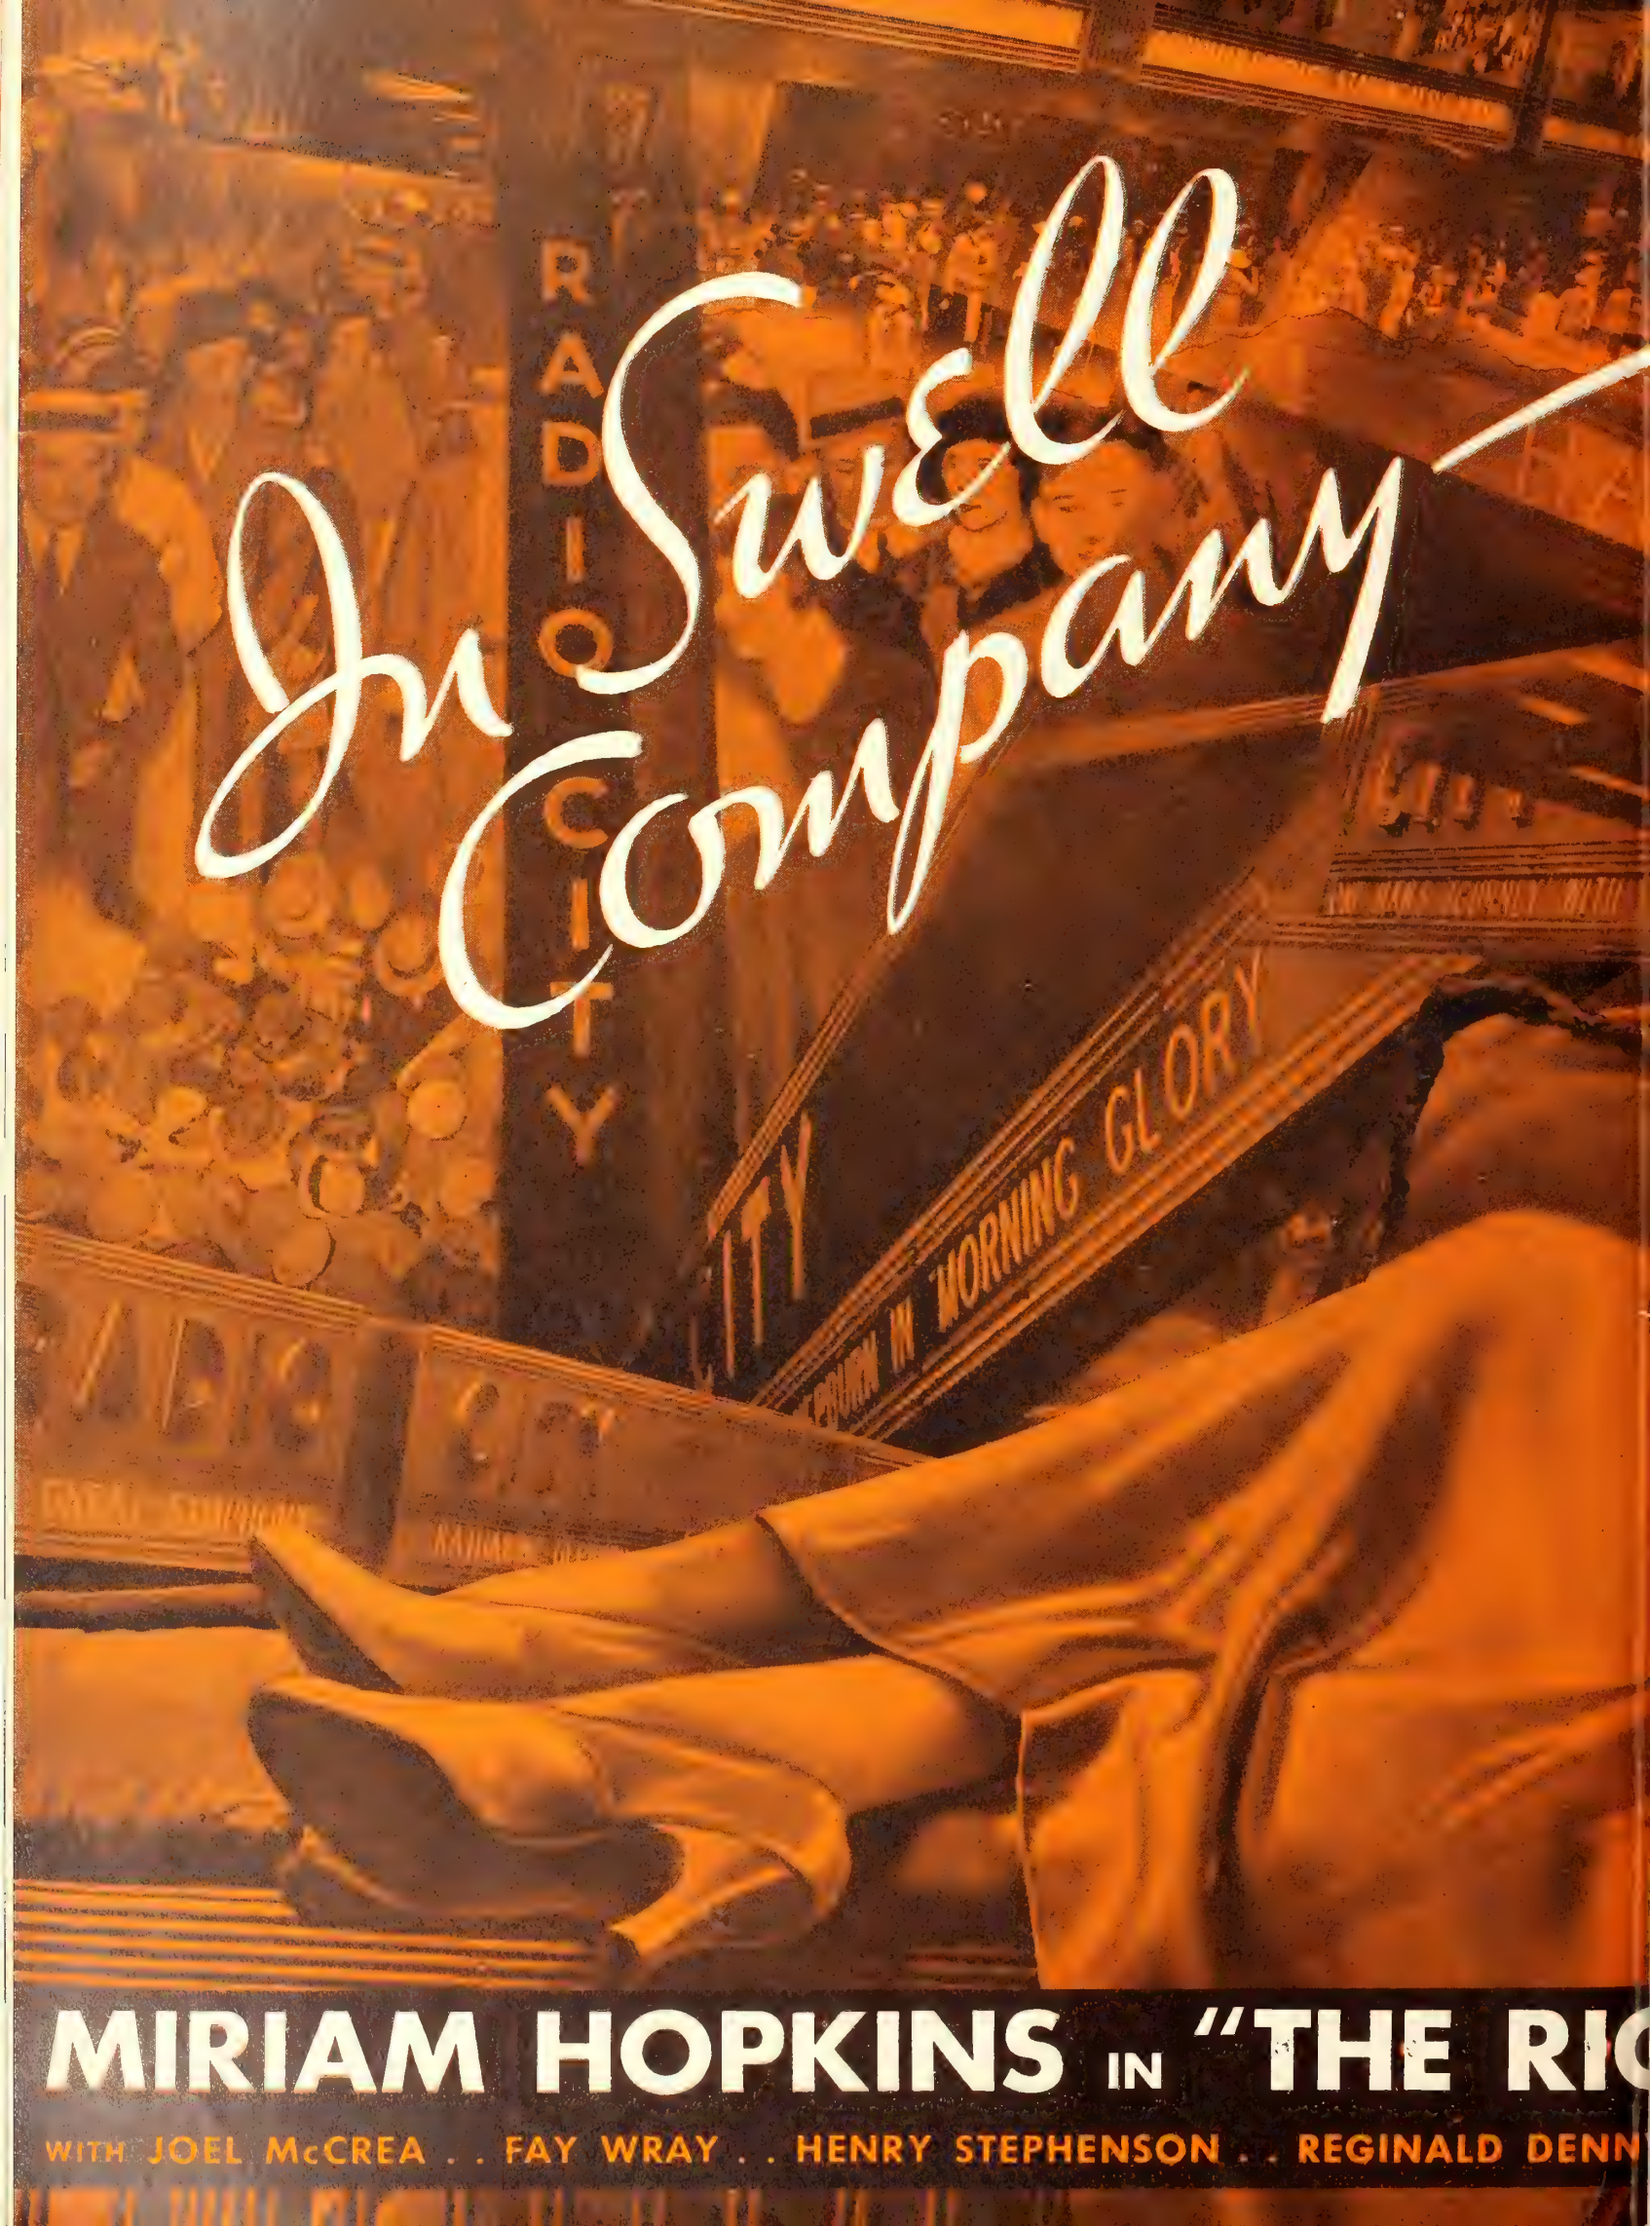
You Belong to Me

(Paramount)

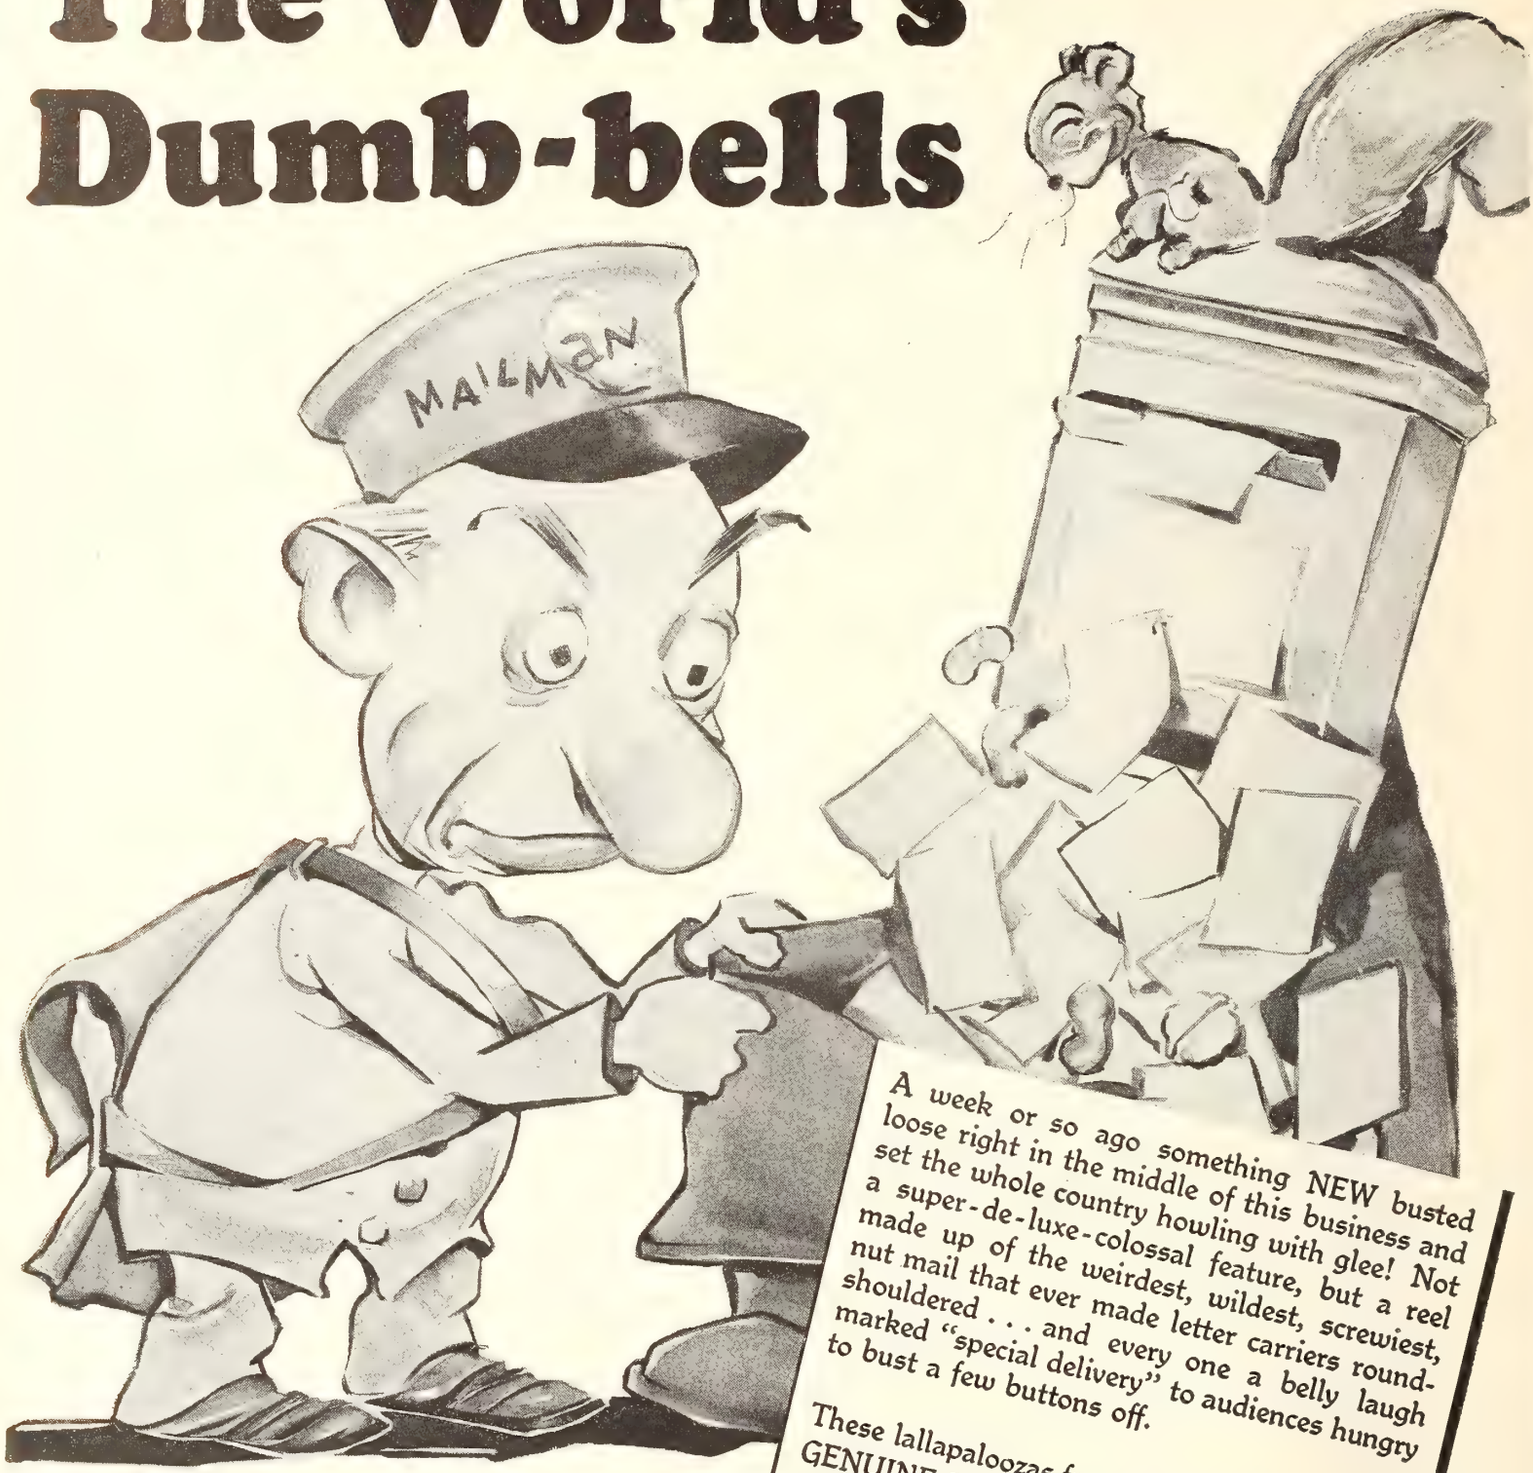
Drama



A highly sympathetic picturization of the drama, and comedy incidentally, that is in the lives of the small-time vaudevillians, with the tears rather taking precedence over the laughs, this film, from an original story for the screen, makes for good entertainment, and has the additional selling quality of being virtually "stolen" by a youngster. In view of the current "Templeonian" wave of patron interest in clever child performers, this point becomes something of an asset in selling the picture.

The pace of the film is swift—and sure. There is considerable of the "old hokum", but it has not been proved yet that the run-of-the-mill, or any other kind of audience, will not go for hokum when it is served up with intelligent direction. The tear-jerking quality of the film makes it especially strong for the feminine element, and the story has sufficient general action and punch for the men.

The fact that a small boy serves to bring together a couple long separated is still good dramatic material, and when the small boy presents a characterization which, except in a few isolated spots, is wholly natural, the theme becomes one calculated to result in audience appreciation.



The youngster is David Jack Holt and it is practically a certainty that the audience will take the young fellow into its collective heart and look for his next appearance. It becomes virtually accurate to record that "in support" of the youngster, although the billing is not that way, are Lee Tracy, as energetically forceful and capable as usual; Helen Mack, fragilely competent; and Helen Morgan, famed blues singer of stage and radio, whose name is are writing the funniest film ever made...

A week or so ago something NEW busted loose right in the middle of this business and set the whole country howling with glee! Not a super-de-luxe-colossal feature, but a reel made up of the weirdest, wildest, screwiest, nut mail that ever made letter carriers round-shouldered . . . and every one a belly laugh marked "special delivery" to audiences hungry to bust a few buttons off.

These lallapaloozas from the morning mail are GENUINE BONAFIDE AUTHENTIC epistles received by business firms and gathered from all over the world by Juliet Lowell (who has hundreds of them).

On the screen they're so funny that audiences yell, scream, shout, go into hysterics and roll in the aisle. (We've a lot of wires and letters from exhibitors to prove it and we'll publish some of 'em in the next ad.)

This series is called "DUMB-BELL LETTERS," produced by Van Beuren Corporation, distributed by RKO-RADIO and if you're no dumb-bell you'll wire—not write—to your nearest RKO exchange about 'em!

known and whose performance is feeling and intelligent.

The only friend that Miss Mack and her theatrically-born and bred son have after the death of her husband, is fellow-trouper Tracy, a comic whose grease paint and putty nose make entertaining contrast with the role of burden-bearer which is his. The boy attempts, with Tracy, to cheer his mother, and it is Tracy's task to tell her the "single" act that she hopes to put on is no good. She meets Arthur Pierson, under his dominance she teams up with him, then marries him, much to the disappointment of David, who has taken an instant dislike to his step-father.

It is Pierson's desire to ship the boy off to school, "out from under his feet", but the boy is supported in his objections by his mother. Eventually, when David tells Tracy the story, Tracy convinces the boy he should try the school, to avoid his mother and Pierson quarreling. At school the youngster is terribly unhappy, finding no companion with whom he can talk show-business, about which his whole life has been wrapped. Pierson is prepared to leave Miss Mack, tells her about it, and she is killed in a fall from a swing during their act. It is up to Tracy to tell the boy, and at school, where Miss Morgan, top spot singer of vaudeville, is to entertain, Tracy and she are reunited as she aids him in his difficulty as messenger, and the two take the boy, with adoption understood, thus partially offsetting the earlier tragic note.

It appears to be a family type film.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Produced by Louis D. Lighton. Directed by Alfred Werker. Screen play by Walter DeLeon. Adaptation by Grover Jones and William Slavens McNutt from an original story by Elizabeth Alexander. Music and lyrics by Sam Coslow. Art direction by Hans Dreier and Robert Usher. Photographed by Leo Tover. P.C.A. Certificate No. 128. Running time, 66 minutes. Release date, September 8, 1934.

Petersburg Nights

(Amkino)

Drama

Heavily dramatic from the viewpoint of the general American audience while at the same time a true study of the Russian dramatic art is Soyusfilm's picturization of Dostoyevski's "Petersburg Nights," the original novel "White Nights." The acting artistry of B. Dobron Ravov as the frustrated musician, is evident throughout, even if the tempo is of the deliberate style of the land in which the action takes place. In the background also is descriptive music, at times almost photographic music, so well does it narrate in tone the development of the story itself.

It is the story of the evolution of the new Russia, this time in terms of liberty of music expression. Ravov, not content with fiddling either for an aristocrat or an actress, turns his eyes toward St. Petersburg. He finds that his friend has stolen one of his themes. He substitutes at a concert and when the poorer people are drawn irresistibly into singing the new composition that tells in notes something of their life, the wealthy patrons walk out. He is called a fanatic, but at the end he wins at least in this one respect that when the laborers are driven out of the factory he finds himself marching ahead of the horde—and they're singing his song.

There is the abundance of impressionism coupled with stark reality that makes Russian art peculiarly its own, and it permeates the entire picture, a production for the specialized audience.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Produced by Soyusfilm, Moscow. Released by Amkino. From Dostoyevski's "White Nights." Directed by Gregory Roshal and V. Stroyeva. Musical composer, D. Kovalesky. Running time, 97 minutes. Release date, September 8, 1934.

The Trail Beyond

(Monogram)

Western

Into this outdoor production of the Far Northwest has been crammed a multiplicity of story development which makes for a swiftly moving succession of action, with John Wayne precipitating it. The name Wayne has come to mean action in Western pictures, and that's the marquee name, but of interest also are the appearances of Noah Beery and Noah Beery, Jr., in the picture. There is also the fact that the film is from James Oliver Curwood's novel, "The Wolf Hunters."

Wayne goes into the North Country to find a girl. He saves Noah Beery, Jr., from a murder frameup on the train. They jump off a bridge and at an abandoned cabin find a map to a gold cache, and skeletons give mute testimony to the manner of death of the father of the missing girl. At Wabinosh House, Hudson's Bay trading post, they meet Verna Hillie whom Junior Beery loves. Renegades try to steal the map, capture and impersonate a Mounty and so trap Wayne and the younger Beery, but they escape. The elder Beery is keeper of the store, which is attacked by the renegades. Wayne is deputized by the wounded Mounty to call help from post of the Mounted Police. It has developed that Miss Hillie is the missing girl, and Beery Junior realizes that she's in love with Wayne.

There is much for youngsters in the production and for oldsters as well who like their outdoor pictures. It's decidedly weekend material.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Produced and distributed by Monogram. Produced by Paul Malvern. Directed by R. N. Bradbury. Adapted from the James Oliver Curwood novel, "The Wolf Hunters," by Lindsley Parsons. Running time, 55 mintues. Released October 22, 1934.

Unusual Excellence

Designed to offer a few minutes of relaxation in the ordinary theatre program, this "Musical Moods" series presents to the exhibitor an opportunity for a presentation which should bring an immediate and strikingly favorable response from the audience. They are, in effect, pictorial accompaniments to famous musical compositions. In this number, part of a new series employing three-color Technicolor out of doors for the first time, the appropriate visual material far and away surpasses anything yet attempted in color photography, and is the work of Robert Bruce. This subject, and the series as a whole, is more than worth the closest attention on the part of the exhibitor. Audio Productions is the producer, First Division Exchanges the distributor.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Mexican Idyl

(Audio Prod. - First Division)

Superior

Utilizing a typical musical composition of the Mexican countryside, this subject in the "Musical Moods" series offers scenic effects in three-color Technicolor in which the producer, Robert Bruce, has attained a pictorial beauty in natural color which should cause any audience, no matter what its type, to catch its breath, and indicate its appreciation. A sheepherder leaves his home in the morning, tends his flock, returns as the sun sets over the hills. As a presentation of quality, and distinction, the subject offers an exhibitor opportunity.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Ye Happy Pilgrims

Excellent

There's fun, heaps of it, in this Oswald cartoon travesty on the courtship of Miles Standish, and the most adroit turn of the comedy is the occasional appearance of the town crier with his droll mouthing of "Three o'clock and all's well," even down to the moment when the snowstorm buries all of him except one waving hand. The farcical turn starts when the Indians greet the landing Pilgrims with Hot Dog stands and real estate sharpers. It continues with a mechanical hippopotamus mixing cement in his innards and baby kangaroos emerging from the pouch carrying it up to the top of the house in hods. Oswald as John Alden takes Standish's love plea to Priscilla (it was spelled "Pricilla" in the title) and when she invites him to stay, Miles calls in the Indians. But the food gets them and they get the food and all's still well.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Mountain Melody

Tuneful

There is melody and a bit of comedy in this number of the Song Hit series, which features Frank Luther and the currently rather popular hill-billy string and vocal music. A southern feud and a hill-billy singing contest to select a group for radio broadcasting opens the subject, with the closing sequences finding the chosen melody-makers in action over the radio. The number is entertaining.—Running time, 10 minutes.

World's Fair and Warmer

(Universal)

For Showmen

Showmanship is evident in this short feature that provides a complete panorama of the World's Fair as background, a romance with thrills in the foreground. Exhibitors, by playing up the interesting and eye-compelling features of Chicago's big show, have also the Thalians to exploit as Hollywood's younger set of actors, besides a story that provides action and comedy as it winds its way in and out of the Fair's high spots. Arthur Lake, John Harron, Helen Mann and George Lewis are the youth appeal. Jack Townley, producer of the first Thalian series, also produced this as the first of his new six.—Running time, 22 minutes.—G. M.

She's My Lilly (I'm Her Willie)

Entertaining

The lively and energetic Will Mahoney imparts considerable entertainment to this musical number with his singing of the title song and his own peculiar style of dancing. Off aboard ship for a vacation, he unwittingly takes the assumed name of a fugitive from justice, and when he is apprehended by the captain is forced to prove he is Will Mahoney. Five colored youngsters supply harmony and Mahoney does the rest. The subject is entertaining.—Running time, 22 minutes.

Columbia

BRIEF MOMENT: Carole Lombard, Gene Raymond, Monroe Owsley, Donald Cook—Traded a weak one for this old one and proved I was right in doing so. This proved to be a good show as well as a money picture. Running time, 69 minutes.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

CRIME OF HELEN STANLEY, THE: Ralph Bellamy—A fairly good murder mystery picture that pleased. Title very misleading. Average business on bargain nights. Nothing to shout about. Running time, 56 minutes. Played Aug. 28-29.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

FOG: Mary Brian, Donald Cook—This has been made into a mystery drama in a capable manner. Having read the story in the Saturday Evening Post, it seemed to me that they made a pretty good job of it. Should please mystery loving fans. A fair average drawing card.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HELL BENT FOR LOVE: Tim McCoy—Better than average McCoy picture. OK for action dates. Played Sept. 4-5.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HELL BENT FOR LOVE: Tim McCoy—McCoy pictures always OK. It will draw the thrill hunters, and surely satisfy them; if your fans like action give them this one. Two days good business. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Sept. 5-6.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—This is a wonderful picture. More comments on this than anything run in the last two years. Don't fail to run it, if you want to please your patrons 100 per cent.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

NO GREATER GLORY: Frankie Darro—This is the worst one from Columbia this year for us. They rate it a special but it's on our books as the lowest gross in several months. Played Aug. 28-29.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—Not a bad little show, if your patrons like pictures with a hospital setting. It seemed to please our women patrons. Played Sept. 8.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SISTERS UNDER THE SKIN: Elissa Landi—A good picture of its kind, where age wants to mate with youth. Nicely photographed with good production values. A good moral is held out but then it is mighty convenient to have the faithful wife waiting for the erring husband. A good woman's picture. A fair average drawing card.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TWENTIETH CENTURY: John Barrymore—One of the worst pictures I have ever seen. I can't see how Columbia can compare this one with "It Happened One Night" or call it a special. From the beginning to the end, it is nothing but talk, talk, talk, and the story is exceptionally weak. A picture like this can only draw and satisfy flies. Business exactly as the show itself, terrible. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Sept. 4-5.—W. Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

UNKNOWN VALLEY: Buck Jones—Buck Jones' pictures are always good. This one is no exception. —M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

VOICE IN THE NIGHT: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—Somewhat better than the usual Tim McCoy picture, plenty of action and some very good photography. Running time, 59 minutes.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

First National

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—A circus and a picture show in one, and it is great. I consider this Joe's best picture and it went over the best of any show for a long time. The circus acts are all good and every one from Joe to Leo gives an excellent performance. This is the kind of picture the small towns need. Pleased everyone from six to sixty. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Aug. 25-26.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kans. Small town patronage.

FOG OVER FRISCO: Bette Davis, Donald Woods —A very acceptable program picture that did less than average business even for the summer. I believe this was caused chiefly by lack of star names. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 30-31.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

MERRY FRINKS, THE: Aline MacMahon—Well, if they call this comedy, this drought stricken country will turn into a frozen north. Many of the customers asked me where in the world did I get such a thing as that. If you can skip it do so. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Aug. 30-31.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

REGISTERED NURSE: Bebe Daniels, Lyle Talbot —Miss Daniels better in this than anything she's done lately. All in all it's a good program picture. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Aug. 7-8.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

RETURN OF THE TERROR: Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor—This is a good picture of the mystery thriller type and pleased our Saturday patrons. It is fast moving and full of action, thrills, and the comedy is supplied by Frank McHugh. It will make a good Saturday picture in the small towns and will please the entire family. The trailer sold this for us and we played one day to above average business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Sept. 1.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SIDE STREETS: Aline MacMahon, Paul Kelly—This is only a fair picture and is strictly adult fare. It seems that producers cannot get away from the "going to have a baby" stories. The industry would be much better off without so many of these pictures. Miss MacMahon turns in some good acting, as do the rest of the cast, but the theme is not suitable for children. Played one day to average business. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Sept. 5.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers—Here's a swell picture and has plenty of audience appeal. A lot of pleasing situations, and they'll tell you it's good as they go out. Step on it if you have not played it. Or if you have, it will repeat. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Aug. 26-27.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown, Alice White—Can't see anything honorable about selling this to any exhibitor, as it is the poorest thing Joe Brown has ever done. He'll have to do something else besides open the big mouth to amuse the cash customers the next time, as they certainly panned him in this one. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Aug. 16-17.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

Fox

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Claire Trevor, Ray Walker—This is without a doubt the finest picture I have ever given my patrons. Shirley Temple is great and so was my business. Fox sure has a find in Shirley. My patrons cannot wait until the next one is released. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Sept. 2-3-4.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. General patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple—I personally am so hypnotized by Shirley that I can at last understand why children are kidnaped. This picture is a solid gold mine and a natural. The producers think that Shirley should be associated with crime and criminals as much as possible. We must have plenty of gangsters or bust. What in blazes ails Hollywood anyway; are they halfwits. The kid gets the business in spite of them not because of them and because she is unlike them.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

BABY TAKE A BOW: Shirley Temple—Played rather old but a pleasing picture. Fine acting. Good, clean picture. Very good box office attraction. Played Sept. 6-7.—A. Gasaway, Strand Theatre, Tuscola, Ill. Small town patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: Spencer Tracy, Pat Paterson—Very good. But no business.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: Spencer Tracy, John Boles, Pat Paterson, Thelma Todd, Herbert Mundin—A very good musical which seemed to please very well, but it is not anything unusual, nor what Fox advertised it to be, but as a program picture it is much better than the rest of their program line for this season. A good cast. Running time, 85 minutes.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: Spencer Tracy, John Boles, Pat Paterson, Thelma Todd, Herbert Mundin—Well received and drew better than expected. Good story, lots of comedy. Running time, 85 minutes.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd—Nothing so big about this picture but the price. Played Sunday-Monday, Sept. 2-3. Rained both day and night. Poor business. I don't think this picture measures up to his former ones. Running time, 100 minutes. —A. Gasaway, Strand Theatre, Tuscola, Ill. Small town patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd—The worst picture this star has ever made. Personally did not care for it at all and do not think anyone else did. No comments either way. Played Aug. 26-27.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell, Ginger Rogers, James Dunn—Played this one three days, opening on Sunday, and wasn't disappointed. Did better than I did with "Carolina." I can always figure on Gaynor to brace up a bad week. Very well satisfied. Running time, 76 minutes.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. General patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—This seemed to please the majority. Too bad they did not give Shirley Temple more of a part and the picture would have had a trifle more pull at the box office.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—This is a very good little picture that will please your patrons. This lovable team has lost the popularity that it once enjoyed here, but just the same we played two days to average business. It is a drama with comedy and romance and has an excellent supporting cast. Personally I think the story entirely too slow moving. Business average two days. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Aug. 30-31.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—The old Gaynor-Farrell spirit was not behind this picture and again teamed together is not the wow one would expect. Ginger Rogers is also a disappointment in the picture. Many said Gaynor is better with some one else. Story weak and am afraid this will not help "Servants' Entrance." Running time, 74 minutes. Played September 2-3.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers, Evelyn Venable—Just finished playing a repeat engagement on "Harum" and did myself some good. Broke records on the first engagement. Running time, 83 minutes.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, New York. General patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—This picture is positively one of the best and cleanest pictures made, and should top any previous Rogers pictures, yet it did not get quite half the business "Mr. Skitch" did; in fact, this one and "State Fair" got less than any Rogers pictures I've played. I can't in any way figure this out as Rogers always gets money for me, and that the two greatest money pictures for other exhibitors fall so flat for me is just one of those things I can't get straight.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

EVER SINCE EVE: George O'Brien—Our patrons

like O'Brien better in westerns. But nevertheless this was a very good comedy drama and I believe that every one enjoyed it.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS: Rudy Vallee, Alice Faye—This is one of the best musicals of the season, if it were not for some scenes and dialogue that was so dirty. It did as much business as "David Harum."—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

GRAND CANARY: Warner Baxter, Madge Evans—Terrible press sheet mats confined to clutches devoid of originality and without sense enough to embody striking or dramatic scenes that could have been gotten from stills. The clutch is the hall mark of the incompetent press agent. Why don't producers discover America. Who in blazes knows what Grand Canary means except the intelligentsia and other flowers. Shoved it by.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers—Another good one from Rogers, that pleased all. Some patrons said it was his best. Played September 6-7.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HEART SONG: Lilian Harvey—Another foreign picture. Need more be said? You may get them in with the name of "Lilian Harvey," but if they don't fall asleep, they'll surely walk out before the last reel. There's one born every minute, but don't be the next one to be caught with this feature. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Sept. 5.—W. Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

MURDER IN TRINIDAD: Heather Angel, Victor Jory, Nigel Bruce—A very good murder mystery story with the mystery saved until the end. There is nothing new in the story, but is a bit better than the usual run. Running time, 74 minutes.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

NOW I'LL TELL: Spencer Tracy, Alice Faye—Fair picture. Story of a gambler in the Nineties who tried to change to modern racketeering and was bumped off. My audiences don't care for this type and let me know it at the box-office. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Aug. 19-20.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—Excellent. Nothing more to be said.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Alice Faye, Lew Ayres—Good light entertainment that pleased. Mitchell and Durant also added some laughs. You don't have to be a musician to fall for this Alice Faye. Played September 2-3.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—Very good comedy that drew some extra on our family night show. Played Aug. 21-22.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo.

SHE WAS A LADY: Helen Twelvetrees—A very good program, not a special, but just a good program picture that will please. Played August 19-20.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

STAND UP AND CHEER: All star—Far from being the special that the producers would lead you to believe.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

WILD GOLD: John Boles, Claire Trevor—A good little program picture. John Boles good and Claire Trevor very pleasing to the eye. I think she is very pretty and a good little actress. Played August 18.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

MGM

BOMBSHELL: Lee Tracy, Jean Harlow—Fine picture. Pleased my patrons.—Sammie Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

HIDEOUT: Robert Montgomery—Here is one that I advise all exhibitors to play, one of the best I have ever seen. It is a pleasure to run pictures like this. Every one enjoyed this picture and told me so. Played September 6-7.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: All star musical—This is a very good picture that failed to do business in our town. It is a comedy with music and plenty of beautiful girls. Laurel & Hardy and Mickey Mouse attracted more attention than the rest of the entire cast, but they all were great and this one day to only fair business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 6.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: Jimmy Durante—Not much of a story, but some very good music, the number by Eddie Quillan and June Clyde very good. Jimmy Durante is not liked here and nowhere else, I should think. Played August 12-13.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: Laurel and Hardy, Jimmy Durante, Charles Butterworth, Polly Moran, Lupe Velez, Frances Williams, Jack Pearl, Eddie Quillan, June Clyde, Ted Healy and His Stooges, Mickey Mouse—A big cast of players, but don't let that fool you. It is only a fair show with Jimmy Durante screeching and yelling through the whole show. Drew fair. Running time, 70 minutes.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, William Powell—Fortunate enough not to run this until after Dillinger made it famous by not having sense enough to stay home. It is a good picture, too, on its own. Dillinger, like Jesse James, is such a national figure that discreet reference to the fact that he died to see this is not inadmissible for exhibitors who ordinarily scruple to refer to the dead, but be decent and discreet. Dillinger showed by his attendance on this that publicity powerfully motivates headline criminals and that exhibitionism is not recessive as in a showman who wishes to collect from his friends for the entertainment if they laugh at his jokes, but positive or, as the biologists say, dominant to stop Dillingers they should be described for what they are, villainous vermin.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy—Holds the interest from the General Slocum disaster to the end. Not a single complaint about this one. Gable, Powell and Myrna Loy all give an excellent performance. One of the best. Congratulations, Leo. Running time, 95 minutes. Played Sept. 1-2.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, William Powell—A fine story very well acted makes this one a wonderful show. You won't have to be afraid of this one if you plug up the Dillinger angle which is responsible for its drawing power. If you take this tip, have your S. R. O. signs ready. Business very good. Running time, 93 minutes. Played Aug. 21-22.—W. Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

MEN IN WHITE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Jean Hersholt, Elizabeth Allan, Otto Kruger—A far better than average show that got a fair crowd. Running time, 75 minutes.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Ruggles, Una Merkel—Here is a knockout in any language, that has failed to get a break. I take my hat off to the studio for turning out such a honey of an action picture, and I put it back on my head with great speed and decision when I come to the fellow that named it. This is a wow and should get extra time and heavy billing, but cover up the name. Bill it as a picture of ten thousands laughs and five thousand thrills, that will give the title a new slant and make it collect. It did for me.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Ruggles, Una Merkel—Very good picture. Ruggles takes the show. A good small town picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Saturday, September 1.—A. Gasaway, Strand Theatre, Tuscola, Ill. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Ruggles, Una Merkel—Here's one of those things they make and deliver to you to fulfill your commitment under contract, and is very poor program picture. Just a lot of hooey that you would have been better off without. Running time, 64 minutes. Played August 19-20.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Ruggles—If your patrons like thrills and plenty of excitement, do not fail to play this one. We ran it for a midnight show, and it had every one breathless. A swell show. Play it. Lots of comedy furnished by Ruggles and Una Merkel. Played September 1.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

OPERATOR THIRTEEN: Marion Davies—Excellent picture that pleased 100 per cent. Some nice song numbers and a good performance by Davies. Gary Cooper's performance not so hot. A cigar store Indian would have been just as good. Business better than average. Running time, 84 minutes. Played Aug. 25.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

OPERATOR THIRTEEN: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper—In my opinion this is one of the best pictures I ever exhibited and helped me to forgive Leo for such lemons as "Queen Christina" and "Laughing Boy." Excellent acting, good music, beautiful photography and good recording. Clean, entertaining and pleased every one. Running time, 86 minutes. Played Aug. 29.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

OPERATOR THIRTEEN: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper—A dandy picture and one that is good any date and is a picture for the masses. Large and small town alike. Step on this one; you can't go wrong. Running time, 82 minutes. Played August 9-10.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

OPERATOR THIRTEEN: Marion Davies—A wonderful picture, Marion Davies very good, the Mills Brothers singing "Sleepy Head" was grand. They sing several numbers that are very pretty. Played August 14-15.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

OPERATOR 13: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper, Jean Parker, Ted Healy—I don't know whether or not this picture drew turn away business for two days, or the Clyde Barrow-Bonnie Parker two-reeler, but I got more money these two days than I have in any two days in months and months. This is an extra good show and pleased, although some said it did not follow the story. Running time, 86 minutes.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

RIPTIDE: Norma Shearer, Robert Montgomery—My personal and patrons' opinion is as follows: This is positively the silliest picture ever flashed on a screen; 10 long reels of ridiculous antics by Shearer and Montgomery that MGM charged me a heavy tax for and mailed me a designation of special with a percentage and all the usual "fix-ons." People walked out about as fast as they walked in. I've been in Cotter a little over three years and have only had two pictures they walked out on in any quantities, but they flocked out on this one. Yes, MGM has made some good pictures this year, but they have made four or five clucks for all the good ones and many a so-called special caused me to lose the tail of my shirt.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SADIE McKEE: Joan Crawford—One of the finest pictures I have seen for quite some time. Edward Arnold stole the entire picture with his marvelous acting as a drunkard. There are many humorous parts throughout this feature and Gene Austin certainly does his part to help put it over. Sure to satisfy all. Business good. Running time, 93 minutes. Played Aug. 31-Sept. 1.—W. Horace Reese, Spruce Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

STAMBOUL QUEST: Myrna Loy—Not one person in 50 knows what Stamboul means or gives a darn if you tell them. Not one person in two (believe it or not) knows what Quest means. The press book on this is a big elaborate and very expensive screen or mask to the fact that the press department is unable to offer a single mat worth printing. The producers should rediscover this United States with its one hundred thirty millions who are not reading decadent novelists. Shoved it by.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

STAMBOUL QUEST: Myrna Loy, George Brent—This is just a program picture. Myrna Loy was miscast in it; however, came through with her part and made it a fair picture. Don't understand why a star with her personality should be cast in a story like this, when any one could have done it. Running time, 88 minutes. Played August 12-13.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY: Franchot Tone, Karen Morley—Another good one from Metro. I find that most Metro pictures are good. No extra business with this one, owing to my playing it so new, no one had heard very much about it. All pleased who saw it. Played September 4-5.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan, Neil Hamilton—Only Metro could make a picture like this. Action galore, and it drew over an average business to satisfied customers. This should have done a very big business, but the reason it did not is because Metro slipped up and let another producer use the title "Tarzan the Fearless," which turned out to be terrible, and that killed a lot of "Tarzan" business for me. Running time, 116 minutes. Played August 17-18.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnny Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan—About as thrilling a picture as has ever been unreeled on a screen. You will wonder how they put some of the thrills into the picture. Maybe they are tired of Tarzan pictures, but at this theatre Tarzan drew some extra kids and just about a bare average of adults. You can go the limit in your promises. If you get them in, it will please and they ought to talk about it.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Maureen O'Sullivan, Nat Pendleton—Another dandy. One of the cleverest we have had in some time. This Loy is sure coming fast and will be right up there with another one of this caliber. Nice work, Metro. Running time, 91 minutes.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. General patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Metro hands you dough with this one and if you don't get plenty it's your fault, not Metro's, as the dough is there and the goods, too. They will talk of it two weeks after you show it. Don't make an error on this as you will get no better box office stuff this year. Go out and get your share.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—A wonderful picture with plenty of comedy and mystery. William Powell very clever and Myrna Loy very good and attractive. Every one enjoyed this show. Played August 23-24.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—This is not as good a box office as Beery usually draws. A good picture of its kind. Played September 9-10.—A. Gasaway, Strand Theatre, Tuscola, Ill. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Wonderfully produced picture that appeals more to children than adults. One should tie up with schools—if your county has enough money to have schools. Played Aug. 30-31.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—This is a wonderful picture with fine acting by each star, no extra business, but most every one pleased who saw it. Played a little too soon after release to do very good. Played September 2-3.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

Monogram

HAPPY LANDING: Ray Walker, Jacqueline Wells—This is a fairly good program picture that will please the average picture fan. It is a drama of the border patrol fliers, with plenty of action and the necessary touch of comedy and romance. It is good entertainment for the whole family and we played on family day to a good business. Running time, 63 minutes. Played August 29.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LOUDSPEAKER, THE: Ray Walker—Played on Bargain Nights to below average business. Walker still means nothing in this town. Very poor recording. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Aug. 21-22.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

MANHATTAN LOVE SONG: Robert Armstrong, Dixie Lee—This is a weak program picture in my estimation. I noticed that one exhibitor gave this a very nice writeup. I'm sorry I can't do the same, but it just didn't please my patrons and I thought that it was only fair entertainment.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

STAR PACKER, THE: John Wayne—A fair western, plenty of gun fight, but not much fist fight and that's what my Saturday crowd want. However, this picture will please most western fans. Running time, 50 minutes. Played September 7-8.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

COME ON MARINES: Richard Arlen—Played this with the "Dillinger Pictures" to S. R. O. business. Our patrons enjoyed it. Running time, 7 reels.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

KISS AND MAKE UP: Cary Grant, Genevieve Tobin—Very poor. Weak story. Nothing to it. Poorest box-office of the year. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 24-25.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

KISS AND MAKE UP: Cary Grant, Genevieve Tobin—An excellent program picture with a title that provided tieups that help put it over. Nothing outstanding, but pleasing entertainment. Average Sunday-Monday business for the summer. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 26-27.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Guy Lombardo, Burns and Allen—Very well received, although some said a little of Gracie Allen's antics goes a long way, but it was a good show, anyway. Business fair. Running time, 60 minutes.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MELODY IN SPRING: Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland, Lanny Ross, Ann Sothern—Lanny Ross can sing, but he certainly can't act. Charley Ruggles stole the show—he was killing as the girl's father. Ann Sothern is one of the screen's prettiest girls and acted her part to perfection. She is bound to be a comer. Running time, 76 minutes.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG: Gertrude Michael—This was a surprise. Picture well done and showed up well at the box-office. Seemed to please all. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Aug. 22.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG: Gertrude Michael—A good program picture that pleased 90 per cent. Business about summer average. Lack of names to play up kept this one from doing any exceptional business. If they come in, they'll like it. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Aug. 23-24.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG: Gertrude Michael—Had a tip on this one and played it on one day, Saturday, and then they went out holding and thumbing their noses at me, and I don't blame them. Running time, 64 minutes. Played August 25.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—A good comedy that failed to do business. Personally, I think one of Field's best. However, my customers did not think so. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Aug. 26-27.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie, Ben Bernie—This is a good picture that has everything the public could want and should be a box-office hit. It is a romantic comedy that should please everybody. Ben Bernie and his orchestra furnish the music and beautiful Dorothy Dell singing. It is good entertainment for the entire family and sure to please. The supporting cast offers some excellent star names. Business good. Running time, 81 minutes. Played midnight, Sept. 1.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SHOOT THE WORKS: Jack Oakie, Ben Bernie, Dorothy Dell, Arline Judge—Played it late, and a number of my customers were waiting for it, but were disappointed, and the second day was pitiful at the box office. Oakie overplayed and Bernie stole the picture, but had nothing to write home about after doing it. Running time, 81 minutes. Played August 14-15.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING: Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard, Ethel Merman, Leon Errol—This is a very pleasing, entertaining musical and makes a lot of new friends for radio's favorite. Running time, 74 minutes.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING—Bing Crosby—This one should get by in anybody's theatre. Played August 24.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields—Here is one funny picture that we could not sell our folks, but believe his pictures draw more each time we play one. Played Sept. 2-3.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

RKO

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler & Woolsey—One of the best comedy teams of the screen gone hay-wire again. The producers have killed this team by giving them poor material. This one is terrible. Some of our regulars walked out before it was over.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler & Woolsey—This picture is not as good as "Hips Hips Hooray," but it seemed to be liked. No one passed judgment; they just seemed to enjoy it. Played August 21-22.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Ruth Etting, Thelma Todd, Dorothy Lee—Here is the best from this pair yet and that is the opinion of my patrons. Got a little money at the B. O. Running time, 68 minutes.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

LET'S TRY AGAIN: Diana Wynyard, Clive Brooks—When RKO reviewed this picture "Let's Try Again," they should have done just that. They couldn't have made it any worse. This picture is just a waste of time from start to finish. Wait! There is one thing: if your ushers want a few days off, book this because I don't think you will need them during the engagement. Poor business two days. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 3-4.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS, THE: Ann Harding, John Boles—An excellent attraction. A great show for the women. Business above average. Running time, 9 reels. Played September 9.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS, THE: Ann Harding—At last a picture from RKO's list pleased the ladies 100 per cent and half the men. If it did nothing else, it brought Wesley Barry back to the screen. Wish some smart producer would make with him some down-to-earth stories. Played Aug. 19-20.—A. J. Simmons, Plaza Theatre, Lamar, Mo. General patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot—Just barely gets by as a program picture. Might be okay on a double bill. Poorest business on this of any weekend for six months. Played Aug. 1.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MURDER ON THE BLACKBOARD: James Gleason, Edna May Oliver—Personally, I do not consider a murder an appropriate theme for a comedy, but this seemed to please my Family Night patrons and that is all I ask. Edna May Oliver is a scream and Gleason gives a good performance. Laughs from start to finish and that is what they want now. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Aug. 22-23.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SON OF KONG: Robert Armstrong—Children under 10 enjoyed this, but not for adult audience. Poor business.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SPITFIRE: Katharine Hepburn—This one turned in a fair gross for three days, but we would not call it a wonderful picture. They came to see it here because we had run Hepburn's "Little Women." Played Sept. 1-2-3.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

United Artists

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN: Lee Tracy—Lee Tracy is well liked in our town. We had several comments from pleased patrons. Played Aug. 30-31.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

BLOOD MONEY: George Bancroft—Used this one on Family Night. Business only fair. Had no comments, favorable or unfavorable. Personally I did not think much of the picture. Nothing much to rave over.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—People that saw this picture seemed to enjoy it, but it did not have any pull at the box office. Just made running expenses.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY THRU A KEYHOLE: Russ Columbo, Constance Cummings—This is a very good picture that pleased all who saw it. However, it has no drawing power in our town in spite of the splendid cast of stars. Columbo sang a few selections and the music is furnished by Abe Lyman and his band, with a few novelties. Personally I thought this a good picture and expected a good business, but we lost money playing this two days. Running time, 85 minutes. Played August 27-28.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CATHERINE THE GREAT: Elizabeth Bergner, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—What a beating I took on this one! Didn't do half my regular business. My people cannot use these kind, and in the future will pay and not play. Took plenty of abuse for the recording. They didn't seem to understand it. Running time, 93 minutes.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. General patronage.

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD: George Arliss—I had more favorable comments on this picture than any we have had in some time. Every one raved over it, many came back second night. Plenty of Jews in our town, but every one praised the picture. Played August 28-29.—Alice Simmons, Lyric Theatre, Jefferson, Texas. General patronage.

MASQUERADER, THE: Ronald Colman, Elissa Landi—Here's as fine a story and acting as any one could ask for. Did about twice as much at the box office as expected. Part of the recording was very bad, but still it was a good show. Running time, 75 minutes.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

PALOOKA: Jimmy Durante—To my astonishment I put this over. Was so afraid of the title I began to jabber about the peerless Palooka a week in advance and perhaps out of curiosity they came out. The picture is okay.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SECRETS: Mary Pickford, Leslie Howard—You certainly could tell that some money was put into this picture. It certainly was beautiful in places. Business was a little better than average. Believe that with some extra advertising the results would have been very good.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

Universal

CROSS COUNTRY CRUISE: June Knight, Lew Ayres—A swell little picture that was well liked. Played it on bargain night to above average business.—Bob Schwall, Jr., State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

GLAMOUR: Constance Cummings, Paul Lukas—Failed to go over and they didn't like it and said so. —Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy—A very good picture with Lee Tracy at his best. Business very poor. Tracy certainly does not mean much at the box-office here.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD: Lee Tracy—A fast-moving, interest-holding drama. Lee Tracy does not talk so fast, which is an improvement. No special drawing power.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW? Margaret Sullavan—A fine picture that they gagged on as they thought it too heavy. Business not what it should have been at box office. In a depression, why add depression? I pause for the answer. Apropos of nothing, why in hell (or blazes, if you are still an old maid) can't we have more American pictures and less British illustrated and posed conversation.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW?: Margaret Sullavan, Douglass Montgomery—This is a very good picture, but failed to click here. It is a romantic drama of the life of a young couple and is full of heart interest. Personally I was disappointed in the picture, but it pleased my patrons and that is all I care about. We are in business to please our patrons and that is all I expect of any picture. Played two days in only fair business. Running time, 98 minutes. Played September 3-4.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—Just the kind of a picture that our Bargain Night customers go for in a big way. Most every one likes Ken Maynard.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—Here's a dandy western picture with a good story and Ken at his best. It'll make the old-timers come out bragging and they are seldom pleased nowadays with their Saturday's filmfare. Running time, 61 minutes. Played August 18.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

Warner

AS THE EARTH TURNS: Jean Muir—A very fine picture and a credit to any company. It is a flop if you use the press sheet which is evidently the product of a typical New Yorker. The mats are quite worthless and meaningless. The press matter is terrible. I used the mats out of the page mat for Sunday insert showing farmers and farmers. Talked about Seth Parker's country, new mown hay, the good brown earth, and people in the grip of fate. Of yearnings and character, etc., etc. It cleaned up.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

AS THE EARTH TURNS: Jean Muir, Donald Woods—A well-produced and very interesting picture of farm life. Jean Muir is very attractive and is rising rapidly. As to my own personal opinion, Dorothy Appleby was disgusting in the role she portrayed. Running time, 72 minutes.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

AS THE EARTH TURNS: Jean Muir, Donald Woods—Ran this picture on Bank Night and had a capacity business. Lots of yawning and expressions of it being too long and but few favorable comments. Would class it a program picture and fair. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 28-29.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charles Ruggles, Ann Dvorak—Pretty good comedy with the usual and inevitable gunmen and crooks interjected without which Hollywood calls no picture a picture. If there is no gunman in a story Hollywood puts the gunmen in. America may be fed up with gunmen, but Hollywood loves them to death.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charles Ruggles—A very good picture comedy and good week day. Played September 11-12.—A. Gasaway, Strand Theatre, Tuscola, Ill. Small town patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charlie Ruggles—A nice little program that should have done better business than it did. I believe the title kept them away. Business below average. Running time, 68 minutes. 2 Played Aug. 19-20.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY: Charles Ruggles, Ann Dvorak—Who the heck is Mr. Sweeney? And who cares? A h——l of a thing to name a picture. You cannot sell the public such bunk as this, before or after you get them in the theatre. Another date filler-upper. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 23-24.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy—Ran this picture late on account of adverse criticisms and it lived up to the reputation given it by them, and came in for a good panning in my town. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Auguest 2-3.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE NAVY: Pat O'Brien, James Cagney—A honey if there ever was one. More compliments on this picture than any I have run in months. Just a natural that sent the patrons out talking about it. Business above average. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Sept. 2-3.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

I'VE GOT YOUR NUMBER: Joan Blondell, Pat O'Brien—A risque, snappy little comedy that should please very well. We did a little over average business with this one. Lots of laughs and wisecracks that made them laugh plenty. Pleased about 80% on a family night. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Aug. 15-16.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO: Glenda Farrell—Just a fair program picture. A little too much hokum, but due to scarcity of good pictures just now it will drag by. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 5-6.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

PERSONALITY KID, THE: Pat O'Brien—A very good program picture that pleased the Saturday night crowd. Plenty of action and comedy. This boy O'Brien is growing on the fans all the time. Business about average for summer. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Sept. 1.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

PERSONALITY KID, THE: Pat O'Brien, Glenda Farrell—A good picture based on the life of a happy-go-lucky prize fighter who loved the ladies. Step on this one and get the people in and they'll be well entertained. Fair business two days. Running time, 65 minutes. Played September 10-11.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C.—General patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien, Ginger Rogers—O'Brien did one nice job. Played three days and expected some business, but didn't get it. Very good musical and those that saw it thought the same, but there weren't enough that saw it to please me. Running time, 89 minutes.—George Biehler, Palace Theatre, Hamburgh, N. Y. General patronage.

UPPER WORLD: Warren William, Mary Astor—What a title to try and sell the suffering public, and in case they wander in on it they will not go for such a story. It seems when the finish of the contracts is nearing, anything will do. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 21-22.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

MICKEY'S MEDICINE MAN: A good little short. McGuire is very popular here especially with the kids. Set this in; it's okay. Running time, 20 minutes.—H. J. Stallings, Moon Theatre, Henderson, N. C. General patronage.

MICKEY'S MINSTRELS: Mickey McGuire—The kids sure fell for it. Mickey McGuire is always popular with the kiddies.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

MOVIE STRUCK: Scrappy Cartoon—Fine cartoon. The children all like Scrappy. This one sure pleased them. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

PUNCH DRUNK: Broadway Comedy—As good a comedy as we've had in a long time. This particular kind of comedy pleased and there were plenty of laughs for everybody. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

Educational

BUSTED BLOSSOMS: Terry Toons Series—Very good cartoon. Enjoyed by both grownups and children. Running time, seven minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. General patronage.

GOLD DUST, THE: Buster Keaton—This one was very good. Audience sure went wild over it.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

HALF BAKED RELATIONS: Andy Clyde—Just fair.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

HOLLAND DAYS: Terry-Toon—Average.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

IRISH SWEEPSTAKES: Terry-Toons Series—Fair cartoon. Enjoyed by the children. Running time, seven minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. General patronage.

LION'S FRIEND, THE: Terry Toon—Very good.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

MAD HOUSE, A: Terry Toon—Fairly good.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

Fox

ANSWERING THE RIOT CALL: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—Excellent short. Some of the scenes pretty old, but seemed to hold interest. Running time, 10 minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. General patronage.

LAND OF BENGAL: Magic Carpet Series—Very nice short of the travelogue type and interesting. Running time, nine minutes.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

OUTDOING THE DAREDEVILS: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—Very good. Out of the ordinary.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

SCRAPING THE SKY: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—One of the Camera Man series and very entertaining.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

MGM

BENNY FROM PANAMA: Musical comedy—This, as others under this classification, is very poor. The worst shorts Metro have sold this season. Running ume, 18 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

CITADELS OF THE MEDITERRANEAN: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Good Travel Talk. All of this series have been interesting and our patrons have seemed to enjoy them.—J. Glyenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

THEM THAR HILLS: Laurel & Hardy—Good Laurel and Hardy comedy. Running time, 2 reels.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

TIBET, LAND OF ISOLATION: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—A very interesting and educational one-reeler showing many beautiful scenes in Tibet. The scenes showing their methods of travel and earning a living are very interesting; but our patrons do not care for this type of entertainment. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WHAT PRICE JAZZ?: Musical Revues—Absolutely no good as are all of the others released under this classification. Worse than if you had not had anything besides your feature.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ALL ON DECK: Headliners—Not much to it, and will only do as a filler that may be played either with a newsreel or another good short. Running time, 9 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 10—The poorest of this series. Poorest sound recording I have heard in many a day. Running time, 11 minutes.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 8—This is another one-reeler presenting scenes of the stars in Hollywood at work and play. This one presents many popular stars and pleased our patrons much better than the other numbers of this series. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PARADE OF THE WOODEN SOLDIERS: Betty Boop—A very clever short subject and fine for the children. Running time, 7 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 7—Lanny Ross—A few of these are good, but as for this particular one, it is not so hot. Running time, 8 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 13—Good short. This has been a very good series. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

PETTING PREFERRED: Harry Langdon—Whoever told this bird he was a comedian? There is absolutely no reason for a company wishing a thing like this off on a show, or any account be it the smallest. Running time, 18 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

SHIVER ME TIMBERS: Popeye, the Sailor—This is a very good cartoon comedy, featuring Popeye with the other popular characters, Wimpy and Olive Oyl. They explore a "ghost ship" and this pleased our entire audience. Plenty of laughs and a good filler for any program. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

UNDERNEATH THE BROADWAY MOON: Isham Jones and orchestra, Eton Boys—This is a very good short subject and the Eton Boys are also very good in this one-reeler. Running time, 11 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

RKO

CENTURY OF PROGRESS: Very good. By all means play it up.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

FITS IN A FIDDLE: Clark & McCullough—Average comedy. These boys seem to be able to keep it up and get their share of the laughs. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

HIZZONER: Bert Lahr—Poor comedy, or rather, just plain poor. It can't be called a comedy. Running time, 18 minutes.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

KNEE DEEP IN MUSIC: Ruth Etting—Not as good as some of this series. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

LION TAMER, THE: Amos 'n' Andy—They seemed to enjoy it.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

STRICTLY FRESH YEGGS: Gribbon-Kennedy-Stanton Comedies—In which a newcomer to the comedy screen tries to emulate Leon Errol with disastrous results. Not a laugh in it. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

WELL CURED HAM: Headliner Series—Well cured ham is right. I can see by this one that they still have some ham comedy producers in Hollywood. Running time, 20 minutes.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

WRONG DIRECTION: Edgar Kennedy—Why RKO continues to make these exasperating two-reelers is a mystery. People actually tell me that they won't come if they have to look at them. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

Universal

ED SULLIVAN'S HEADLINERS: Mentone No. 10—The poorest of these that we have ran.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

HEARTBURN: Sterling Holloway—Just fair. Nothing extra.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

PEST, THE: Mentone No. 9—Very good.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

TRIFLE BACKWARD, A: Vince Barnett—Very good.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

VAUDEVILLE DAYS: Mentone No. 8—Very entertaining. Most all of these shorts are good.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

WARREN DOANE BREVITY: Universal Comedies—Excellent.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

TIN HAT HARMONY: Abe Lyman and band—A very good band number that will go good with any program. Running time, 10 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

BORRAH MINNEVITCH AND HIS RASCALS: Melody Masters—A very nice little single-reeler that pleased 100 per cent. I have a number of calls for more shorts by this crowd. Running time, nine minuees.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

CORN ON THE COP: Harry Gribbon—This is a fairly good comedy of the slapstick variety. A few laughs and wisecracks and that is about all. Vitaphone seems to be gaining ground over last season's shorts and here's hoping they will continue to improve them. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOT FROM PETROGRAD: Melody Masters Series—Pleased as all the Melody Masters do. Never ran a poor one in this series. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

LOOK FOR THE SILVER LINING: Dorothy Stone—One of the best of the Broadway Brevities. Running time, 3 reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

MASKS AND MEMORIES: Lillian Roth—This is too long for this kind of a subject. Roth very poor and the whole thing gets silly and disgusting before it is over. Running time, 36 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

MISSISSIPPI SUITE: Another very poor one-reel subject and you had better have another short that will make up for the shortcoming of this one. Running time, 9 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

MOROCCO NIGHTS: Broadway Brevities—This is just another time-killer and will not balance your program now that shorts means just as much as your features. Warner makes too many short subjects to make them all good. Running time, 18 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

NOTHING EVER HAPPENS: Broadway Brevity—Burlesque on "Grand Hotel" all pepped up with dancing gals. O. K. entertainment.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

PAUL REVERE, JR.: Brevity Brevities—A fair musical short. Nothing outstanding. Running time, two reels.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General patronage.

PRIVATE LESSONS: Hal LeRoy—This is an excellent two-reeler full of beautiful girls, good music and tap dancing. This is one of the best from LeRoy and is excellent entertainment for the whole family. Play this on your best days and boost it to the public. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PRIVATE LESSONS: Hal LeRoy—There are several good dancing sequences in this short that will save it. Otherwise LeRoy is a poor star for a short or a feature subject. And if the dance numbers don't go over then this one is out. Running time, 19 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

PURE FEUD: Edgar Bergen—We think this ventriloquist act is above par. A number of people stayed to see it the second time. Running time, 1 reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

SERVICE WITH A SMILE: Leon Errol—In color, and very, very entertaining. Running time, 2 reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Kentucky. Small town patronage.

ROY TURK: Pepper Pots—This is a fair one-reel subject taking in sketches of many of Roy Turk's songs and very nicely done. Running time, 10 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

THOSE WERE THE DAYS: Pretty fair short subject, but there seems to be a lot of such stuff in short subjects, especially one-reelers. Running time, 9 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

MYSTERY SQUADRON, THE: Bob Steele—Good serial. Started off with plenty of action and tense situations. Running time, 20 minutes each.—R. W. Corbin, New Grand Theatre, Desloge, Mo. Small town patronage.

Principal

TARZAN, THE FEARLESS: Buster Crabbe—On third chapter and am very disappointed in it. Patrons say they do not like it. Running time, two reels each chapter.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Universal

VANISHING SHADOW, THE: Onslow Stevens—Just finished this serial and it went over fine. A little different from the usual run of serials. I have found the Universal serials the last year to be very good. Did not have one that didn't click.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

VANISHING SHADOW, THE: Onslow Stevens—We believe this was the best box office serial we have run. Business held up nicely all the way, and our patrons liked it.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

DEAR HERALD:

In reading the department "What The Picture Did For Me" in the August 25th issue of the HERALD we came across a report on "Twenty Million Sweethearts" by J. E. Stocker of the Myrtle theatre at Detroit. Among other things brother Stocker had to say with reference to this picture, we noted the following: "Here is a musical without a single undraped female limb and without a double meaning wisecrack. In other words it was as clean as a whistle and proved as successful at the box-office as anything shown in weeks. By all signs of audience reaction this was generally enjoyed by all. Clean pictures may require greater mental effort by the studios but will no doubt add to the profits of the industry as a whole."

There you are. When brother Stocker says anything he generally speaks right out loud so people can hear him. He is anything but a "yes man." He intimates that this picture was especially successful because of its cleanliness, or rather, they didn't object to it because it was clean. Too many of the theatre boys got panicky and went hogwild for fear that the Legion of Decency was going to ruin their business, when, as a matter of fact, they were trying to help their business by insisting on clean entertainment. The man who says that the public wants dirt and sex in its entertainment directly insults the intelligence of the American people and shows his lack of knowledge of the public mind. If "Cleanliness Is Next To Godliness," as it is claimed, why not make pictures clean? If the screen is to educate the public, as they claim for it, it can't be done by showing sex situations and suggestive scenes. There are plenty of babies born into the world lawfully and legitimately without some girl lending herself to the portrayal of illegitimate motherhood in order to get on the screen. These objectionable scenes, together with dozens of others, are what has been driving the public away from the theatres.

If our Uncle Samuel is going to pay people for the hogs they didn't raise, as we are told he intends doing, we are going into the hog business next year and make a lot of money by not raising a whole lot of 'em. This sounds like easy money to us.

Thoughts on Pictures

You can do as you please about it and it will be all right with us, if your folks like to laugh and you have a funnybone yourself, it might be well for you to get "The Merry Frinks."

This picture is a portrayal of a large cross-grained family all wanting to do as they please and all doing the wrong thing except the mama, Aline MacMahon, who tries to keep the family from going bughouse but can't do it. It isn't a picture that will draw first prize at the county fair, but it is a laughable comedy.

Allen Jenkins plays the part of a lawyer and he acts just like a lot of lawyers we know, some of whom ought to be shot, but not Allen; he's a nice fellow. Uncle Guy Kibbee drops in unexpectedly and unwelcome from New Zealand (or some other village) and he proceeds to make himself at home without letting them know that he's got more money than some people have hay and he wills it all to mama, which was just what he ought to do.

A Word for McHugh

If your customers like gruesome pictures and are not particular about having nightmares, you might try "The Return of the Terror," and if they can sleep after seeing this one you can try anything on 'em and they won't even dodge. Not that this is a bad picture, as murder pictures go, but sometimes murder pictures don't go.

This one is built around a supposed lunatic who gets away from the bug-house during a thunderstorm and is charged with several mysterious murders at a doctor's sanitarium, presided over by Lyle Talbot. The cast also includes Mary Astor, John Holliday, Frank McHugh et al. We would like to pause right here and make an inquiry that is none of our business, and that is why in —— don't they star Frank McHugh and give him some prominence in the billing? He grabs the most of the grapes in every picture he is in when they give him something to do.

Well anyhow, this is a murder story and, as a murder story, it is up to standard, but murder stories are not usually very entertaining, and entertainment is what Mr. William H. Public pays for. We never knew, until we saw this picture, where all the raincoats and rain hats and flashlights went to, and we never saw a rainstorm with as much rain in it, and as wet as it was, as we saw in this one, and it certainly looked good out here where we haven't had a good rain for three months, and they finally hung all the murders on Doc. Talbot, which we didn't like, because Lyle is a friend of ours who used to eat sowbelly and beans at our house, and that's the reason why our sowbelly and beans are all gone. Anyhow Lyle is an excellent performer, just as we told him he would be, and here's our best regards to him and the whole cast.

Oh Yeah?

Some mathematicians have got it all figured out that the farmers are a whole lot better off now when corn is 70 cents a bushel than they were a year ago when corn was 20 cents. Oh yeah, but they didn't include the farmers who sold corn a year ago and have to buy corn now because they didn't raise any on account of the drought, and this includes more than three-fourths of the farmers of Nebraska alone. It's funny how some people can figure. They remind us of the fellow who told his wife that he made a hundred dollars by trading their brindle pot-hound, and when his wife asked how he did it, he replied, "Well, I got Bill Smith's hound-dog Bluch and ten pups at $10.00 a piece."

They say that figures won't lie. Well, maybe they won't. but what about the big one that got away and took hook, line and sinker, he weighed at least twenty pounds. The best season in which to figure is just previous to an election or after you get back from fishing. The results obtained in both cases are generally about alike.

One Nebraska farmer has 100 bushels of corn to sell at 70 cents a bushel. Three other Nebraska farmers have to buy 100 bushels each at 70 cents per bushel, therefore " the farmers are better off." Oh, yeah, but how above the theatreman when those three farmers have to spend their money for corn instead of theatre tickets? Maybe Wallace can tell us. However, none of the foregoing is what we started out to tell you, and that is that after we collect for the hogs we didn't raise next year you can call on us for what money you need.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

MORE THAN A HEADACHE

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer advertising is now appearing in Liberty. As part of the promotion campaign, a general letter has been sent to theatres by the publication's advertising manager, requesting theatremen to show their approval of this box-office aid by wiring MGM branch managers or the home office, commending the advertising and "assuring them of your co-operation."

We quote from the letter:

"Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer consider Liberty Magazine a fan magazine. You are probably familiar with its 4-Star ratings and, like thousands of other exhibitors, you have, no doubt, used the ratings in your own theatre publicity. Liberty is the movie guide of the nation."

Many Round Tablers, of course, received this communication, called to our attention by a member who forwards the letter and copy of his reply, as follows, in part:

"Let us say, first of all, that we are deeply appreciative of any and all advertising which producers may see fit to use as an aid and stimulant to box office grosses. We feel that MGM is setting a fine example and that such a policy by all companies would be a decided benefit to the whole industry.

"But we also believe that all the benefit derived from such advertising will be greatly nullified by the continuation of Liberty's system of star rating of pictures. The star system of rating has done great harm at the box office. We in the field know that and thoroughly resent any publication which continues its use. The star system of rating not only discourages patronage, but it is decidedly unfair because in the majority of cases, unless a picture is given four stars, it is not considered a good show by those who use Liberty as a guide.

". . . We feel sure you will find exhibitors everywhere who feel as we do and you may rest assured that we will not encourage any further advertising in Liberty Magazine until it discontinues its policy of star rating."

Dropping in at a metropolitan first-run house, we found the manager studying local newspaper reviews of a highly regarded picture he had booked for an early showing, which had just opened on Broadway. One of the papers had chosen to give the feature a "two-star" notice, and the showman murmured:

"Boy, another headache."

The evils and injustices of the star-rating system have been long apparent. Unfortunately it has been encouraged and allowed to thrive by those who should have combined to stamp out this unsound practice while it was still in swaddling clothes.

The star-rating system is far more than a headache. It is a cancerous growth upon the body of the motion picture.

ANOTHER CREDIT

The winning of the Quigley Award for March aided in obtaining for Nevin McCord the post of City Manager, Marcus Theatres, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Thus replies General Manager Harry David in answer to our inquiry asking whether McCord's success in the Quigley competitions had any bearing on his promotion.

From the very beginning we have emphasized that the Quigley project was inaugurated to obtain deserved recognition for talented showmen.

In the case of Gene Curtis, and now Nevin McCord, there can be little doubt of the success of this purpose.

In August, 1917, Exhibitors Trade Review carried a story enumerating the activities of Sol Lesser and Joe Lee, both at that time leaders in the state rights branch of the industry.

On the next two pages of this section are chronicled the world premiere of Sol Lesser's "Peck's Bad Boy" in California and Joe Lee's campaign on "Cleopatra" at the reopened Brooklyn Paramount.

ON GETTING AHEAD

Robert F. Sisk leaves his post of ad chief at RKO Radio to take up an important production assignment. S. Barret McCormick steps up into Sisk's job.

Anna Bell Ward mounts the ladder to the vice-presidency of Phoenix Amusement Co. of Lexington, Ky. Lew Preston becomes general manager of the many New York houses in the new combination of Nelson, Renner and Strassberg.

It should be heartening to those still in the ranks to know that each of the above served long years in the field of the theatre. In spite of conditions, promotions are still in order, and happily, among those showmen who have demonstrated they have plenty of stuff on the ball.

In the New York World-Telegram, under the heading, "High Cost Films Pay Best," Dan Thomas reports that producers intend spending barrels and barrels of dough on the new season's pictures. And the manager, of course, will be expected to put them over without spending a dime.

WIDE INTEREST REPORTED IN QUAKER OATS CONTEST

Theatremen in every section of the country will compete for the $1,000 offered by Quaker Oats in the "Six Day Bike Rider" exploitation contest, according to Terry Turner, the cereal company's representative, who has just completed a flying tour of the country.

The former head of Loew's and RKO theatre advertising and publicity departments reports holding meetings in 25 cities attended by members of Quaker Oats sales force, interested circuit and independent theatremen. Plans were discussed and information supplied regarding the contest, complete details of which are carried in this section. The setup has been approved by the Warner, RKO and Loew circuits, in addition to Interstate in Texas, Fox West Coast, Balaban & Katz, Minnesota Amusement Co., Mullin and Pinanski, of New England, and many leading independent groups

As a result of these meetings, many stunts are already planned, such as intercity bicycle races between Newark and Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington and various other similarly situated communities. Dan Finn and Tod Browning are working on a race between Yale and Harvard with New Haven and Boston as starting points; Howard Waugh had Doc Hawley, Quaker Oats representative in Memphis and also Park Commissioner, turn over public parks for stunts. Dinty Moore will have St. Louis girls stage a bicycle endurance test atop his marquee, with the same gag slated in other locations, and Charley Smakwitz in Albany has an industrial show tied up for stunts.

Under the supervision of Vice President George A. MacDonald, Quaker Oats sales head, salesmen are distributing window cards nationally, and Donald Douglas, Quaker Oats vice-president in charge of advertising, has scheduled through Lord & Thomas a nationwide newspaper and magazine campaign to break in full color on Sept. 23 and again on Oct. 7.

Theatre managers and publicity men in the United States in first and subsequent run houses are eligible. Contest ends Dec. 1, and in case of ties, duplicate prizes will be awarded. —MIKE

Round Tablers Win In "Clown" Contest

Bill Hendricks, of the Warner, Memphis, takes down the first prize of $100 in the Warner exploitation contest on "Circus Clown." Second money, $50, was awarded to Louie Charninsky, Capital, Dallas, and the third prize, $25, was copped by Ed M. Hart, Oxford, Plainfield, N. J., winner of the Quigley Award for August.

Four prizes of $10 each were won by William Leggiero, Ritz, San Bernardino, Cal., Quigley August First Mention winner; Gene Curtis and Ken Finley, Palace, Montreal; Ken Grimes, Warner, Morgantown, West Va., and Roy Patterson, Gordon, Middletown, Ohio.

The remaining seven prizes of $5 each were awarded to J. E. Elicker, Penn, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Barney Gurnette, New Santa Cruz, Santa Cruz, Cal.; George O'Brien, Miller, Woodstock, Ill.; Hadden Matthews, 69th St. Theatre, Upper Darby, Pa.; Abe Frank, Lyric, Camden, N. J.; Jim Totman, Warner, Erie, Pa.; R. D. Hutchings, Portage, Portage, Wis. In addition a large number of Honorables were awarded.

Many of the above showmen were also included among the winners in the Quigley competition for August, and as to be expected, most of the entrants in the Warner contest are members of the Managers Round Table Club.

Upstate Campaigns Click On "Jane Eyre" Dates

Working with the showmen at Shea's, Jamestown, Harry Herman, exploiteer for Standard Film Exchanges, upstate distributors for Monogram, put over a number of ideas on "Jane Eyre," featured by a cut-out doll tieup in which dolls were given away at the theatre and co-op ads taken by the toy distributors, who broke out with windows.

"Jane Eyre" sandwiches helped to obtain imprinted bag and napkin ads in various spots, and dress tieup with Virginia Bruce also clicked for co-op ads and windows. Newspaper breaks were topped with a special story written by local librarian.

Herman also put on a similar well rounded campaign for the date at the Palace, Corning, N. Y., tiein in Postal Telegraph for jumbo displays, book stores for photoplay editions, and other ideas additionally exploited in Jamestown.

POLLACK'S "TREASURE" FLOAT. Les Pollack at Loew's Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., rigged up this pirate ship bally for his "Treasure Island" date, with girls and boys dressed as buccaneers.

Studios Put Over Ace Exploitation

The first exploitation campaign originated in the West Coast Studios and reported to these pages by the Quigley Publications Hollywood Bureau, is that on "Peck's Bad Boy," a Fox release, which was world-premiered at the Broadway, Santa Ana, Cal., by Manager Lester Fountain in conjunction with the Principal Pictures ad crew under the supervision of Sol Lesser.

Outstanding was the lobby flash, the display having a board fence background (see photo) on which was carved initials, hearts, etc. Ushers were dressed in tattered boys' clothes and caps, cashier wearing gingham dress with old fashioned ribbon bow in her hair. Ticket booth was also in character. That's Fountain in the photo looking over his handiwork.

"Bad Boy" World Premiere Lobby

A well rounded newspaper campaign was also put across and radio, a week ahead, was employed to spread the word. Also featured was the presence of over 250 guests who were brought by bus to the showing by Lesser.

Fox Issues Summons to "Judge Priest" Preview

Put over very well was the summons gag by the Fox studios used as an unusual invite idea for the press showing of Will Rogers' new picture, "Judge Priest." The summons was same as used by courts, and further atmosphere was obtained by writing in actual names and having the serving done by a legitimate deputy sheriff. Invitation copy was on reverse side. Gag was credited to Frank Perrett of Gabe Yorke's crew.

Bell Plants Story On Theatre Comfort

That few patrons realize the efforts necessary to keep a theatre clean and comfortable is the contention of Manager Frank Bell, Athens, De Land, Fla., and to give the general public an idea of what it takes, Frank had one of his leading newspaper feature writers make a tour of the house.

The inspection was very favorable to the theatre, as a full column story resulted in which was detailed the care taken in keeping the house clean, and also described was the comfort and safety of the general equipment.

Bell's idea is sound. Managers on the alert for publicity breaks on coming attractions should also keep a weather eye open for institutional stories that sell the physical advantages of their theatres.

MANAGERS PREPARING FOR HALLOWE'EN

With Hallowe'en just around the corner, showmen everywhere are getting set with a flock of ideas that experience has proven profitable at the box office. Some of the tried-and-true are as follows:

Children's costume matinees, corn husking contest, nut cracking, apple ducking, fortune teller in lobby, Jack O'Lantern contest, kiddie parade, pie baking contest, pinning tail to donkey lobby contest, and a flock of others. Early issues of October, 1933, Round Table section, have these in detail.

Five Chariots Bally Lee's Opening Date

The sister borough across the East River from Manhattan awoke a few weeks back to the fact that the Brooklyn Paramount was about to reopen with "Cleopatra," the news being "barraged" by Joe Lee, well known medico of ailing box-offices, who was appointed to the post of Managing Director by Si Fabian, under whose direction the theatre now operates.

With only seven days to spread the word, Joe wasted little time. The city, surrounding area and beaches were covered with a flock of autogiros, which for three days ahead carried banners advertising the opening. All Brooklyn radio stations carried regular announcements, and ten billposters covered highways and suburban districts with everything from one sheets to 28-sheet stands.

Highlighted among the many street ballys he put over, was Joe's crew of chariots (see photo) with drivers in costume. Five of these covered every section of town, headquartering in front of the theatre where they of course attracted their share of desired attention.

A regulation Hollywood opening was in order, with the necessary lights and cameras grinding film of the arriving celebrities. The front of the building was decorated with a blanket of flags and Lee's newspaper campaign was also well done, the dailies going for a lot of personal human stuff on Joe. The ads were effective, standout being a three column on 150 lines, in which reverses and ben days were nicely put together.

GOVERNOR INVITED TO ATTEND PRESENTATION

Plans Now Being Made to Have Award for August Presented to Hart by Governor Moore

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Before we detail the latest news in regard to the ceremonies planned for Ed Hart's presentation, it should be of interest to the membership to know that the Quigley Awards competition takes another bow for aiding one of the winners to step into a bigger job.

When the announcement was made of Nevin McCord's promotion to city manager of the L. Marcus Theatres, Twin Falls, Idaho, we queried General Manager Harry David as to whether Nevin's success in the March competition had anything to do with his being selected for the new post, and the answer was in the affirmative.

That's very gratifying, friends, and should stimulate the efforts of the members in the remaining months of the Quigley project. There is no doubt but that the winning of a Quigley Award means much to the future of participating showmen.

Plans are about set for Governor A. Harry Moore, of New Jersey, to present the Award for August to the winner, Ed M. Hart, of Plainfield, and if nothing interferes with the Executive's schedule, he will be at the ceremonies, which will be reported next week.

Inadvertently, the following Honorable Mentions were omitted from last week's list: J. L. Cartwright, Halifax, Daytona Beach, Fla., and Bill Decker, Cambria, Johnstown, Pa. These boys forwarded excellent entries.

Deadline for September is midnight, Saturday, October 6, which gives contestants plenty of time to get their campaigns into Headquarters. September judges will be announced in next week's issue.

ED. M. HART

Newspaper Contests Feature Hart's Date

Although Ed Hart put across a score or more of real circus stunts on his prize winning "Circus Clown" campaign, at the Oxford, Plainfield, N. J., he really topped his bulls eyes with six newspaper contests, three with local papers and others in surrounding suburban sheets. Ed put on most all suggested in the press book and some others he thought up himself. They all clicked hard judging by the bundles of answers tnat Hart sends along—just a few of the total, sez he.

A week in advance, the front and lobby were changed to represent the circus. From practical trapezes in the foyer, cutouts of Brown and girl were suspended, below which were signs "Main Tent" and etc., pointing to freak exhibit inside of ossified man, fat woman, bearded lady, etc. Menagerie was also placed in lobby, and was complete even to monkey biting finger of overcurious child.

Outside stunts were in keeping. Parades were numerous, for beside the usual circus procession, Ed had a number of toy express wagons fitted up covered-wagon style (see photo) and lettered, these also making all the prominent streets.

Beechnut girls distributed gum and heralds house to house and at the theatre, balloons with passes attached were dropped to waiting throngs, promoted thousands of bottles of soft drinks and ice cream cones were given away, trick ponies and trained dogs led by costumed clowns worked in front of the house and on prominent corners.

Resemblance and big mouth contests were also put on, every local orchestra contacted with special radio-famed jug band doing stuff in lobby, promoted fans and door knob hangers were obtained in exchange for merchants' ads on reverse side, and special shows for orphans, etc., also obtained a lot of helpful publicity.

Ed sure put on plenty to put this one over, really outstanding being his newspaper publicity on the date. In addition to the contests, dailies gave him many a sweet break on the attraction which plus the many good exploitation angles made up a highly commendable campaign.

Time is called "Life Begins at 6:30" and is gaining steadily in popularity. Accompanying photo shows radio announcer at left and Harry leaning on piano.

Railroad Circularizes List for "Private Car"

Simultaneous with Jack Lykes' showing of "Murder in a Private Car" at the Stillman, Cleveland, Ohio, was a newsreel clip of the Milwaukee Express record speed run between Chicago and Milwaukee. So Jack promoted the railroad to send letters to their entire mailing list describing the record run and advertising the reel at the theatre.

For his lobby plug Jack had a large cutout rear end of Pullman car covering front of box office with illuminated lights and real awning (see photo). Easel at side of boxoffice carried one-sheet time table card with starting times of all shows.

To soft-pedal the murder angle, marquee copy read "a trainload of laughs." Tabloids with theatre ad and playdates were distributed in barber and beauty shops and boys cruising streets selling ice cream bars carried plug on boxes.

Board of Education Tie-in Engineered by Caldwell

A tie-up with the Board of Education on "Treasure Island" netted Wally Caldwell, Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, the distribution of 5,000 bookmarks through every public library plus a large display with pictures, theatre, play date and credit card in children's auditorium of main library.

A large fashion window in leading department store showed locally made pirate ships. Six foot pirate poster executed by art department of store was also displayed with mounted stills, etc.

Large eighteen foot floats with Beery and Cooper characters in atmospheric setting, plus bannered bakery cars and new Fords formed part of Wally's street bally parade. Compo pirate front was built and 24" cutout illuminated letters shone on marquee.

"Good-morning" hotel guest cards placed in hotel key boxes, imprinted napkins in restaurants and heralds distributed to theatre patrons in residential districts were other aids.

That alert showman, Syd Hobbs, Empire Theatre, Coventry, England, staged a fashion parade in cooperation with a local costumer for his "Fashions of 1934" date. Window display (see photo) consisted of five-foot figures painted gold and natural.

Three weeks prior a teaser "Fashions on Films" series ran in newspapers with no mention of picture until day before. House to house distribution of heralds was made and music shops plugged tunes.

Popularity-Resemblance Contest Staged by Stein

For "Little Miss Marker," Louis Stein, Ritz Theatre, Newark, N. J., contacted a leading jeweler to sponsor a baby popularity and a Shirley Temple resemblance contest. Cash prizes were awarded and the judging was based on audience applause. A cooperating photographer took pictures of children that were displayed in the lobby until the end of contest, at which time the kiddies received their pictures.

Easel in front of theatre with two 40x60 displays of Shirley (see photo) attracted the young aspirants. Awnings of stores plugged picture by sign cloth strips on front valances. Copy read "Little Miss Marker Now at the Ritz."

Children from orphanage were invited to attend Saturday matinee, at which promoted jig saw puzzles were distributed. Drug stores concocted special Shirley Ice Cream cones and local baker displayed huge cake in window with copy that it was to be presented at the Ritz to winner of contest.

Various Angles Worked On Boucher's Recent Dates

Stressing the spy angle of "Stamboul Quest," Frank Boucher put on the international spy contest with one of his local dailies, for his date at the Maryland, Hagerstown, Md., the gag running five days in advance, readers being requested to turn in the correct answers to a daily question regarding the identities of famous spies of the past. The contest of course was tied into the date of the picture, daily stories carrying full theatre credits.

Frank also took a leading part in a recent three-day Elks' State Convention, held in Hagerstown, serving as one of the judges for the various cash prizes given in a street parade. Boucher worked the Elk angle into his advertising on "Here Comes the Navy" by running an endorsement ad on the picture in which he mentioned names of various "Bills" who had played the picture at a special preview.

The Story

THE QUAKER OATS COMPANY, through their advertising agency, LORD & THOMAS, are embarking on a gigantic national advertising campaign, to culminate simultaneously with the release of the Warner Brothers' picture, "6 Day Bike Rider", with Joe E. Brown. Through the medium of newspapers and magazines and the co-operation of 150,000 Quaker Oats dealers, they will reach more than 17,000,000 people, not only with a message of Quaker Oats but with suitable mention of the picture, which you will play. To add interest to their plans they will give away 1,000 Iver Johnson Bikes to 1,000 lucky kids of the nation in a plan which, while having no direct bearing on a theatre, will assist you generally.

To awaken interest among theatre managers they further offer $1,000 in four cash prizes to those individuals turning in the best campaigns on the picture, where the words QUAKER OATS or MOTHER'S OATS are consistently publicized or picturized. The list of the newspapers to be used are listed on the next page. Quaker Oats promise you the co-operation of their dealers and will supply a list. If you're a live theatre manager and have a real publicity man, you know the rest.

The simple rules

Let's Be Sensible

THE QUAKER OATS COMPANY, as well as LORD & THOMAS, know full well that you cannot supersede your message to the public with Quaker Oats. They know full well that the ethics of the theatre will not permit the direct advertisement of Quaker Oats on your screen and they do not ask you to violate any ethics or rules in that respect. They do know, however, even as you and I, that with such a tremendous campaign behind you newspapers will take contests in which the words Quaker Oats can be consistently mentioned, and that lobby stunts and displays, as mentioned on the back page of this broadside, can carry the words Quaker Oats without damaging your ethical standing or hurting your campaign on the picture. They, as well as yourself, look upon the plan and the prizes involved merely as a co-operative gesture between the theatre, the picture and a national campaign on a household necessity, all blended into one gigantic effort. The directors of the major circuits who have endorsed this plan understand this and we would not want to violate their confidence in asking you to do other than mention Quaker Oats consistently in your campaign in a co-operative spirit. As this is the first time on record where a national advertiser has offered theatre operators prizes as well as national co-operation we must ask for marked tear sheets and photographs of any stunts upon which the prizes will be awarded.

GGESTIONS THAT MIGHT HELP YOU!

SUGGESTIONS

—take your pick or improve on them

1 A LOCAL BIKE RACE... The bike craze is sweeping the nation. My information comes from the manufacturers who have increased their sales 500% in the past few months. A local bike race tied up with your newspaper, your local sports store for prizes would create a lot of interest. Have the finish line at your theatre, making the distance 25 miles or more. Less mileage for a junior race. The name Quaker Oats on the handle or cross bars as well as Joe E. Brown would not hurt the race or your coming picture but would put you in running for a cash prize.

2 GUESSING THE NUMBER OF GRAINS... An old but effective stunt. A tie-in with your dealers. A large glass bowl in their windows. Dump two or three boxes of Quaker Oats in the bowl. Sign: A pair of passes to see Joe E. Brown in "6 Day Bike Rider" to the one guessing nearest the number of flakes of Quaker Oats in this bowl. Perhaps the dealer could be prevailed upon to give some prize. You must have slips in the store where the guessers can jot down their figures. You'll be surprised how much comment this old stunt will create.

3 THE BIGGEST MOUTH IN TOWN... A play on Joe E. Brown's subway entrance mouth. A contest a la Freckles to establish the biggest mouth in town. All boys and girls, men and women eligible. It's good for a news picture if not a suitable contest. More of a laugh than anything else and you could stick the words Quaker Oats in for a picture.

4 ATHLETIC TRAINING RULES... A sporting goods store handling bikes and with a suitable window space might tie up with you on this one. Some local athlete to ride a stationary bike in the window for several days, and show his training methods and rules. Of course he would have to start every meal off with Quaker Oats, a supply of boxes being around the window. You could get pictures of famous six day bike riders from the morgues of your newspapers to give the window a bright display. The bike could be on an Iver Johnson Home Exerciser which the store may have or can easily obtain.

5 BIKE RACE IN SPORTING STORE WINDOW... If you are fortunate enough to have a sporting goods store with two windows, or space enough in one for two bikes, you could stage a window race, both bikes on Home Exercisers, and with a clock for each bike showing the mileage. The sporting goods store would be getting a plug for their bikes and other merchandise, you would be getting one for your picture and you could name the two bike riders QUAKER OATS and SPINACH, respectively.

6 LOBBY OR MEZZANINE DISPLAY... For two weeks prior to the opening of your picture it might awaken interest to borrow two bikes from a sporting goods store. Put them in the lobby or on the mezzanine on Home Exercisers so that anyone could ride them without fear of injury. Have a sealed mileage clock attached to each bike and have your signs inviting anyone to ride them. Offer prizes of passes to the Joe E. Brown picture to anyone guessing the daily mileage for about three or four days. When the interest has been aroused then offer a prize for the mileage over a week. Have the ushers, doorman or any attendant encourage patrons to ride. Have one a girl's bike so that your women patrons can participate. You will be surprised the kick couples will get out of this stunt. A Quaker Oats sign attached to the arrangement would not hurt your stunt but may be the means of bringing a check for one of the prizes to your town.

7 QUAKER COSTUME CONTEST... Joe E. Brown will make some stills in Quaker costume. Some of the nation's greatest men were Quakers. How about a costume contest, home made, rented or otherwise, juvenile or for the grown ups? Add to this the high wheel bikes of one hundred years ago.

8 ENDURANCE TEST-BIKE AND QUAKER OATS... Take a strong young fellow or two men, one to relieve the other as they do in the six day bike race. Place them in a prominent window for an endurance contest, riding and relieving each other 8 hours a day. All they can have to eat during the contest is Quaker Oats. The idea being "How long can a Joe E. Brown 6 Day Bike Rider hold up with the nourishment of Quaker Oats alone?" In a prominent location, this will attract attention both for the picture and Quaker Oats.

9 RACE: ENGINE, RACE HORSE, AUTO AND BIKE... I know this seems far-fetched, but I had it arranged at one time for a stretch of road near Rahway, N. J., only to have it fall through when the professional bike riders grew afraid of it. The idea was to have a Pennsylvania locomotive, an automobile driven by a good driver, a fairly good race horse and a bike rider pace it out over a mile or a mile and a half course. It would of course be a handicap race with the horse given the best advantage. The bike next, then the automobile and the locomotive starting from scratch. The bike would always be a sure winner with the automobile being the only dangerous contender, as the horse would die out and the locomotive could not get under way fast enough. If you cannot get the locomotive you can get the auto, race horse and bike.

10 TRICK RIDING BIKE CONTEST... As kids, we all thought we were great trick riders of bikes. Some of us have scars to show just how terrible we were. The kids of today are no different from us of yesterday. A call to a public park for trick bike riders of all ages and descriptions, male and female, will bring out a colorful collection. Better hold it on a lawn and a nice soft one to save aches and pains of the morrow. Call it the Joe E. Brown Quaker Oats Trick Bike Riding Contest. If they cart out monocycles, all the better. Trick riding could be determined as: Riding backwards. Going under the cross bar while in motion. Riding without the hands on the handlebars. Riding standing on head on the seat. Riding without handlebars and guiding over a given space by knee action by throwing weight from side to side. Riding on back wheel alone with front wheel held high off ground. Whirling on back wheel. Riding on back wheel with front wheel raised and whirling in motion. Maybe your scars and bumps will remind you of more.

11 REMINDERS... The foregoing suggestions are given just to help you formulate plans to win this prize money. Pick from them what you wish and then add to them. I have tried to suggest every stunt that would be good for pictures and tell its story in a photograph. As a theatre man I do not see anything objectionable in them or anything to violate the exploitation rules of a theatre.

REMEMBER—Any theatre manager, whether his theatre is a part of a major or minor chain or in the field alone, can compete for these prizes. The only condition is that you play Joe E. Brown in "6 Day Bike Rider"

It's just an honest-to-goodness chance to increase grosses both for the theatre and the individual bank account

Let me hear that you are in it with both feet and what you intend to do.

Unusual Guessing Contest Sells Theatre Reopening

A new twist on the guessing stunt was put on by Manager Harry Bodie, Sixth Street Theatre, Coshocton, Ohio, to sell both the reopening of the remodeled house and the first attraction, "Here Comes the Navy."

Topping the many nautical exploitation stunts, Bodie sold his local power company on supplying the main window of their local store in which he planted a masked girl (see photo) seated in one of the new theatre chairs. Passersby were invited to guess the girl's age, height and weight, with cash prizes and theatre tickets offered for the nearest correct answers.

Tiein was further advanced by local paper, which ran front page stories on the stunt and also published contest blank which, besides necessary spaces, also contained plenty of buildup for the reopening of the house.

Police Guess Ending At Deering's Preview

To test the detective powers of his local gendarmes, Manager Francis Deering, State, Memphis, invited a number of the city sleuths to see "Thin Man," cutting off the picture just before the finish, and giving the dicks 24 hours to figure out the criminal. The stunt netted two day stories in the dailies.

The classified clew idea was also put across, four cash prizes amounting to $10, and ten pairs of tickets being given, paper coming in with display ads to sell the gag. Reward cards were tacked on telephone poles, and tall man was used for street bally.

The "please don't tell" herald was planted in downtown offices, dentists' and doctors' waiting rooms, etc., and number of peanuts in a bowl made up a flash in prominent store window. Public library and book stores distributed book marks, and Red Book agency stuffed copies with theatre herald.

Various Program Ideas Used by Joe Salmon

Change of pace in program style is found beneficial by Manager Joe Salmon, of the New York Riverside Theatre, who varies the size and style of his house organs from time to time in selling his attractions.

A four page newsette with short stories and cuts is alternated with larger size program with art front page. Also utilized from time to time is Joe's old standby, the offset herald, recently described here.

Jones Ties in "Treasure" With Local Orphan Week

Raymond L. Jones, Loew's Vendome, Nashville, Tenn., new Round Table recruit reports a campaign for "Treasure Island" in which he arranged with the Mayor to proclaim "Orphans' Week" during showing of picture. Newspapers carried stories and Mayor's proclamation. Lobby display consisted of pirate chest, blunderbuss, flintlocks, sand, palms, etc. Pirate hats were distributed at all playgrounds, special bannered

Ray's "Cellini" theatre ad ran on special dollar day page, offering free guest tickets. Ad only art on page commanded attention. Entire lobby display was moved to large radio store window for run of picture, and tieups were also made with leading jewelers.

Wright and Bruner Effect "Cellini" Window Display

Jack Wright, manager, and Frank Bruner, publicist at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City are responsible for the swell window (see photo) of leading Fiftn Avenue jeweler for "Affairs of Cellini." Display showed present day silver and gold work tied-in with enlarged still of Frederic March as "Cellini" in his workshop. Small, neat engraved card at center of window gave theatre and play dates.

Alper Gets Thorough Coverage on "Navy"

Murray Alper, Commodore Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., dressed his lobby on "Navy" with a miniature display of model battleships, cruisers, destroyers, etc., set on a cellophane sea depicting the ships in action (see photo). A guard of eight sailor sea scouts were on duty at the exhibit and signal station was set up with radio controls worked by seaman who used blinker lights to attract attention.

Accompanying photo shows Congressman John J. Delaney, member of House Committee on Naval Affairs in Washington, complimenting Murray on his display.

Entire house staff was dressed in naval attire wearing sashes with theatre copy and play dates. Tie-up with nearby Woolworth store resulted in all salesgirls wearing navy hats and sashes with copy. Special sale on sailor hats prevailed one week prior.

For his street bally Murray has usher dressed as sailor promenade streets with bannered goat. Opening night contingent of sailors paraded to the theatre with Boy Scout Band. Sea scout from Brooklyn Navy Yard blew bugle from top of marquee and ship's searchlight from same spot was played up and down the street.

For his "Handy Andy" date, at the Savoy Theatre, Monty MacLevey, publicity director for Frisch and Rinzler in Brooklyn, N. Theatre copy, play dates and druggist's ad followed.

Monogram-Agfa Contest Lands Many Windows

Monogram's tieup with Agfa on a contest to uncover new Hollywood faces is progressing rapidly throughout the country and as an instance of the cooperation between photo dealers and theatres, the accompanying shot, forwarded by Ed Finney, shows how the Liberty in Seattle, Wash., tied in on "Women Must Dress." Window contained plug on the contest and stills of Monogram stars, the display being moved from store to store in conjunction with all local showings of Monogram releases.

Similar displays have been arranged in many other spots and grand winners in the contest will be sent to the studios to play in one or more pictures, expenses and salaries to be paid for a period of ten weeks.

FAVORS RADIO EXPLOITATION

Former Studio Director Points Out Preferable Hours; Stresses Type of Successful Program

by EDDIE FORESTER Manager, Rivoli, Hastings, Neb.

After reading Harry Botwick's comments on radio as a medium of exploitation, I cannot but agree that it is a valuable asset to any theatre. I have been using the radio successfully for the past seven years. Without radio as a sales medium, I would be lost, and having been in radio as announcer and studio director, I know you cannot get results with haphazard programs.

I must disagree with Harry, however, on two points which of course is purely my own personal opinion. I have reference to the time of day for the broadcasts and the type of material used in the programs. I know it is commonly believed by everyone connected with commercial radio stations, that the dinner hour or from 5:30 to 7, is the best time for a selling program, assuming that the whole family is home at this time, but I do not agree that it is the best time for a movie advertising program. Just visit any average home at that hour and ascertain what is going on. The wife is in the kitchen preparing dinner, and the old man is reading the evening paper. Did you ever try to listen to a radio program of talk and read what Hitler was doing in Germany at the same time? It just can't be done, and the paper will win out every time. The dial will be changed to a straight musical program, or the announcer will go rambling on unheeded.

Directs Appeal to Women

It is commonly accepted in show business that an attraction with a strong appeal for the women is practically a guaranteed box office attraction. By the same reasoning, I have always tried to direct my radio appeal to the women of the household, and to do so, you must present your program at hours that she can listen, and offer a program that will make her sit down for 15 minutes or an half hour and really pay attention to what is being said. I have found the best hours to be between 10 and 11:30 in the morning, or between 2:30 and 4 in the afternoon. At these periods, there is nothing that will interfere with the average housewife's concentration if she is willing. The morning hour is preferable, for then there is no bridge club, or afternoon shopping to interfere. The woman of the family is usually boss when it comes to selecting the family entertainment, so you sell her on your show and she will do the rest.

Your next consideration then is what type of program will be strong enough to make the women sit down and listen attentively? Kitchen chatter naturally is out for a theatre program—continued playlets are strong radio features, but entail too much preparation and material and too many people. Go over the whole list of possibilities and it will eventually come right back to the theatre itself, the pipe organ. Our greatest success in holding a radio audience has been with the pipe organ that in most theatres is covered with cobwebs. We broadcast an hour a day from 10 to 11, using the organ, a tenor and Tony Wons style poems and homey readings. Every woman is more or less sentimentally inclined and this type material seems to hold her interest. I know it is common practice to use Hollywood chatter on theatre programs, but I have never favored this style radio presentations and do not believe they sell tickets. Goings on in Hollywood have been exploited so much by press agents of the stars that an aroma has arisen so unpleasant that it has reacted against the industry as a whole. I doubt very much if there are very many more divorces and carryings-on among the movie people than there are in many another walk of life, but they have been given so much publicity that the whole world has gotten the idea that Hollywood is Hell's home office and Hays is the District Manager.

Advises Careful Planning

On our programs we use a visiting style of announcements. Just sorta sit down with the listener and describe some interesting incident in the picture we are selling. After all, we have thrown adjectives at the public so long it doesn't mean a thing any more. They want to know what makes the picture meritorious. I am positive one broadcast we used on "Wild Cargo" was responsible for an increase in gross. Like everyone else, we sold the wild, exciting angle on the picture in advance. After the opening, we found the women were not interested as much as they should be. I took stock of the picture and decided to stress the "cute" things in the picture for one broadcast, so I described the tiny deer that Buck liberated, the amusing way he caught monekys and other incidents less rugged than the snakes and death battles. That very night our business took a leap and it was due to a great increase in women patronage.

Most certainly, radio should be used wherever possible in theatre campaigns. Possibly radio has taken away some theatre patronage, but by the same token, it is a challenge to theatre managers to utilize the medium to bring them back to the theatre. Not merely by presenting a brief announcement of stars and titles, but by a studied approach, carefully planned. You would not think of running an ad in the newspaper with just the cast and title and no comment on the picture and a radio program must have just as much or more preparation and consideration.

HOPE SONNY ISN'T SHORT WINDED

From Miami, Sonny Shepherd breezed into New York via boat, immediately hopped a Chicago plane, stopped overnight in the Windy City, flew to Detroit, picked up a new Ford, grabbed the night boat to Buffalo, drove to Niagara Falls, left the next day for Rochester, and the same day landed in Ottawa.

There's a lot more of the same, but this will give you a faint idea of what Sonny considers the proper way to spend a vacation. —MIKE

Tieup Nets "Cellini" Jewelry Ad for Perry

Charlie Perry, Aldine Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., effected a tie-up with Gimbel's resulting in distribution of 20,000 package inserts and cooperative ad in all local newspapers on "Cellini" jewelry, when he played that picture.

Three weeks prior, special feature stories and photos of Bennett and March broke in papers and serialization run in Daily News resulted in special posters on all their delivery trucks. Radio stations plugged the engagement and book displays netted attractive windows.

WHAT THEY'RE DOING IN TEXAS

Interstate Circuit Round Tablers Put Over Many Box Office Angles In Selling Various Attractions

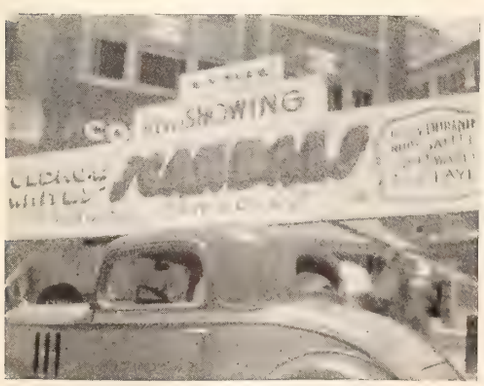
There is a lot of fine showmanship being displayed down in Texas, especially by the managers in the Interstate Circuit, which is almost 100 per cent in Round Table membership. On this page is reported a number of campaigns put on by these showmen, forwarded by Don Hoobler, which cover many angles, and should give the membership a good idea of how they do it down in Texas.

Burke Plans Different Display Ad on "Rothschild"

Realizing that a more dignified type of display would be more in keeping for the "Rothschild" date, Manager John A. Burke, Lyric, Eastland, Texas, disregarded the conventional mats and made up a series of simple announcement ads illustrated by star cuts of Arliss. These were followed up with personal endorsement letters to ministers and club women.

From time to time, Burke uses an automobile banner (see photo) with steel frames. He states this is easily set up and has proven helpful, especially on his recent showing of "George White's Scandals."

Dooley's Shirley Temple Party Causes Holdover



A Shirley Temple "Movie Party" on the morning of the second day of his run on "Little Miss Marker" at the Mission, Amarillo, Texas, was reported by Manager Oscar Dooley to have built up the run so that a holdover of an extra day was necessary. Children were appealed to through ads on newspaper comic pages, radio and P. T. A. Mickey Mouse, Popeye and Betty Boop were on the bill, and candy promoted from nearby confectioner was given to each child. The success of the party made it necessary to open another theatre to handle the overflow crowd.

Fanning's "Wonder Bar" Campaign Wins Prize

Spurred on by the opportunity of winning an important cash prize in a contest for the best increase over average business, Manager John C. Fanning, Capitol, Brownsville, Texas, put over a campaign on "Wonder Bar" that netted him first money.

Exploitation was featured by a street parade in which decorated theatre float was one of the main attractions. On center of truck was small donkey carrying man made up in blackface to resemble Jolson and singing hit number from the picture. Fanning spoke before lunch clubs, made announcements from the stage and put over a host of other helpful ideas.

On his "Wild Cargo" date, the parade angle was again utilized, bannered truck carrying cages of wild animals (see photo) presided over by Manuel King, world's youngest wild animal trainer, whom Fanning tied in on the campaign.

Frias' Mickey Mouse Club Has Membership of 7,000.

Called by observers one of the most successful and intelligently handled of all Mickey Mouse clubs, is that organized by Manager Carlos Frias, Plaza, El Paso, Texas, which boasts the amazing membership of 7,000 boys and girls, with a consistent weekly attendance of over 2,000.

Tiein with local paper nets Frias much publicity, outstanding being a free full page institutional ad contributed by the El Paso Times plugging the club and inviting parents to have their children join. Hook-in with many local grocers for weekly prizes is also another source of free newspaper displays.

In addition to the screen show, Frias puts on a stage presentation of Mickey Mouse amateur talent which is broadcast over a prominent station as a weekly feature. In fact, this Round Tabler has developed the club to such a point that merchant tieups are secured without asking.

Stewart Pens Selling Letter To Club Women on "Bondage"

Reported to have brought satisfactory results was a general letter sent out by Manager C. H. Stewart, Majestic, Wichita Falls, Texas, on "Of Human Bondage." The message was addressed to members of all women's clubs, P. T. A., etc., in which Stewart was careful to point out that the picture was adult entertainment, "not because it contains anything offensive, but because the subject matter will not be understood by children."

On "Stamboul Quest," this member was successful in putting over the international spy contest with one of his local papers, the series being planted prominently on the classified page.

King Promotes Co-op Page In Less Than Two Hours

His original date being switched on 24 hours' notice, Manager J. C. King, Arcadia, Harlingen, Texas, had very little time to put over "Shoot the Works," which replaced his regular booking. In spite of which he managed to secure congratulatory wires from the stars in the picture, copies of which were made up and placed in many windows.

Still working fast, King went out and sold a page of cooperative ads in a few hours and states for the information of other managers that he found the title a natural to put over for this kind of advertising.

Mason Ties In War Vets On "All Quiet" Showing

For his return date on "All Quiet," Manager L. J. Mason, Palace, McAllen, Texas, obtained the cooperation of his local Veterans of Foreign Wars post to sell tickets for the engagement. After a designated amount, the gross was split 50-50, and Mason reports very satisfactory business as a result.

Featured in the campaign was a co-op page in which over 40 local merchants paid for all the space. Top of page carried theatre ad and copy plugging tieup with Vets.

Local Paper Runs Page One Story on Warren's Lobby

Manager B. V. Warren, Rialto, Denison, Texas, evidently created an out of the ordinary front on "Tarzan and His Mate," for the flash was good enough to land a front page story in his local daily, describing how Warren and his house staff obtained a number of trees and bushes from the nearby river bottoms and arranged them to simulate a jungle scene. Local taxidermist supplied stuffed monkeys, pelicans, etc.

Still another excellent teaser idea was that employed by this member for "Let's Talk It Over," shown during the period of local elections. Small throwaways were printed addressed to the local citizenry requesting them not to vote wrong and to be on hand Saturday night—the opening day of the picture, to "talk it over." Warren states that the printer received many phone calls from the candidates, wanting to know what it was all about.

Ensor Asks Patrons To Criticize Pictures

In an effort to get his patrons' reactions to the kind of pictures shown at the Ensor Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., J. M. Ensor ran an announcement in his theatre ad that passes would be given to the first fifty adults writing criticisms of his pictures. Second ad, run several days later, included copy thanking patrons for their letters and expressing pleasure that all agreed Ensor's pictures "offered entertainment of the highest type." Incidentally, "J. M." probably added a few names to his mailing list.

Wilbur or Pete, as he is called, came into Club headquarters with his delightful wife, paid us a nice visit and "jerned up." Pete has had a hectic career, he started as usher at the Thompson Square Theatre in Charleston, Mass., stayed there about a year and then joined a local stock company. Organized the New England Players, playing around Boston and other towns; left showbusiness awhile and went into the insurance game, however, the old lure must have been too strong for we find him back again as assistant at the Broadway in Somerville and then to various other houses until he acquired his own house where as he says he "expects to remain for some time" and so do we.

Wesley Eddy Dies At Parents' Grave

Wesley Eddy, 31, musician and master of ceremonies at the Roxy theatre in New York and at various other motion picture theatres, was found dead last week at the grave of his parents in St. Michael's Cemetery, Stratford, Conn., with a bullet wound in the head.

The death was attributed to suicide, although a revolver was found many feet from the body only after a long search. The medical examiner's verdict, however, failed to satisfy David Garrison Berger, the dead player's New York attorney, who left for Connecticut to demand reopening of the case. The verdict called despondency the cause of the death, an assumption questioned by the attorney.

Eddy, whose real name was Edward Gargiulo, had posted two letters to his brother, Joseph, who lives in Bridgeport, which, according to police, substantiated the opinion of suicide.

The player had ended a three-weeks engagement at the Roxy August 23, earlier in the year having acted as master of ceremonies at the theatre for 12 weeks. On the stage he sang barytone and played the violin, in addition to his duties as master of ceremonies.

Surviving, besides his brother, are his wife, Mrs. Margaret De Marco Gargiulo, and a son, Frank Gargiulo, 12.

Reinhardt Sees Religion As New Force in Screen, Stage

The next great force in stage and screen drama will be religion, last week in Hollywood predicted Max Reinhardt, famous producer, there to produce "Midsummer Night's Dream." WITH WHICH IS COMBINED "THE SHOWMAN"

33 MILLION DOLLARS IN GOVERNMENT LOANS NOW OBTAINABLE TO REPAIR AND MODERNIZE THEATRES

Recognizing in the government's application of the National Housing Act to theatres, an extraordinary opportunity for the motion picture industry, Better Theatres begins with this issue a special program of aid to those taking advantage of it. It seems that theatre rehabilitation has needed just such an impetus, for in response to the inquiry, "Do you think there must be considerable replacement and repairing to restore theatres to proper appearance and operating condition," which was contained in a questionnaire recently addressed to exhibitors in every section of the United States, 99.4% replied "Yes." ¶ Typical comment accompanying the answers is represented in statements like, "Practically all theatres I am acquainted with need many repairs and new equipment." . . . "Very much repairing needed—practically all smaller theatres run-down the past four years." ¶ Meeting needs thus extended are the established editorial and personal services of Better Theatres, to which are now added special articles of timely information and instruction on remodeling, beginning in this issue and developing into a comprehensive body of practical guidance in the issue of October 20—the annual Fall Buyers Number.

THERE'S ONLY ONE WAY TO Keep them Coming

KEEP THEM COMFORTABLE WHILE YOU ENTERTAIN THEM

It's the repeat business week after week that brings the real profit through the box office —YOU know that. Worry and plan about how to get more business through better or longer programs if you like, but don't let this important fundamental fact get by you:— ALL ELSE BEING EQUAL IT'S REAL COMFORT THAT BRINGS PEOPLE BACK AGAIN AND AGAIN.

When you consider what increased comfort can do for you in an added appeal to your public, and when you consider that skilled planning by H-W engineers can increase your seating capacity, then reseating presents itself in a new light. It becomes not an expense, not a luxury, but an important profitable investment that for years will pay a good return.

Without any obligation, our nearest representative will be glad to give you sound advice on reseating your theatre. Shall we have him call?

MILLIONS to IMPROVE THEATRES

$33,000,000 in Government-guaranteed loans are available, under the National Housing Act, for modernization of the nation's motion picture theatres.

Because this money can be secured easily and because the need for improvement is so great, thousands of theatre owners will call for Government credit, beginning the greatest period of remodeling, repairing and re-equipping in the history of the motion picture industry.

Alert to the importance of the time, BETTER THEATRES, acknowledged authority on theatre maintenance, has placed its staff and resources wholly in the service of its thousands of readers.

All its departments will be amplified to meet quickly the demands for immediate information—answers will be published to give them the widest currency—the work of the regular staff will be supplemented by contributions of authoritative leaders in all fields of theatre design and operation.

Peter M. Hulsken, J. T. Knight, Jr., and F. H. Richardson—all of whom have greatly influenced the physical operation of the theatre in America—will concentrate their efforts in support of the Government's theatre restoration program.

BETTER THEATRES has begun the campaign with this issue. The Fall Buyers' Number, out in October, will give emphasis and direction to the movement. Succeeding issues will carry on the work of restoring the motion picture theatre to the level of greatest usefulness.

The Fall Buyers' Number (October issue) will contain the following notable features among others:

PLANNING THE THEATRE. A service conducted by PETER M. HULSKEN, A.I.A., a question and answer department dealing with practical remodeling problems.

MAINTENANCE TABS. Conducted by J. T. KNIGHT, JR., a department devoted to the efficient operation of the physical theatre.

COMMENT ON PROJECTION. Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON, leading authority on projection in America.

OBSERVATIONS

The motion picture industry, as much as any industry, should welcome the opportunity represented in the application of the Housing Act to theatres. Primarily intended to lift the building industry out of stagnation and to stimulate employment in the building trades, the housing program can well mean to the motion picture theatre business as a whole a potent aid to its own recovery, and to many an individual theatre, salvation.

First theatre operators watched their properties deteriorate from negligence that was utterly unavoidable. Not in the most inveterate optimist was there enough hope to warrant going into debt for proper maintenance and replacement.

When hope finally did return, along about the summer of 1933, there was indeed a renewal of interest in normal maintenance, and reconditioning did assume substantial proportions. But by general acknowledgment the job due has been only fractionally done. Shabbiness, technical mediocrity, obsolescence are still widespread. What are we waiting for now?

If, particularly among those theatres outside of the large circuits, we have been waiting for a chance to charge higher admission prices, then the borrowing facilities now placed at the disposal of theatre owners achieves, for all practical purposes, quite as much, and does so far more quickly.

And time is very important, we believe. One may readily conceive reasons why we should not spend money to make our theatre properties worthy of our public. The public, however, is not the least interested in excuses.

One trouble is that it is too easy to convince ourselves that we are "getting by." We observe nothing to the contrary for a long time (especially when we do not want to contemplate the unpleasant), therefore "getting by" seems sufficient. So thought industry and finance until the great awakening of 1929. So thinks the man who, abusing his physical constitution throughout the day, drinks a glass of hot water before breakfast and says he feels fine! Money and talent and zeal have been expended in prodigious amounts for many years to make the motion picture what it has become, with the development of a finer theatre playing a leading part. Let our efforts now become less than this achievement and we doubtless shall learn—with the irreparability if not the suddenness of a collapse—what so many others have learned about the foolish practice of just "getting by."

Incredible though it may seem, one of the functions of the theatre most subjected to a policy of "getting by" remains projection. Even the more affluent circuits have retrenched in this department out of all proportion to its importance in the whole motion picture scheme, while elsewhere, by the very admissions of projectionists, an emergency is frequently the only excuse for a major repair.

There is yet another source of projection deficiency, one which has been least considered and which can be noted now with special timeliness. This is the continued use of antiquated equipment. Advances in design, perfecting the technique by which motion picture entertainment is ultimately produced, have brought about a profoundly new projection system in recent years. In this projection has kept pace with the development of the modern motion picture in other phases, including sound, superior panchromatic raw stock, a more dynamic cinematography, finer printing, more competent acting. Yet in hundreds of theatres the ultimate achievement of all these refinements is dependent upon projection equipments that represent only the growing pains of an infant art. Most of them were bought second-hand, and we are inclined to agree with those who have said to us, "It would have been better if the industry had bought them up and thrown them on the junk heap."

It so happens that a large number of these relics are to be found in projection rooms which are themselves ill suited to the tasks that have to be performed there today. Here is a job worthy of the Housing Act's great purpose. The loan can more than start it. It can achieve a projection room that gives patrons greater safety, and projectionists greater efficiency. Then may each such improvement be turned into an occasion on which the industry shall be rid of antiquated projection equipment by one batch more.—G. S.

Inspecting your theatre for U. S. remodeling loan

NHA insigne

HOW HOUSING ACT LOAN CAN BE OBTAINED

1. A sum up to $2,000 may be borrowed on each theatre, except that no owner may obtain loans on more than five properties without the special approval of the Federal Housing Administration in Washington.

2. Money must be used to make new improvements which will become a permanent part of the building. It cannot be applied to purchase of "movable" equipment.

3. Only a credit standing acceptable to the lending agency is necessary. Loan is made on promissory notes secured only by borrower's signature. No liens on property, or endorsers required.

4. Loans are obtained from local banks, loan associations, etc., that have qualified under the Housing Act provisions. If local institution is willing to loan more than $2,000 without government protection, an additional amount may be obtained.

5. Loans must be repaid in monthly installments. Borrower may pay as many installments at one time as he chooses, and total loan and interest must be repaid in a period of no longer than five years.

6. Rate of interest is determined in each case by the local lending agency, but cannot be higher than 5%.

7. Purposes of loan must be reviewed and approved by the lending agency, and provisions for carrying on the work are also subject to the bank's approval.

8. Borrower must show that his yearly income is at least five times what the annual payments would be on the loan he seeks.

HUNDREDS, AND potentially thousands, of owners of motion picture theatres will take advantage of the opportunity to rehabilitate and modernize their properties offered by the federal government through the provisions of the Housing Act now in effect. Housing Administration officials are confident of hundreds. Thousands are indicated by the relative ease with which loans may be obtained, and by the unfitness recognized as existing generally in consequence of several years of neglect and increasing obsolescence of the theatre.

With at least $33,000,000 available in loans for the remodeling of the industry's 16,800 houses, it is considered certain that the rehabilitation movement begun rather tentatively late last year, will now be accelerated, extended and intensified. During the last twelve months the level of operating conditions has been perceptibly raised above that low plane which had become a peril to the industry by the end of 1932, but in general reconditioning has remained greatly restricted, thousands of houses still being denied anything like proper attention pending further increases in admission prices. The $2,000 which may now be readily borrowed for each theatre will represent in many instances an immediate substitute for a surplus in net income not yet realized, at least in a measure permitting substantial remodeling.

Already statements like, "We intend to do this work with money borrowed through the government housing board," have begun to appear in requests to BETTER THEATRES for architectural and allied technical advice.

The extent to which a loan that is entirely secured under the provisions of the Housing Act, can be applied to equipment, depends upon the kind of equipment and the requirements for its installation. Official opinion will go little further than that no removable equipment comes within the meaning of the Act. Seats and carpeting, for example, have been officially adjudged removable. At the same time, loans for sound "and other equipment if actually built into the theatre" will be approved. In sound equipment circles, however, opinion has been expressed that this ruling eliminates soundheads and allied apparatus from the provisions of the Act. Thus with the possible exception of unique relationships requiring specific decision, the law is to be interpreted as follows:

Loans are to be applied only to remodeling of the building and its permanently attached parts. The money cannot be used directly for the purchase of movable equipment, although in many instances structural remodeling will substantially involve new equipment—(1) provide for proper installation of new equipment, (2) require new equipment because the tearing-away process impairs the efficiency of the old, (3) advise modernization of apparatus while other modernization is being done, and changes in fixtures and furnishings to harmonize with structural changes. A check-list of the improvements which may be financed with money borrowed under the Housing Act accompanies this discussion. In general these improvements relate to the following:

Acoustic Treatment	Plastering
Redecorating	Masonry
Structural Renewal	Concrete Work
Building Additions	Brick Work
Painting	Marquees
Tiling	Facades

Services of Architect

This list is only partial, but indicates the range of improvements which may be made, most of them directly involving a large variety of materials and supplies.

It has been suggested by the Housing Administration that the theatre owner should carefully inspect and check his property, then consult an architect or contractor. The Administration especially advises care in the selection of those who are to do the work and furnish supplies. Competitive bids are urged whenever they would be practical.

"No item," continues the Administration statement, "of repair, alteration or improvement should be an attempt to conceal building defects which are fundamental. If the work involves a large expenditure or major changes in a building—that is, if it involves alterations and new construction rather than mere repairs—it is wise to consult an architect or engineer. Your saving will be much greater than the fee of the architect, which may itself also be included in the loan."

The Housing program, for which the federal government has appropriated one-and-a-half-billion dollars, has been enthusiastically received by banks and other lending agencies. The number of institutions which have subscribed to the program and thus become eligible to make loans under the provisions of the Act, protected by the government fund, has already grown to 3,000. Almost any theatre owner will find one of these lending agencies in or conveniently near his community, and commonly he will find the prescribed facilities at an institution with which he has previously done business.

Because of the importance of a methodical, careful inspection of the property even before applying for the loan, so that the amount may not be any larger than conditions warrant, a detailed inspection guide and check-list, every item of which is within the provisions of the Act, is given below.

In most instances, such an inspection will be found to be necessary in order that the theatre owner may be enabled to make out an itemized list of intended improvements and what they will require in labor and materials, for submission to the lending agency. Although the following check-list is not offered as being absolutely complete, it is sufficiently comprehensive to serve as a helpful guide.

NEW SCHEMES IN MODERN REMODELING

By EUGENE CLUTE

Commencing a descriptive discussion of forms, methods and materials developed for or highly applicable to the modern film theatre

THE MARKS of age are to a theatre as crow's feet and sagging facial muscles to a woman—as anything significant of age and decrepitude to something that is supposed to be of Today. Maybe your theatre needs to have its face lifted. And a theatre's face, of course, takes in more than the front of the building. It includes every part that is seen by the public.

Unless you have a perfectly new theatre, or one that has just been thoroughly modernized, it will be well to look at your theatre with a critical eye, to see just how it must look to others. Possibly you are losing business to some up-to-date house not far away, and will find the reason in your theatre's need of renovation or modernization.

Maybe your theatre is not very old. It may not have antiquated columns, arches and window caps on the front, and a profusion of moulding panels and heavy plaster ornament inside, dating it as having been built for the last generation; nevertheless it may be out-moded. Changes in taste have been rapid, and buildings often age quickly. It may not cost much to modernize it, or it may. In any case, it is worthwhile to find out. Usually it pays, if properly done. Ideas are more important than materials, though the latter must be right if satisfactory results are to be obtained.

ADVANCED IDEAS

If you modernize, it is worthwhile to try to use ideas that are ahead of the style prevalent in the general run of motion picture theatres today, so that your theatre will have the advantage of immediate distinction and will not look old-fashioned later on. Care should be taken, however, not to mistake mere freakishness, which is short-lived, for sound ideas.

Many matters are involved in the modernization of a theatre besides improving its appearance, such as, perhaps, securing better sightlines, a better angle of projection or the utilization of waste space. But they are outside of the scope of this article, so, with this tribute to their importance, we pass them by.

STYLE AT LOW COST

A really clever architect is able to give style, distinction and attractiveness to a theatre while keeping the cost down and at the same time using good materials. He can do wonders with plain plaster, ingenious lighting and some effective materials well used. Cheap imitations of better materials are, as a rule, not only inferior in appearance, but they usually deteriorate rapidly. It is safe to say that the public does not like pretentious effects as much as many architects and theatre owners seem to think, so materials should be chosen with discretion and used with imagination and good taste.

A LOBBY SCHEME

For the entrance foyer, from which patrons gain some of their most important impressions of the theatre, it may be well to use a semi-permanent wall treatment that can be completely changed without great expense in another year or so, giving the theatre an appearance of newness.

A design by Ben Schlanger, New York architect, for a semi-permanent lobby treatment. See text.

One of the later lobby treatments exhibited in the Midtown theatre in New York, designed by Boak & Paris. See text.

This is a brand new idea. The scheme is to line the walls with built-in features of striking, but simple design, constructed of frankly inexpensive materials, as a seting for lobby displays which are incorporated in the wall treatment. This glorifies the advertising of the attractions into decoration for the theatre. It is novel; it can be very effective; and it costs little enough, so that it can be changed oftener than the usual wall decoration. Also the constantly changing displays give it an air of freshness.

One of the many ways in which this idea can be worked out is shown in the accompanying sketch of a semi-permanent treatment by Ben Schlanger, New York architect, a pioneer in modern theatre design who built the St. George Playhouse in Brooklyn, N. Y., in a modernistic style in 1927, when modernism was something very new in this country. In this sketch are seen display pylons, or shadow boxes, projecting about a foot from the wall. Each of these features is about 8 feet wide by 12 feet, 6 inches high, and has in its center a circular opening back of which is an advertising display with photographs representing the next or some future motion picture attraction.

These pylons may be made of plywood, or where fireproof material is required, of Sheetrock. In either case, they would be built on a frame work of furring attached to the structural walls. When plywood is used it can be finished simply by painting it any desired color. The rounded tops of the pylons would be made from shaped pieces of wood. If Sheetrock is used, the curved tops can be made by soaking the material in water to render it pliable, and bending it to the required shape. Sheetrock should be covered with canvas before paint is applied.

Between the display pylons are large wall panels covered with a rich damask fabric in modern style design, upon which are applied cut-out letters in colors and metallic effects, announcing attractions. The fabric should be stretched over a panel of soft wood into which nails to hold letters may be driven easily.

Above the row of doors that give entrance to the auditorium, is a wide wall panel that might be covered with a maroon suede leather fabric, which is very effective as a background for any cut-out lettering applied against it.

LOBBY LIGHTING

The lighting indicated in the Schlanger sketch is designed to provide a soft general illumination of the room while the ceiling is kept rather dark. This would make the brightly lighted displays appear very brilliant by contrast, playing them up as the chief notes in the decoration of the room and attracting attention to them.

To accomplish this, lamps in reflector strips are concealed along the top of each of the side walls, just below a plaster cove. Unlike most coves, this curved surface is not continuous with the ceiling, but is so designed as to reflect the light out into the room and at the same time keep it off the ceiling. The cove might be covered with Salubra patterned very faintly in a light gray-and-yellow modern conventional design on a white background. To light the displays there would be lamps in reflectors concealed above and below the circular openings. The cove lighting would have lamps in colors as well as white so that various color effects might be produced. The wall treatment could be effectively painted

FITTING OUT THE THEATRE REST ROOM

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

Planning, equipping and maintaining facilities that are fundamental to the attractiveness of the modern motion picture playhouse

THE EXPENSES in connection with the operation of motion picture theatres are many, and various attempts have been made to classify them. Apparently some believe that the solution lies in a proper classification of them, others feel that controlled expense means minimum expense, and further, some think that budgeted expense means economic operation. All of these ideas are only partly right. Taken singly, each is in a large measure absolutely in error—and this for one basic reason: the attitude of the men in the business toward expense, plus the lack of specific knowledge of proper maintenance of buildings and equipment.

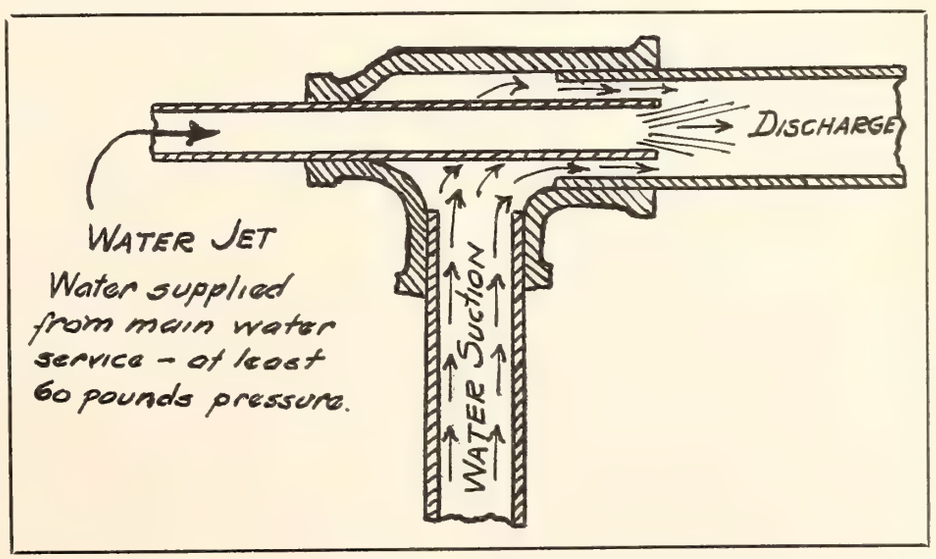
Huge sums are gambled yearly on pictures and other entertainment, exploitation and publicity, and nothing is thought of it. But the expense for the proper upkeep of buildings and equipment is always begrudgingly approved, because in general opinion there are no direct box office retures from such expenditures! Wear and tear, on both buildings and equipment is so regular, consistent and positive, and the loss of patronage due to a dilapidated, shabby and dirty theatre is so gradual that not many accept the physical condition of theatre and equipment as one of the important causes of declining box office grosses.

The ability of the manager at infrequent intervals, on an outstanding picture, to pack the theatre, leads executives to believe and say that "all we need is good pictures." They seem to forget that in the days when business was regular and consistently good, we were then too showing good, bad and indifferent pictures—but in those days every operator and manager prided himself on the condition of his theatre. Every effort was made to make it attractive and pleasing. He was alert to the fact that the smallest detail counts.

Today, generally speaking, the motion picture theatres of this country are in the worst physical condition in the history of the industry. The conditions even appear to the public as being much worse because the public has watched fine properties become dilapidated and run down right before its eyes. That a well-kept theatre, clean and up-to-date is a silent salesman for you in your community, is truer today than ever before. Decadent theatre operation is Exhibition's greatest hazard in its efforts to attain profitable returns.

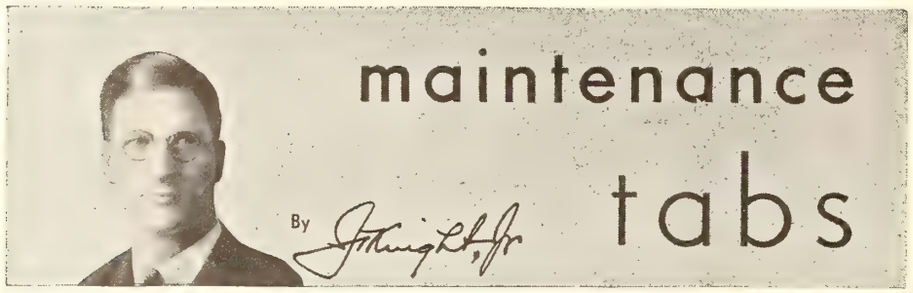
From 1922 to 1930 we educated the public to expect a certain high type of theatre operation regardless of whether or not the theatre was large or small. In 1934 we apparently expect them to revert to the "shooting gallery" calibre of operation. What's more, we expect them to like it! The whole attitude on the part of the industry is shortsighted, illogical, bad business and doesn't become showmen.

WELL FITTED RESTROOMS



TOILET ROOMS are about the most personal element in the facilities of a theatre today. Knowing this, if a theatre can afford to stay open and operate, that theatre cannot afford to neglect proper maintenance of the toilet facilities. The foregoing statement sounds like a paradox should anyone take the trouble to investigate twenty or thirty theatres at random. Nevertheless, the theatres that neglect the restroom facilities are driving patrons away from the box office. Parents won't let their children attend theatres with the possibility that they may make use of the rest rooms, where the toilet facilities are badly kept, are frequently unsanitary and may possibly be the means of spreading disease. As for adults—well, they most assuredly feel no good will toward a theatre where restroom facilities are repulsive.

I heard the mother of a young woman who had taken her daughter and a party of young friends to one of the ace Broadway theatres, state that she had gone to that theatre for the last time because of the conditions she observed in the women's room. This is hard to believe, I know, but the information came to me first-hand, so I must believe it. My remarks have never been directed primarily to the "super" deluxe houses, for it is the condition existing in the neighborhood and small town houses that needs immediate attention. The foregoing remark only indicates that the managers of the large theatres, too, can well afford to check up.



The federal government, through the National Housing Act, has made available a huge sum of money that may be used by theatres for reconditioning, and I cannot think of a better way of using money thus obtained than in the modernization of the toilet facilities, especially in the smaller theatres.

FIXTURES

All fixtures, such as lavatories, slop sinks, urinals and toilet bowls should be set or fixed to an impervious floor. Many kinds of tile and composition flooring offer a wide variety to meet all requirements of price, color and texture. Where the floor joins the baseboards of the wall, be sure the joint is curved so that there will be no

CRUDE OILS: The crude oils found in this country are generally of but two classes—the paraffin base oils from the Appalachian mountain regions, and some from the Central West; and the non-paraffin base oils of Texas and California. The paraffin base oils have a much higher boiling point, which makes them valuable for high-grade lubricating oils. Such oil is dark brown in color with a greenish opalescent tinge. We all have used these oils in our automobiles. The Texas and California oils, after having had removed the gasoline, kerosene and naphtha, provide the great bulk of the fuel oil used.

HAZARDS: The terrible fire aboard the Morro Castle with its great loss of life, should remind every theatre manager and theatre executive that we are responsible for protecting the lives of the theatre-going public. Each manager should personally conduct a fire drill and assure himself that each employe has a definite idea about his responsibilities under fire or panic conditions. Each manager should check the fire equipment to see when extinguishers were refilled, whether the heads are firmly on fire axes, whether pike poles are in the most advantageous locations, whether fire hose is old, dried out or rotted. In brief, go over your theatre with a fine tooth comb and be sure that every piece of equipment, and every employe is prepared to meet any emergency.

LAMP LIFE: Unsatisfactory lamp (electric bulb) life, which may represent costly operation, might be the result of fluctuating voltage. Check this with your lighting company. Or it may be low voltage—check this with a voltmeter at the lamp socket. Or it may be inadequate wire size—check this with a capable licensed electrician. Or it may be that you are buying lamps of the wrong voltage. The result of the first three investigations should indicate the answer to the last.

When the voltage supplied to a lamp is less than the voltage that the lamp was manufactured for the actual light given by that lamp is greatly lessened. If the voltage supplied is too high the life of the lamp is very much shortened.

Maybe most of your trouble is just dirty lighting fixtures. Soap and warm water may be used to good advantage. In the case of crystals, alcohol might be more satisfactory.

LADDER SAFETY: Are the ladders used around your theatre safe? A good ladder should be constructed out of straight-grained spruce rungs and steps should be mortised into side rails and anchored there. Every ladder should be strongly braced. On marble, concrete or slippery floors all ladders should be lashed in place so they can't slip, or else a man should be stationed at the bottom to prevent slipping. When did you personally inspect the ladders in your theatre? Don't send an employe up a ladder that you, personally, would not climb. An injury might cost the theatre a substantial sum of money in damages or Compensation Act claims.

RUBBISH: The careless accumulations of rubbish, dust and dirt, especially oily rags or rags that have been used for certain polishing processes all indicate bad housekeeping. But most important, such conditions are real fire hazards. The possibility of spontaneous ignition of rubbish is lessened by cleanliness.

angle to catch dirt that retains germs and odors. Marble, tile, composition or metal is far superior to wood for the baseboard in toilet rooms.

Toilet fixtures with exposed piping have today been outmoded by new designs where unsightly pipe connections are concealed from view. All first-class fixtures are made of enamelled iron or vitreous material, therefore non-absorbent material. The glazed finish retards any kind of mechanical obstruction because of the difficulty of anything adhering to it. The next important consideration is to supply each fixture with a sufficient volume and velocity of water so that the entire bowl is certain always to be flushed and refilled with clean water.

TYPES OF BOWLS

Toilet bowls are of three general classifications: (a) syphon jet, (b) syphon action, (c) hoppers. Of these the syphon jet and the syphon action are proper for theatre installations, hence we won't discuss the hopper type.

SYPHON JET TYPE BOWL

SYPHON JET types are the best because they have the most positive and sanitary flush action. This type gets its name from the fact that at the moment of flushing a small jet of water is discharged from the bottom of the bowl trap into the discharge arm of the bowl. The outlet arm is so constructed that the water of flushing is held back sufficiently long, until the entire outlet arm is filled, which starts a syphon action which clears the bowl completely. This syphon action, combined with the force of the jet of water from the bottom of the bowl, makes this type best for theatre use. This type can be connected to either a high or low flush-tank, or may be flushed by a direct-connected flush-valve of the slow-closing type. Four to 6 gallons of water are required to properly flush this type of bowl.

The syphon action bowls work on the same principle of syphonic actions as described above for the syphon jet type, except that they do not have the jet of water emitted up into the discharge arm.

FLUSH-VALVES

All toilet fixtures which are flushed may be operated with flush-valves directly connected to the water supply lines. Flush-valves are far more up-to-date equipment than flush-tanks, and are much better from the standpoints of efficiency and appearance. It generally requires water at from 50 to 60 pounds pressure to operate flush-valves properly. Volume of water is also important, so large-sized pipe is necessary. Fifty pounds pressure with 1¼-inch pipe will operate a flush-valve better than 100 pounds pressure in a ¾-inch pipe. A separate system of water supply should be planned for the proper operation of two or more flush-valves. To arrive at proper pipe sizes for the water supply, figure each valve needs the equal of 1-inch pipe.

COMPARTMENTS

In many theatres toilet compartments are entirely too small or badly arranged. Absolutely the smallest space to be tolerated for compartments where the doors open out is 2 feet, 4 inches by 3 feet, 3 inches. Even these minimum dimensions depend to a very great extent upon the particular type of toilet bowl in use. Toilet bowls that sit far out from the wall could not be housed in a compartment of these minimum dimensions. The compartments are more comfortable if larger, but don't waste your time or money in trying to make them smaller. If the door to the compartment opens in, the dimensions in the clear inside must be at least 3x5 feet.

TUBULAR LIGHTING IN A NEW BRITISH AUDITORIUM

An illumination note on the Regal theatre recently opened in Southampton, England, as a unit of the County Cinema's provincial circuit

SITUATED ON the site of the old Alexandra theatre, the Regal at Southampton, England, is an addition to the rapidly growing circuit of ultra-modern theatres which is being built up by County Cinemas, Ltd., under the direction of C. J. Donada. It is in many respects typical of the trend of theatre planning in Great Britain, where medium capacity houses (the Regal has 1,756 seats) are often commercially sounder propositions than 3,000-seaters. In the case of the Regal, the planned capacity has been achieved by a skilful use of every inch of site space, and a spacious and dignified modern building has arisen in the place of an obviously "dated" legitimate house.

Erected to plans by Messrs. Frank T. Verity, F.R.I.B.A., and S. Beverley, F.R.I.B.A., who planned the Plaza, Carlton and Shepherd's Bush theatres in London, and the Paramount theatres in Paris, Manchester, Leeds and Newcastle, the Regal has a stage of 40 x 20 feet, and an auditorium of 76 x 153 feet.

The stalls (main floor) capacity is 1,078, and there are 678 balcony seats. The general plan is rectangular, and a feature is the relative height of the building, giving a notable sense of spaciousness with an uninterrupted view of the whole stage from every seat.

The longitudinally coved ceiling, illuminated with tubular lighting, carries out and amplifies a scheme noticed in the entrance foyer, where the illumination is by means of battens set in a plaster coved ceiling. Here a striking note is achieved by the use of strongly contrasting colors which are modified in the theatre itself to shades of copper, of which the highlights are provided by the proscenium and the ornate organ grills which flank it on both sides.

Externally a stone facade is used with a lower story of marble, the upper part being broken by the broad windows of the first floor cafe lounge, in which the roof lighting and general color scheme is on the lines already described.

CHATTEL MORTGAGES : SALES CONTRACTS

By LEO T. PARKER

Analyzing recent higher court decisions pertaining to equipment purchase paper and other points of theatre law

THE COURTS have consistently held that under ordinary installment sales contracts, a theatre operator may be compelled to pay the full amount due if he fails to make one installment payment in violation to the contract. However, this rule of the law is not applicable particularly with respect to talking machine and other theatre equipment which is sold under a contract by the terms of which the seller agrees to keep it in operating order.

EQUIPMENT INSTALLMENT CONTRACT

CASE

For instance, in the late case of RCA Photophone v. Sinnott (30 P. [2d] 761, Portland, Ore.) it was disclosed that a seller entered into a written agreement whereby it agreed to lease to a theatre owner certain electricical sound-reproducing equipment for a period of ten years. The rental was to be paid in weekly installments of $47.60 for a period of 104 weeks. The sum of $48.35 was paid upon execution of the contract.

The contract contained the following clause: "In the event of default in the payment of any installment of this note, the holder thereof may at its option declare the remaining installments not then due hereunder immediately due and payable. The maker and endorsers do hereby waive presentment, protest and notice of dishonor and protest as well as the benefit of any homestead, exemption or insolvency law."

The contract also provided that the seller would from time to time inspect the equipment and supervise such repairs and adjustments thereto as may in its opinion be necessary for the operation and maintenance of the equipment. Also, the contract contained numerous other provisions, the breach of any one of which entitled the seller, at its option, to terminate the agreement, repossess the equipment, and retain payments made as a rental charge. Furthermore, any breach upon the part of the theatre owner made him liable for the balance due under the contract and for any damages sustained by the seller by reason thereof, as specified in the above mentioned clause.

After the theatre owner had made 36 weekly payments of $47.60 each, he defaulted in payment and the seller repossessed the equipment. Immediately thereafter the seller filed suit to collect the entire balance due from the theatre owner on the original contact price. However, in view of the fact that this contract contained the usual clause by which the seller agreed to permit the theatre owner to utilize the equipment and by which the seller agreed to keep the equipment in operating order, the higher court held the theatre owner not required to pay the balance due on the original purchase contract, and said:

DECISION

"In the instant case the agreement to make the weekly payments was based upon consideration of the use of the electrical equipment and the service which plaintiff (seller) was to render in keeping the equipment in operating order during the first two years of the contract term. The covenant to pay was dependent upon the covenant of the plaintiff (seller) to permit defendant's (theatre owner's) use of the equipment and to render the service above mentioned. When plaintiff repossessed the equipment it was not entitled to the unpaid balance, for it was not in a position to allege or prove performance upon its part."

WRITTEN CONTRACT NOT VARIED

THE LAW is well established that the contents of a written contract, note, or chattel mortgage cannot be varied by testimony introduced with respect to verbal agreements. In other words in order that the meaning of a written contract shall be varied or changed it is necessary that a written memorandum or other signed written agreement shall be presented by the complaining party showing that such modification was authorized in writing.

CASE

For example, in Lippman v. Pictures Corporation (157 Atl. 433, New Castle County, Del.), it was shown that a theatre operator purchased a motion picture machine under a contract of sale by the terms of which the seller took a chattel mortgage on the machine to secure payments due. The theatre operator signed a note for the balance due on the machine. Later litigation arose with respect to payment of the note. The theatre operator contended that he should not be required to pay the note, because he had made a verbal agreement with the seller of the motion picture machine to the effect that the latter agreed to look solely to the income from pictures to receive payment for the machine.

However, it is interesting to observe that the court refused to consider the testimony, with respect to this oral agreement, and held the theatre operator liable for payment of the note, saying:

DECISION

"Undoubtedly, the delivery of a written contract is necessary to give it binding effect, and delivery is a question of intent; and the character of the delivery, whether absolute or conditional, may be established by parol.....But, while it may be shown that a contract is not to be delivered until a condition is performed, yet it cannot be shown by word, that actual delivery was made under an agreement, that a condition should be performed, and that the contract should not be operative unless it was performed. In one case, the purpose of the proof is to show want of a legal delivery, but in the other case the effect of the proof is to contradict an instrument, absolute on its face, by showing, contrary to its terms, that it is not absolute, but only conditional."

WHAT IS A CHATTEL MORTGAGE?

CONSIDERABLE discussion has risen from time to time whether an instrument is a chattel mortgage by the terms of which a purchaser agrees to pay a specified amount at the time of the purchase, and a stipulated amount each month thereafter until the article purchased is fully paid for. Generally speaking, the courts have held that an agreement of this character is a chattel mortgage, notwithstanding the fact that it contains a clause intended to be otherwise.

CASE

For illustration, in Malchoff v. Austin-Morris Company (52 S. W. [2d] 682, Austin, Tex.) it was disclosed that an operator purchased a musical instrument for the sum of $1,288, $100 on delivery and $54 per month, with 10 per cent. interest on past-due payments. The contract further provided that when the aggregate sum was paid the instrument was to belong to the purchaser and that the monthly payments were as "rental" payments and that default as to one would mature all of such payments.

Later litigation arose over the question whether or not the contract of sale really is a chattel mortgage and, also, whether the purchaser was bound to pay for the instrument.

It was contended by the purchaser that the musical instrument was not satisfactory, and that it did not perform as it was supposed to for the purposes intended.

It is interesting to observe that the Court held the contract to be a chattel mortgage and, although the lower court held the purchaser liable for payment, the higher court reversed the verdict, saying:

DECISION

"In addition to and notwithstanding the terms of the instrument, the testimony of all parties clearly shows that they considered the transaction a sale of the merchandise; and that the monthly payments, though recited as rentals, were in fact but installments due on the purchase price of the merchandise. The undisputed testimony of the parties, in addition to the terms of the contract, showed that appellant (purchaser) was to have title to the property when the amounts named in the contract had been paid.....A contract very similar to the one before us was held to be a mortgage.....There was no express warranty of fitness in the contract, and appellant's (purchaser's) defense was predicated upon an implied warranty by appellee of fitness of the machine for the purposes for which it was sold to him.....Since the adoption in many states of the Uniform Sales Act, the distinction between the liability of a dealer who does not produce or manufacture the article sold by him and that of the manufacturer himself has been largely eliminated, and the trend of decisions..... is to limit the doctrine of 'caveat emptor' and to extend that of implied warranty of fitness of the article to perform the services for which it is sold."

SELLER LIABLE IN DAMAGES

A SELLER WHO breaches a contract of sale may be liable in damages to the purchaser. Another important point of the law is that where a seller performs a breach, the purchaser is entitled to recover from the seller all expenses incurred, as a result of the breach, plus the damages sustained.

CASE

For instance, in Deiter v. Frick Company (169 S. E. 297, Columbia, S. C.), it was disclosed that a purchaser and a seller entered into a contract of sale by the terms of which the latter sold to the former a machine and guaranteed to replace defective parts within a specified period of time. Before this time had expired the machine required repairs and the purchaser requested the seller to replace the parts. The seller refused to do so and the purchaser was unable to operate the machine. He sued the seller to recover the cost of the parts that should have been replaced, plus a considerable amount of money for damages sustained as a result of being unable to operate the machine. In holding the seller liable, the court said:

DECISION

"When the machine showed defects within the time limit fixed by the contract, plaintiff (purchaser) had the right to have the defective parts replaced free of charge. . . . He (purchaser) notified defendant (seller) of the special and peculiar damages he would suffer if his machine continued to be shut down and idle for lack of these parts. . . . In this case there is evidence of definite and concrete losses of a special nature which plaintiff suffered. . . ."

WHAT IS LEGAL ACCEPTANCE?

CONTROVERSY HAS existed from time to time with regard to the legal meaning of the term "legal acceptance" of purchased merchandise. Generally speaking, purchased merchandise is not legally accepted by a purchaser until the latter performs some act which definitely indicates that he intends to keep and pay for the merchandise.

CASE

For example, in Kaminsky v. Levine (161 Atl. 741, Pittsburgh, Pa.), it was shown that a buyer and a seller of a machine had a legal controversy with respect to the right of the purchaser to rescind the contract after the machine has been installed in his place of business.

The evidence in the case shows that the seller first offered to sell the machine to the purchaser as it was and without responsibility for putting it into running order for $150. This was not satisfactory to the purchaser whereupon the seller offered to install the machine and put it into running order for $200. This offer was accepted. The buyer paid the full purchase price and the seller gave him a receipt in full and written guarantee for sixty days.

The machine was installed in the purchaser's place of business but it did not operate properly, and the seller sent an employe who was instructed to repair it. However, the employe failed to make the necessary adjustments before the expiration of the sixty-day guarantee and the purchaser demanded the seller to return the full purchase price. When the seller refused to refund the purchase price the purchaser filed suit to recover the pur-

LAW AFFECTING USE OF CHECKS

BY M. MARVIN BERGER
MEMBER NEW YORK BAR

BEFORE LEAVING the subject of negotiable instruments, it is necessary to touch upon some legal aspects of the most commonly used form of negotiable instruments; namely, checks.

A check may be defined as a bill of exchange drawn upon a bank and payable on demand. By its wording it directs payment by the bank of a certain amount to the person to whose order it is drawn.

There are several special rules relating to checks. One of the most important is that a check must be presented for payment within a reasonable time after it is issued or the maker of the check will be discharged from liability on the check to the extent of the loss caused by such delay.

Another important rule affects the certification of checks. When a check is certified by the holder, the effect is to discharge the maker and the indorsers from liability on the check. In other words, by obtaining the certification, the holder agrees to look to the bank alone for payment. However, when the check is certified by the maker, he still remains liable as if the check had not been certified.

In connection with certification of checks, it must be noted that a bank is under no obligation either to the maker or holder to certify a check and the bank's refusal to certify does not amount to refusal to pay. A bank is however under a duty to the maker of a check to pay the check if it is properly presented and if there are funds on deposit to the maker's credit to pay it. If a bank refuses to pay a check when it can pay, the bank is liable in damages to the depositor, but is not liable to the payee who must look to maker of check for payment.

A bank may pay out its depositor's money only on his genuine order. And so if a bank makes payment of a check, the signature or indorsement of which is forged, or the amount of which is raised, the bank becomes liable to the depositor for the amount paid under the forged or raised check. In some states, there is a limitation of one year on the bank's liability to the depositor. In other words, if within one year after the bank returns to the depositor a cancelled check, the signature to which has been forged or the amount of which has been raised, the depositor fails to inform the bank of the forgery or raising, its liability comes to an end. The one year rule does not apply to cases of forgery of indorsements, the bank remaining liable in such cases even after the expiration of one year.

If the depositor has been negligent in failing to discover the forgery, he cannot hold the bank. The courts have said that in order to be considered free from negligence, a depositor, upon the monthly return of his cancelled vouchers, must, at the very least, do the following:

1. He must compare the cancelled checks returned by the bank with the check stubs of his book.
2. He must compare balance in bank's statement with stub book balance.
3. He must compare returned checks with list of checks in bank's statement.

chase price contending that he had not accepted the machine, although it had been installed and was being tested.

DECISION

It is interesting to observe that the lower court held the purchaser entitled to recover back the amount of money paid for the machine and the higher court upheld this verdict, saying:

"We think it is clear that the plaintiff (purchaser) never accepted the machine. . . . The evidence all points the other way, and indicates a sale on trial. . . . The use of such a machine by the buyer pending attempts by the seller to make it work satisfactorily does not constitute such an acceptance, nor is the buyer bound to rescind the contract as long as there is a reasonable likelihood of the seller being able to overcome the defects and make the machine work satisfactorily."

WHEN PURCHASER RESCINDS CONTRACT

MANY PERSONS believe that when a theatre operator writes to a seller and states that purchased equipment is entirely satisfactory, that such purchaser cannot later rescind the contract although later the purchaser discovers that the equipment does not meet with the requirements of the guarantee. However, this is not the law.

For illustration, in the late case of Griffith (165 S. E. 209, Atlanta, Ga.), it was shown that a seller and a purchaser entered into a contract of sale. The contract contained a clause guaranteeing the equipment.

After the seller had shipped the apparatus and the purchaser had time to inspect it, he wrote to the seller a letter stating that he was well pleased with the machine.

After the purchaser had more experience with the equipment he found that it did not or would not meet with the requirements of the guarantee and he attempted to rescind the contract. The seller contended that by writing the above mentioned letter the purchaser had forfeited his right to rescind the contract. However, in reaching its decision the court held otherwise.

CONTRACT IS HELD DIVISIBLE

ALTHOUGH ONE or more clauses in a contract may be invalid, the remainder of the contract is enforceable providing the various clauses in the contract are not dependent upon the ones held void. In other words, where a contract is written in such a manner that different clauses are divisible, and independent of each other, the valid portions of the contract may be enforced. Therefore, the fact that a portion of the contract may be void does not relieve the contracting parties from liability for failure to fulfill the obligation expressed in the valid clauses. So held a higher court in the recent case of Walker Theatre Company v. R. K. O. Distributing Corporation (189 N. E. 162, Indianapolis, Ind.)

CASE

In this case it was shown that a theatre owner and a film distributor entered into a contract containing various clauses. Some of the clauses were held void but these clauses were independent of other clauses. The legal question arose whether the valid clauses of the contract were enforceable. In holding in the affirmative, the court said:

DECISION

"If said clause is invalid, then each party is excused from a compliance therewith. But if said clause is held invalid, then is the entire contract invalid and unenforceable by the appellee herein? We think not. . . . The contract sued upon is not as to its other provisions rendered invalid for the reason that the remainder is lawful."

RIVAL UNION PICKETS THEATRE

VARIOUS COURTS have held that a theatre owner, who is threatened in his business life by the violence of the unions, or by other wrongful acts, may have the aid of the Courts to preserve himself from damage threatened by recourse to unlawful means.

On the other hand, the right of the workmen to organize to better their con-

CHECKING YOUR LIGHTING: A SERIES OF FORMS

The third of a group of forms for use as inspection guides and report blanks is offered below. The two previous forms concerned the front of the theatre, as seen from distant and from nearby points. The lobby is covered in the present form, which will be followed by one for foyers, and one for the auditorium. These forms, which have been prepared by the Engineering Department of the General Electric Company, may be easily copied on a typewriter for use in inspection whenever occasion arises.

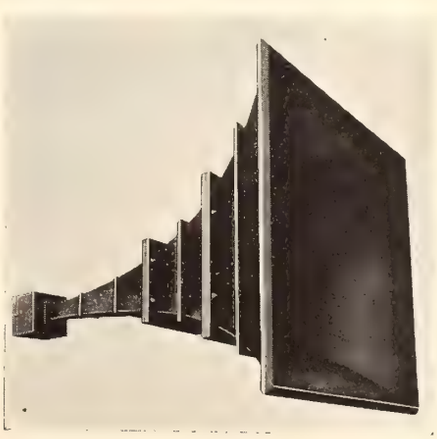
HOOKING UP LOUDSPEAKERS IN EXTENDED FREQUENCY REPRODUCTION

By JAMES FRANK, JR.

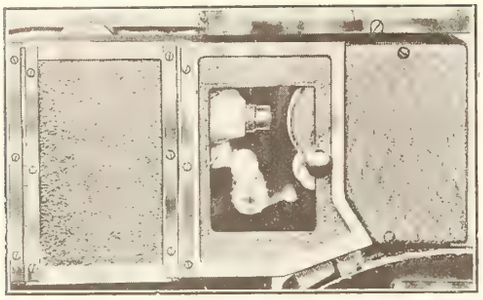


Some recent developments in arrangement of speaker systems as represented in late RCA Photophone installations

SINCE THE introduction of theatre reproducing equipment of the extended frequency and volume range type, two years ago, a number of interesting developments have taken place in loudspeaker systems. The requirements of a good theatre reproducing equipment designed or adapted for the reproduction of an extended frequency range necessitate a loudspeaker system which will, when used with a suitable amplifier system, reproduce sound uniformly in the audible frequency range of from 40 to 10,000 cycles; and the reproduced sound must be without distortion over the entire range.

The first thought that may occur to you is, "Why should I be interested in sound equipment for my theatre which will reproduce extended frequency and volume range?" In simple terms, here's the reason: In order to bring out the full entertainment values of present-day film programs, which is what every theatre exhibitor wants, it is necessary to reproduce the recorded sound as nearly as possible like the sound actually created in the modern recording studio. The introduction of artificial or mechanical sounds, or the elimination of any of the desired sounds by the reproducing equipment, detracts from the original rendition and is therefore undesirable.

On this basis let us see why the range from 40 to 10,000 cycles is necessary. The human voice from the lowest bass to the highest soprano, has a fundamental range of 96 to 1,152 cycles, while musical instruments go from 40 (lowest bass viol) to 4,608 (highest piccolo) cycles. The frequencies below 96, and above 1,152 cycles for human voices, and above 4,608 cycles for musical instruments up to 10,000 cycles, are those that enable us to distinguish the individuality of various sources of sound. If we were to reproduce only up to 4,000 cycles it would be harder to distinguish between male and female voices and those of various individuals. Likewise, a violin would not sound very different from a piccolo. That is why it is so important to reproduce all of the frequencies from 40 to 10,000 cycles uniformly.



The acoustic conditions of the auditorium in which the equipment is to be installed is of great importance in determining the type of loudspeaker most suitable. The proper type of loudspeaker should be of such design as to obtain a maximum of efficiency and a minimum of interference from reflecting surfaces that would cause unintelligibility. A directional type of horn loudspeaker is, therefore, necessary to direct the sound most efficiently to the audience and to prevent the sound from striking undesirable reflecting surfaces and causing unintelligibility of speech. The use of this type of loudspeaker would then reduce to a minimum the amount of reflecting surface in an auditorium that might require acoustical treatment for satisfactory sound reproduction. It has been found that the fewer sources required for proper distribution of the reproduced sound to the audience areas, the better the illusion and the better the sound. Furthermore, the fewer number of types of loudspeakers required for reproduction of the desired frequency range, the better the sound. Where the response characteristics of two or more types of loudspeakers overlap, interference occurs. From the practical point of view, the fewer types of loudspeakers employed, the simpler the installation and the lower the cost of maintenance.

Ten-foot directional baffle loudspeaker.

Two years ago, the engineers of the RCA Victor Company developed a loudspeaker of the straight exponential horn type with dynamic cone speaker unit designed to permit equal reproduction of sound from 40 to 10,000 cycles. To accomplish this it was necessary to design a baffle horn. The rate of flare and size of mouth were determined by the required performance. The use of a 4-inch square throat results in a reduction of overall length and improves low frequency response. The directional characteristics and the uniformity of distribution of sound are governed by the length of the horn. The low frequency at which uniform reproduction ceases also depends on the length. Directional effect and response at low frequencies were emphasized in an effort to make low frequency reproduction as independent of the acoustical properties of the auditorium as possible.

A 10-foot directional baffle loudspeaker employing a 6-inch dynamic cone speaker unit, was introduced with RCA Victor Photophone "High Fidelity" reproducing equipment in December, 1932. But a large proportion of the theatres were not built to permit the use of this 10-foot loudspeaker. Because of this, loudspeakers were developed to be used where only a limited space is available behind the screen.

Three shorter types of directional baffle loudspeakers use the same 6-inch dynamic cone speaker unit, and attain the same frequency range for the "highs," but the low frequency cut-off point is somewhat higher than for the large loudspeaker. In conjunction with these loudspeakers, a low frequency directional baffle loudspeaker is used.

In such a combination (a short directional baffle loudspeaker—37-inch or 25-inch—with a low-frequency loudspeaker) both types of loudspeakers are directional and the latter type loudspeaker does not reproduce up into the fundamental speech frequencies (100 to 300 cycles).

In smaller theatres where the proximity of reflecting surfaces to the loudspeaker increases the reproduction of low frequencies, there should be used only a minimum number of loudspeakers as large as 60-inch or 37-inch, as may be required for suitable coverage. A 60-inch speaker actually requires a minimum space of 63¼-inch behind the sound screen, and a 37-inch speaker requires a minimum of 40¼-inch.

Where permanent installation of loudspeakers behind the sound screen is desired, the speakers may be mounted on inexpensive wood or channel iron racks, or, if possible, hung on chains from the ceiling. The low-frequency loudspeaker should be set on the floor. The small loudspeakers should be located at approximately two-thirds the height of the screen. When a low-frequency speaker has been designed to meet the necessary conditions, it can be assembled with 25-inch speakers as a single large unit by hinging the mouths of the 25-inch loudspeakers to the top of the low-frequency loudspeaker and permanently fastening the speaker boxes at the correct height to the back of the low-frequency speaker. This entire unit can then be flown, either with the screen, or alone, with an overall depth of 26 inches. In some cases it may be desirable to place such a unit in a mono-rail cage.

Where a 10-foot loudspeaker is used, it must be either permanently installed or split into two sections and hinged. In the Radio City Music Hall, where stage space is at a premium, the combination of 10-foot loudspeakers and 60-inch speakers, are split and hinged so that they can be folded into a mono-rail cage, which carries them off-stage and then up into the fly.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT AND THE PROJECTIONIST UNION

I TALK WITH a great many exhibitors and theatre managers on various topics connected with theatre work, and almost without exception, somewhere in the course of the conversation the exhibitor or manager will drag in the union and proceed to lay at its door every ill he can think of. He complains that he cannot hire the men he desires to, he is not permitted by the union to do this, that or the other thing. In fact, the union is, it would seem, running things to the everlasting bow-wows at a fast gallop.

Freely granting that some union officials over-step their authority, freely granting that unions not infrequently do things they might better not do, freely granting that unions make rules that might very well not be made—still, looking back through the years to the time when what few unions there were had next to no power, I find myself quite unable to blame the union too much.

Fifty years ago the employer was in absolute control insofar as had to do with the treatment of his employes. Take projectionists, for example: Even as late as 1910 projectionists in the best theatres in great cities — Chicago, for instance — received only $16 or $18 a week, the latter being a top-notch wage paid in only two or three downtown theatres. In outlying theatres the wage was from $8 to $14 a week, with hours ranging from ten a day down to the number prevailing at theatres with performances only in the evening.

But that is not all the story. He must hand-crank the projector, and in the all-day theatres, usually eat his supper with one hand while "grinding them out" with the other. That's not hearsay, mark you well. I did it myself! But his day began long before the show did and lasted long after, for in the morning he must trek down to an exchange, perhaps miles away, paying his own carfare, wait his turn, pick up his "show," lug it to the theatre, look the reels over and make any needed repairs. Then when the show closed he must hand-tote the films back down to the exchange, paying his own carfare again, whereupon the day's work was done as soon as he got back home. Not infrequently I started for the exchange at 8 a.m. and had to hustle like the very devil to be ready to open the show at 1 o'clock.

Outrageous, unreasonable treatment such as that brought the union into existence and built it up. It now has very real power, and the exhibitor, in view of the past, perhaps hasn't too much ground to stand on when he, in his turn, complains of abuses.

But that is not what was in mind when I started this discourse. Many union officers have in their official position the first taste of power. It is perhaps nothing more than a natural reaction that they "feel their oats" and very often are not inclined to temper power with quite as much judgment and common sense as they might. That is unfortunate, but rather inevitable, just as it is inevitable that many theatre managers are obsessed with their sense of power and importance as employer to such extent that they are really unable to deal fairly or even sensibly with employes. The employe of the old days was expected to "do as he was told," regardless. He was not presumed to have brains, self-respect or much of anything else except ability to do a routine more or less effectively. Such a situation of course made invariably for poor, inefficient service.

And now let us get down to brass tacks. What this rambling prelude has led up to is this: The union, Mr. Exhibitor and Mr. Manager, is here. It is a firmly established fixture. It has very real power. It must be dealt with, regardless of whether or no that fact is pleasing to you. The point is, it is fact, and fact that cannot be side-stepped.

And, Mr. Union Officer and Mr. Union Man, the situation is by no means a one-sided one. The exhibitor and manager have certain well defined rights. You are not the only one possessed of that article. There are limits to the wages the exhibitor can pay. There are limits to the extent to which his authority can be defied without smashing the whole works. He is and must be the boss. To many cooks spoil the broth, and one man must have the general direction of any institution for success.

The union was founded (I was one who worked actively and hard to build it up long years before some of you were born) on the rock of justice and fair dealing between man and man, which same "rock" has, I am bound to admit, been very seriously cracked on many occasions by the unions themselves.

Now, gentlemen, don't you really think it might be very much better to meet together as friends, seeking to ascertain by honest investigation, just where right and justice lies, with both sides prepared to make concessions, if it appears that concessions should be made, and try thus to reach an agreement, rather than to approach such discussions with both sides seeking to gain every possible advantage, regardless of justice and right? In the nature of things you must work together. Neither side holds a patent on all the rights. Because a theatre does not pay well it is not up to the projectionist to work for nothing to make it do so. If it cannot be made to prosper while paying reasonable wages, then it should, it seems to me, be closed. Because a theatre pays large returns, however, it is not up to its management to "whack up" with the projectionist. Payment of a good wage and supplying good working conditions are all that can be justly demanded.

It is up to both sides to reach a friendly understanding as to what is fair and equitable, everything considered—a hard thing to do on a friendly basis so long as each side approaches the argument determined to secure every last bit of advantage, regardless of right and justice. However, knowing the matter must and will be settled, would it not seem sensible and sane to approach the argument with a smile, prepared to "look at the other fellow's side" as well as your own, and make such concessions as seem based upon right, reason and common sense? If your contention is wrong, but can be and is forced through, as often is the case, you may depend upon it, sooner or later the pendulum will swing back and hit you a crack on the dome that will produce at least a severe headache. History will confirm that.

A PLAIN CASE OF NEGLIGENCE

FROM A North Dakota projectionist comes a letter which I shall let you read, in part. He says, "I have read your Comments for a long while. I now will make a few myself. I am a projectionist just arrived at man's estate (21). Have been in the profession since I was 14.

"I note you have stressed the advantage of having two men on duty in projection rooms because of the fact that one might remain constantly beside the working projector. That is true—very true—but does it work out that way in all cases?

"As a matter of fact, Mr. Richardson, I have visited many two-man projection rooms and in every case both men would talk with me, neither of them remaining beside the working projector. Often the conversations would be at some distance from the working projector. Also, when changeover had been attended to, instead of remaining at the working projector, one man would thread and the other carry reels or do something else.

"I happened into a one-man theatre over in a small city in Minnesota. It was a large Publix house. I noticed the shutters on both projectors were not properly timed, but made no remark about it. However, the defect was not remedied several shows later, so finally I casually mentioned it to the projectionist. 'Yes,' said he, 'I know the shutters need setting. I had them off a few days ago and have neglected to set them exactly right.' They were late model Simplex. A few steps and a twist of the wrist would have remedied the matter, but he made no move to do it while I was there. That was months ago, and when I was there recently those shutters were still 'out.' I might add that this man is a member of the union. Might I inquire why he is permitted to pull such rotten stuff?"

I may be criticized for printing this on the ground that I haven't verified this report. Well, as to the shutters, I have only this correspondent's word. But as to the other matter, I have my own experience to go by. I have myself, times almost without number, seen exactly the same thing. I have visited many projection rooms and found neither of the two men on duty at the projector. I have had them both do just as this man says they did with him, talk with me for minutes with neither of them near the working projector.

But whose fault is it? True, the projectionist who pulls such stunts ought to be thoroughly ashamed of himself. But after all, in a two-man room it should be an iron-clad rule that one man shall be beside the working projector at all times, save possibly in some emergency requiring the presence of both men elsewhere. The supervisor of projection or manager who does not make and enforce a suitable rule in this respect is himself derelict in his duty.

As to the shutter fault described, it seems incredible that any manager would permit it. If it is true, there was a travel ghost on the screen of that Minnesota theatre for days at a time. If the manager has no pride in what is placed before the audiences of his theatre, certainly the union should have some pride in the excellence of the work produced by its members.

ELIMINATING EXCITER LAMP A-BATTERIES

FROM Francis E. Hersey, projectionist and service man of Elsinore, Cal., comes a most interesting suggestion. It is commended to your very careful consideration. Friend Hersey says, "Dear F. H.: In the May 5th issue of BETTER THEATRES I made note of the letter from R. J. Castelli, Ladd, Ill., concerning elimination of A-batteries in exciter lamp setups. Possibly my own experience may help.

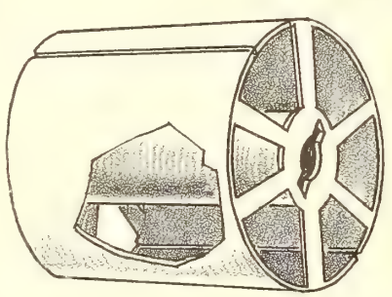
"More than a year ago I was myself faced with the problem of either replacing my batteries or finding something else that would serve their purpose acceptably. This is a small theatre and money is not too plentiful. It therefore was up to me to scheme out the method that while giving acceptable results, would at the same time cost the least.

"Remembering that results, to be acceptable, must equal that produced by the batteries, I got busy and after three weeks of careful investigation and testing, including the use of a charger for current source, I finally decided that step-down transformers and a 7.5-ampere, 10-volt exciter lamp would do the trick. I installed the set-up, which has been functioning perfectly for more than a year, therefore I feel justified in declaring it successful.

"Remember this, though. The exciter lamp sockets must be well and thoroughly insulated from the soundhead, which may be done by means of fiber bushings and plates. The exact method will of course vary with different equipments, but the projectionist who finds himself unable to do so simple a job will do well to get a good job on a truck and let the man who can think for himself and apply very simple rules of electrical and magnetic procedure have his job.

"The standard sockets that come with the regular outfit should be replaced with heavy duty sockets, since these lamps operate at much higher temperature than do those using lower amperage. To obtain non-interference at changeover time there must be a transformer for each lamp. Be certain that all a.c. is thoroughly insulated from the soundhead.

"The filament used in the proposed type of lamp is very heavy, and the current fluctuation [Presumably meaning ripple.—F. H. R.]so slight that no noticeable hum is present unless the amplifier gain and fader are both wide open. I use no filtering of any sort, and there is no perceptible hum from the stage speakers when film is passing through. In fact, so far as I am able to discern, there is none even with no film in the soundhead.



"The transformers (10 volts, 7.5 amperes) cost about $7.50 for the two. Be sure to order a transformer with a 110-20-volt primary. Connect the primary to the a.c. lines, and the two outside leads of the secondary to the positive and negative of your present circuit. It will be noted that this transformer is center-tapped—i.e., the secondary has three leads. Disregard the center tap, except to tape it up to avoid a possible short. If wiring from the battery is not in conduit, or is not BX, it must be shielded; also, the wires of such lead should be twisted, as that tends to reduce a.c. hum.

"Should you wish to place the transformer between the projectors, it must be set on a metal box and well grounded so that the pre-amplifiers will not pick up any hum. In this case use only shielded wires for all connections and be sure it is grounded.

"The negative lead of your exciter lamp circuit is no doubt already grounded to the soundhead. When a.c. is used, it must be connected directly to the lamp socket, and the socket insulated from the soundhead, as already stated, or a short will be caused. There is of course a chance that the sockets are already insulated, but that cannot be depended upon.

"Heavy-duty sockets are hard to find, but you probably can get them at an auto

REWINDER HUB

Submitted by Thomas E. Foley, Kelowna, B. C.

To make a handy hub for rewinding trailers, leaders, screen advertisements, etc., take a 1,000-foot reel, cut off the sides, then smooth off with a file. The sketch above shows how the hub will look when this has been done, and it is then ready for use.

equipment store. The ordinary sockets will serve for a time, but eventually their contacts will burn. If they are used, an extra must be kept on hand.

"Due to the very heavy filament of the lamp, it cools but little at the dead period, which of course tends to reduce hum and gives a light that is almost constant. The gray background of the film sound track also tends to filter out any fluctuation that might otherwise reach the P. E. cell.

"Caution: Should you try this out, be very certain not to permit film to contact with the lamp when it is lighted, or you will have a swell film fire. I know!

"The system works just fine, but I would not try it if my main amplifier was developing its full rated output. If you are obliged to use all the power available to obtain necessary house volume there doubtless would be a hum.

"I hope this will help our friend Castelli fix 'er up, and under the limitation above set forth he can depend upon it, for mine has been in use more than a full year.

"Say, F. H., why not make a small charge for various types of report blanks needed by projectionists. In my opinion it is an excellent plan to keep daily records of all work performed. I have been doing so for a long while. Don't say everyone keeps a record, for they don't, especially the men working in the smaller theatres, and I believe the main reason is the high cost of printing suitable blanks. Costs me $6.75 for 500 of them, and that's plenty. Am sure were the blanks available at a small cost there would be a demand for them as soon as projectionists became acquainted with their use and advantages. Incidentally, would it be possible to purchase a copy of Volume 2 of the Bluebook. A 'friend' walked off with mine. In closing I will say: Keep up the good work."

As to the blanks, believe it or not, there have not been nearly enough requests for them to justify them. Queer, surely, but nevertheless that is the fact.

I make no comment on Friend Hersey's exciter lamp plan, except to say that a sound man of high repute to whom it was submitted for examination declared it to be quite feasible. I would appreciate reports from those who try it out. In the name of our thousands of projectionist readers I thank Brother Hersey sincerely for submitting the plan in such detail.

As to Volume 2 of the Bluebook—certainly. Write the Quigley Bookshop, 1790 Broadway, New York City. The price of a single volume is $3.20.

The picture will be a 16-footer. What we wish to know is this: (1) Will the Simplex-Acme sound system be ample for this size of auditorium? (2) Will the Strong lamp provide sufficient light?"

THE ANSWER to the Question

Why is the WRIGHT-DeCOSTER Horn Superior?

The multitude of inquiries on this point cause us to publish these facts about our

Patented No. 309 Horn

Through long and careful experimenting we found a wooden horn with a smooth inner surface gave far better results on voice and music than a horn made of any other material. There was only one objection, the wooden horn had a resonant point.

We realized that if we were able to kill this resonant point and still maintain the many advantages of the wooden horn we would have the most perfect sound projector it was possible to manufacture. This we finally accomplished by gluing, under pressure, a deadening material to the exterior of the veneer wood. The result was a horn with a smooth wooden inner surface having no resonant point.

The fact that we were able to completely cover this horn with patents proves conclusively that it is a revolutionary improvement in Sound.

That, my friend, depends upon how intelligently and efficiently the equipments are handled. The Acme will give ample sound provided it be kept in proper condition and adjustment. If it is not, it will not. The same is true of the Strong lamp. It will deliver plenty of light for the 16-foot picture if it is properly adjusted, properly taken care of and properly handled. If it is not it won't and neither will any other light source.

STRAIGHTENING BENT FILM TRAP

COMES A TIME when a projector mechanism should no longer be subject to the brand of repairs known as "home made." It instead should be sent to some approved repair shop—"approved" meaning one upon which the projector manufacturer has set his seal of approval. It is the poorest kind of poor business to entrust a complicated mechanism, vital parts of which are fitted in ten-thousandths of an inch and must function with all the fine accuracy of a high grade watch, to hit-or-miss repair shops, too many of which exist and thrive only because they are "cheap." Exhibitors and managers apparently too often fail to understand that the low price in all human probability means poor work and low grade replacement parts, which latter the exhibitor will be charged for at the good-part rate. Here is a letter from Oklahoma:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: "Upon assuming the duties of projectionist at the above named theatre and checking up on equipment, I found it to be in very bad condition. There had been a 2,000-foot film fire on each projector. What was not either injured by the fire or worn out was badly out of adjustment. Here, however, is something I feel I must consult you about.

"I found the lower edge of the aperture plate (film trap) to be out of line with the face of the intermittent sprocket by about one-sixteenth of an inch on both projectors. The 'out' is toward the screen. Presume they were warped by the fire. The question is: Is it possible, using a rawhide mallet, to straighten these traps without breaking them, or would you recommend getting new ones? Could they be put into a press and bent back without breaking them?"

I fully realize that particularly in bad times, exhibitors and managers are anxious to avoid any unnecessary expense. However, assuming the projector mechanisms to be as bad as you say, I could not honestly advise your manager to permit you to attempt patching them up. Whether it might be possible to straighten those traps or not, I would not undertake to say, but I can tell you it probably would not. In any event you would be dealing with parts which it won't do to have "almost" or "pretty nearly" right. They must be exactly right, "exactly" in this case meaning much less than one-thousandth of an inch. Are you equipped to undertake such a job? The film must lay perfectly flat over the projector aperture, remember.

I am not one who holds the projectionist should make no repairs at all. That's an extreme. I hold he should make those repairs he may reasonably be expected to have experience, ability and tools to accomplish perfectly. But when it comes to dealing with ten-thousandths of an inch, common sense tells us few if any projectionists are equipped to deal competently with such minute measurements. They have neither the experience nor the tools to do it. It is unreasonable to expect them to be so equipped.

My advice to your manager is to have you borrow a head from some competent repair shop and send the mechanisms in, one at a time, for a thorough overhauling. In the end it will pay him to heed that advice.

PROJECTION IN DAYTON

FEELING THE need of a rest I recently loaded friend daughter into our gas bubble, clambered in myself, pointed her (the bubble's) nose west by sou'-west, and in the early afternoon of the second day arrived at the home of our old and valued friends, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Nelson of Dayton, Ohio, where I fully intended to squat me down and rest until I was rested.

Otto Nelson is, as doubtless many know, in charge of all motion picture activities of the National Cash Register Company, and these are by no means small.

While in Dayton I called at the RKO Keith theatre, met and chatted with Manager James L. Weed, a live-wire, affable gentleman with more than twenty years of experience selling motion pictures to the public. Harold Lloyd's "The Cat's Paw" was on the Keith screen, so one evening, in company with friend daughter and Mrs. Nelson, I purchased three tickets and entered, prepared, as a paying patron, to roast the tar out of any projection faults observed. After all the years of work, much of it work that did not fall within line of my duty to the paper, from which many a theatre has reaped direct benefit, I somehow feel that I am entitled to enter a theatre's sacred precincts without crossing the cashier's palm with silver. However, there is an advantage in being a paying patron, since under that condition one need feel no compunction about putting up any kind of a yelp one may feel like if projection faults appear. And that is why I felt swindled! I had paid more than one perfectly good dollar to Miss Cashier, and there was not one thing wrong!

"The Cat's Paw" was a corker. Several times I almost fell off the chair from laughing. The projection work, both picture and sound, was all any reasonable man could ask for. My compliments to the projectionists, Charles Wall and Leslie Bowman, and also to Manager Weed.

In conversation with Mr. Weed I quickly realized that he regards projection as a purely mechanical job, which is very far from the fact. He still calls his projectionists "machine operators" and the projection room a "booth," which represents an old habit ill calculated to encourage in the men a feeling of pride in their work. But he demands good work from his men and apparently gets it.

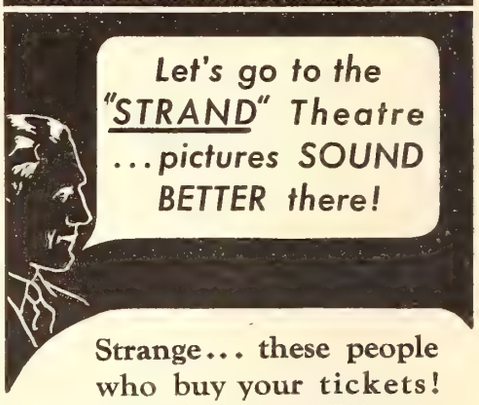
I am especially pleased to bear witness to excellence in projection in the Keith, for the reason that I have recently viewed some very poor projection in RKO theatres.

I feel most kindly toward Dayton for the further reason that I received an invitation from Manager Martin Burnett and Assistant Manager H. W. Reisinger, to visit Loew's Dayton theatre, where I viewed the work of Projectionists Howard Sharritt and Torrence Suman, which was wholly without perceptible fault. The picture was of correct dimensions, the screen was well but not too highly illuminated, and its lighting was well distributed. The effect was, on the whole distinctly good. The effect was doubly pleasing owing to the location of the projection room at the front of the balcony, hence there was no distortion of the screen image. If the projection and managerial work witnessed in the Keith and Dayton theatres is a fair sample of that in other Dayton theatres, then I can easily name some cities that might benefit by sending their managers and projectionists to Dayton to make observations.

I might add that I fully expected to find excellent projection in the Loew theatre, for the reason that the Loew organization has, under the leadership of Lester Isaac, built up a most excellent projection department, which has on file in New York City up-to-date knowledge of the exact kind and condition of every piece of projection equipment contained in every theatre bearing the Loew name. The exact condition of every piece of equipment must be reported to Mr. Isaac every thirty days.



While I was in Dayton, Fred R. Rawson, president of Local 248, invited Mr. Nelson and myself to his residence, where he demonstrated a most remarkable short-wave broadcasting set which he himself built, even to most of its parts. He thinks nothing of talking directly with Honolulu. He tells me many projectionists have short-wave sets and he is able to talk with them, and he invites projectionists who have sets to contact him. Incidentally, Mrs. Rawson more than amply demonstrated her skill as a mixologist.

Another thing we saw in, or rather near, Dayton, will linger long in our memory. Our hosts loaded us into their gas wagon and took us near Cincinnati, where is located the new WLW radio station with its steel antenna tower 831 feet high. This weighs 135 tons and rests on a hollow porcelain dingus not much more than 1 foot in diameter. I also saw one set of amplifying tubes in operation that cost approximately $34,000. The station develops 500,000 watts.

Responding to the invitation of President Rawson, I made a short talk before the members of Local 248. Two-forty-eight is a fine body of men.

On the way back, at the urgent invitation of two Marion projectionists, Messrs. Seckle and Slagle of the Palace theatre, we stopped over night as the guests of these gentlemen. I of course visited the Palace, in which projection was most excellent, except that a bit more screen illumination would be of benefit. However, that will be provided for.

In the projection room I saw a rewinder running along all by itself, rewinding film at the rate of 1,000 feet each six minutes. Watching it perform, I was impressed with the utter foolishness of the hop-skip-and-jump-shoot-em-through rewinding so often encountered, with the film slapping against the reel sides and getting Old Ned raised with it generally.

I had a long talk with Manager Tracy Barham, who in my opinion is one of the most understanding of motion picture theatre managers, insofar as has to do with projection at least. I can say the same for his assistant, Mr. Roy Peffely. The theatre is operated by the Midhio Theatres Corporation.

WHEN A PROJECTOR NEEDS OVERHAULING

FROM A SMALL town in western Oklahoma comes this letter:

"Please tell me how I can stop the film chattering when going through a Powers 6B projector. The intermittent movement is pretty badly worn. It has a loud clicking sound when the mechanism is run without film. Would appreciate any information you can give as to how to make a 6B Powers run quiet."

The answer seems simple: Write the International Projector Corporation, 92 Gold street, New York City, and obtain the name of the nearest approved repair shop. From this shop secure the loan of a mechanism for use while you send your own to it for a thorough overhauling.

It will cost considerable? Certainly! You can't expect to run a highly sensitive mechanism indefinitely without expending some money for repairs, and from what you say, the mechanism is rather sadly in need of repairs—a lot of repairs, probably.

To test its general "debility," hold its shutter stationary and see how far you can rotate its flywheel. If more than 3/16ths of an inch, measured at the face of its rim, then it needs an overhauling, and I suspect you can rotate it much more than that, remembering that each 1/16th of an inch additional means a lot of wear.

Of course it is possible the intermittent movement needs adjustment. You can test that by trying to rock the intermittent sprocket when the movement is on the lock. It should not rock at all, though a slight movement does not mean a bad condition —a slight movement I said, mark you well.

As to telling you what to do yourself, I cannot do that, for the reason that overhauling a badly worn intermittent movement or mechanism is not, in my opinion, a job that should be undertaken by home talent. If it should be, the chances are that the job will not be well done. The projectionist has neither the tools nor experience to undertake such a task with even a reasonable chance of doing a good job after he has gone to all the trouble of trying.

LIGHTING TUBE GASES

● The increasing use of tube lighting by theatres makes some information concerning the gases employed not only interesting, but quite practical, and it is thus considered worthwhile to pass on to those in charge of theatre operations significant paragraphs from an article appearing in a recent issue of Bright News, issued by the Tube Light Engineering Company of New York.

Pointing out that the greenish blue fluorescence of mercury vapor was noted as early as the 18th Century, the article continues:

"Immediately after the inception of the present century it was found that if mercury is inserted in a high voltage discharge tube containing neon, it will be quickly vaporized by the heat of the conducting current. This mercury vapor, which is of a greenish hue, entirely dominates the characteristic red of the neon, producing a blue luminous tube.

"Tubes with neon and mercury are not entirely practicable for outdoor signs. Neon lacks the ability to support mercury at low temperatures. The result is that the mercury tends to recondense and causes a streaky tube, part neon color and part blue.

"Argon was found more suitable than neon as a supporting gas for mercury vapor, for two reasons: (1) It is a better carrier gas for mercury than neon. (2) Its color radiation is of a blue cast and effectively blends with the blue mercury vapor.

"The most popular gas mixture today for mercury tubes contains approximately 80% argon and 20% neon. The color radiation of this mixture is blue-lavender which satisfactorily blends with the mercury discharge and produces a blue tube.

"The neon in the mixture serves a definite purpose. A tube containing the argon-neon mixture will reach a higher temperature than a tube using argon alone. The purpose of achieving a hotter tube is to quickly vaporize the mercury globules and maintain this vaporization even in cold weather. The neon also improves the brilliancy of the tube. The argon in the mixture primarily acts as the supporting gas for the mercury vapor.

"Although the standard argon-neon mixture is capable of maintaining a very satisfactory blue color in practically all sorts of weather, during very cold spells it may take anywhere from one or two minutes to over an hour for tubes to come up to the proper blue color. In some cases the tube will be unevenly colored, depending upon where the mercury is located in the tube. . . ."

It is stated that care should be taken to have the mercury distributed as evenly as possible throughout the tube, to avoid spottiness. A special gas mixture is available containing argon, neon and helium, the helium acting as a very positive agent for the vaporization of the mercury in any weather. However, the helium mixture requires extra transformer equipment.

FIRM NAME CHANGED

● The name of the Imperial Electric & Manufacturing Company of Los Angeles, prominent maker of projection lighting equipment and also converters used with projector lamp systems of the new "Suprex" type, has been changed to C. S. Ashcraft Manufacturing Company. C. S. Ashcraft continues in charge of development work and production, and M. G. Ashcraft in charge of sales and service.

The company has also removed to larger quarters, now operating in its own building, which contains the plant and executive offices. The new address is 4214-16-18 Santa Monica Boulevard.

REPORT REPLACEMENTS

● A new group of sound installations, nearly all representing replacements is reported by the S. O. S. Corporation of New York. The installations, all involving this company's "Wide Fidelity" apparatus, were made for the following:

Columbia-Princess theatre, Shinnston, W. Va.; Stuart, Lakeville, Conn.; Glenn Nicholson, Indianapolis; Strand theatre, Sharon Springs, Kan.; LoNet, Wellington, Ohio; Gerhard Brothers, Thurber, Tex.; Rankin theatre, Bridgeville, Pa.; La Verne, La Verne, Okla.; Roxy, Billings, Okla.; Frank Forsey, Salt Lake City, Utah; Lyric, Flatonia, Tex.; R. B. Vail, Bay Minette, Ala.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● Max L. Robinson, formerly of Roth Brothers & Company, manufacturers of the Roth Actodetector, and now advertising and sales promotion manager for the Janette Manufacturing Company of Chicago, has also been appointed to an advisory capacity by the Baldor Electric Company, which recently put on the market its "Handy" rectifier for low-intensity arc lamps. Mr. Robinson assisted in the development of the rectifier.

James E. Francis has been appointed manager of the Photophone Division of the RCA Victor Company, succeeding E. O. Heyl, who has resigned. The company also announces that its recording activities have been consolidated with those pertaining to the sale of theatre reproducing equipment. Mr. Francis has been in charge of recording operations since RCA Photophone was consolidated with RCA Victor.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

ON ONE side of our theatre, we have a 2x6-inch plastered wall. By that I mean 2x6 studding, and lath and plaster on each side. We are bothered by a loud radio that the proprietor of the adjoining room uses. Would like advice as to sound-proofing this wall in as inexpensive a way as possible, as building a brick wall would include additional footing, loss of space, and almost prohibitive cost under present conditions.

My idea was to use ⅞-inch furring strips, putting building felt or roofing felt between the plastered wall and the strips, covering the outside then with masonite plaster board and then plastering with two coats of plaster. Would like your advice on this.—F. E. D.

The Answer:

THERE ARE several methods of remedying your troubles. In my opinion the least expensive way would be to fill the space between the studding with a light fluffy granulated wool. This is put in place by cutting holes in the top of the wall, then the material is forced into space by a pneumatic conveyor hose. The holes are rather small and can be easily patched. The only drawback to this method is that it requires a good mechanic and certain equipment, but if you are located fairly near a city you will not experience any trouble locating a concern that can do this kind of work.

The other method, which I believe to be more expensive, is to strip the wall on the inside with 2-inch stripping, then fill the space between the strips with sound deadening felt, cover strips with plaster boards, and give the surface a skim coat of plaster to match the present finish. Roofing or building felt, as you describe, will not give the desired results. Any building material dealer can advise you regarding the make and kind of material to be used.

Of the above two named methods, I sincerely believe that the first one mentioned will give you the most satisfactory results and can be done in the shortest time possible without disturbing the interior or closing up the theatre during the progress of the work.

The Question:

I WOULD greatly appreciate a few suggestions on some improvements now being considered. We are planning a marquee for our theatre, and due to the unusual design of the building front we are at loss as to what would be the most practical and inexpensive arrangement. We are enclosing an old post-card of the original front before it was divided, and also a photo of our theatre front as it is now. There are two canopies on each end of the building. These are the cause of our trouble. We would like to build a small marquee over our own front, but feel that it would throw the whole front of the building out of perspective, it would be too expensive to build completely between the two canopies, and would also be too large for our present theatre. We are now considering a marquee over our theatre front and extending to the right and enveloping the small canopy which we do not want to remove. We would like your advice and suggestions.

I am also enclosing a sketch of our theatre. We need an additional 100 seats and are considering renting the location next to us to acquire the necessary space. Our main problem here is the usual I-beam supports, three of which will be in the way. These supports are 3-inch in diameter. Just to what extent would they interfere with the screen image of the new 100 seats? In using these extra 100 seats mainly to handle the overflow on our heavy nights, would the three I-beam supports make the venture unpractical? The additional rent would be fairly high, compensated somewhat by a concession stand, which would be rented.—F. M. M.

The Answer:

THE ONLY WAY to solve your problem is to do just exactly what you do not want to do. Remove the small marquees on each end of the building and install a new one over the theatre entrance, or build a new section between the present ones. Building a new marquee over the theatre entrance alone and leaving the present ones in place, will give the building a lopsided appearance.

The least expensive way for you to construct a new marquee would be to place the two present ones together in one unit. According to the photographs, they appear to be wide enough to cover the theatre entrance if placed end to end. Erect attraction signs on top, front and sides, and by placing a few electric lights in the soffit I believe you would obtain a pretty good effect.

The nicest and most modern way would be to construct an entirely new marquee out of aluminum bars with flashed opal glass at front, sides and soffit, with concealed inside lighting and with changeable silhouette letters for attraction program. This method of construction is rather inexpensive, and the results obtained are very much up-to-date.

After looking over your sketch for the enlarging of the auditorium to obtain an additional 100 seats, I cannot advise you too strongly against your plan, unless it will be possible to remove the column nearest the stage. If this column must remain in place, only 25 persons out of a 100 will be able to see the entire picture on the screen free from obstruction, and the other 75 seats will be absolutely worthless, as no one could enjoy a picture with several obstructions in the line of vision. If it would be possible to remove this first column, then 80% of the seats would afford an unobstructed view.

Noticing the small diameter of these columns, I assume that they only support the second floor, and that the other floors are supported on partitions of the floors below, or girders. If this is the case, I do not think it would be very expensive to remove the first column and to insert an I-beam to support the load from above. Should this column extend through the other floors, I am afraid the change would be quite an expensive affair, and you then may just as well abandon this project, as any money expended would be thrown away, because you could not increase your revenue.

The Question:

I AM WRITING to ask how I could decorate my stage and screen with curtains economically so as to take away the cold appearance and make it more satisfactory to me and my patrons. I am enclosing the sketch and hope to get some real suggestions.

The building is 25 feet wide, and the stage front is built in from the walls about 5 feet on either side. This building was not made for a theatre, so the stage was built in after the building was made. The stage front is made mostly of wainscoating and is painted gray. There are two posts about 8 inches wide on either side of the stage opening, and the stage is not decorated at all. Those old wainscoating boards make the stage appear to be the entrance to Sing Sing. I would like to use some nice curtains around the stage opening and some on the wings at the side of the opening to give some color to the stage and make it look somewhat modern.—J. B. R.

The Answer:

YOUR PROBLEM is a very easy one to solve. Install a valance from the ceiling to a few inches below the wood beam of the proscenium arch, then cover the posts with side tabs about 24 inches wide. Place the projection screen in a cyclorama and you will have a very nice looking stage. The cyclorama should be of a very light color, and the valance and side tabs can be of a great deal darker tone.

The Question:

WE ARE GOING to remodel the front of our theatre, and while we have several rough plans in mind, we would like very much to have your advice and suggestions in this matter before we make a definite decision.

It will probably be of interest to you to know that we expect to get the money for this remodeling from the loans created by the National Housing Act.

The front of our building was constructed years ago and is made of concrete stucco. We are enclosing a rough drawing of the front as it now stands. The frontage of this building is 30 feet, and the height is 20 feet.

In rebuilding the front of this building we would like to make an attractive front without going to a great deal of additional expense, and believe that since we are going to make a new front on it, that we can incorporate a few minor changes in construction from the conventional type of plain square front that will cost but very little, if any, more than the plain type would cost.

We have roughly in mind something bordering on the Spanish type, or the Modernistic type of front. We would not like to go to extremes in either of these for more than likely the front will not be changed in several years and we want something that will not grow old quickly.

We would like to have two double doors, one on each side of the box office at whatever space would be proportional to the size of the building. We also believe that we can make a built-in one-sheet board on each side of the building, with the glass flush with the front, and lighted from the inside.

How to build the top of this building, from the marquee up is what puzzles us. We would like to square the front up and at the same time trim it in such a manner that it would look good.

The marquee, which now only extends to the edge of the openings, will extend across the entire front of the building.

We had first intended to rebuild the front of this building with stucco, but our local contractor who will do the work, has given us a rough estimate of the cost with stucco and with brick, and there is very little difference in the cost according to his figures. We would certainly be glad to have any advice or suggestions you can give us.—J. C. M.

The Answer:

BY ALL MEANS square off the top of the building, or use some form of step-ups in the coping. I believe that the shape of the front will be better adapted to a modernistic design, for a Spanish treatment will require a certain amount of ornamentation and this will increase the cost.

As I understand it, you plan to rebuild the entire front elevation, so by carefully designing and spacing the new windows above the marquee an interesting design can be worked out. The arrangement of the ticket booth, entrance doors and poster cabinets as according to your sketch, is satisfactory. However place each door about 9 inches from the ticket booth, and space the poster cabinets in the center of space left between doors and side wall.

Make each double door opening at least 5 feet wide, and the soffit of the marquee should be at least 8 feet 6 inches above the sidewalk.

To carry out a modern treatment you can insert alternating horizontal courses of brick, stone, tile or any other material. I suggest that you have your contractor obtain quotations on the different glass or composition materials to cover the present surface, as the application of some such material will require only from 1½ inches to 2 inches, and I doubt if this method will be much more expensive than rebuilding the entire wall. By using this material in different colors you will obtain a very attractive as well as a durable front.

Fitting Out the Rest Room

as were the toilet bowls, but as to design) as follows: (a) pedestal, (b) flat back or wall hung, (c) one-piece stalls.

The pedestal type is not recommended for theatres. It stands out away from the wall quite far and requires much more space than either of the other two types.

STALL MODEL

Stall urinals are really the best type for theatre use. However, they should be equipped with the fan-shaped flush inlet which should be so adjusted that water will wash completely the inside surface of the fixture at each flush. These urinals are of very heavy vitreous or earthenware construction with a thick base which is usually set slightly below the surrounding floor line so that it provides drainage for the floor. It should be carefully noted that stall urinals are manufactured without a trap being incorporated in the fixture. The drain or waste pipe must extend down and be connected to a trap and then to the soil line. Because of the great number of cigarette butts, matches, buttons and other insoluble articles that get into urinals, the traps should be exposed where possible and be provided with a brass cleanout plug. Stall urinals may be set side by side (with no space between), or may be separated. In either case they may have partitions installed between. If partitions are installed they should be from 24 inches to 27 inches, center to center of partitions. The depth of partitions should be from 20 inches to 22 inches, the depth of end partitions 24 inches, the height of partitions should be from 4 feet, 6 inches to 5 feet, 6 inches. Stall urinals are made in widths from 18 inches to 24 inches. Their height is about 40 inches above the floor.

WALL-HUNG MODEL

Flat back or wall-hung urinals are made with the trap cast into the lower portion of the fixture, with the waste outlet arranged to pass through the wall on which the urinal is hung. The fixture is held in place by screws at top and bottom of the fixture. These screws should bite into something solid or else arrangements should be made to use toggle bolts. This type is cheaper than the stall type and its installation is cheaper. However, it does not give the "class" of the stall type.

Wall-hung models should always have partitions separating them, and often they require a bottom slab of marble or stone to protect the floor. The height to install wall-hung urinals in theatres is always a problem, considering that toilets are used by adults as well as small boys. For this reason the stall type is far more desirable. Wall-hung urinals can only be considered a rather poor second-choice for theatres.

Urinals require about 4 gallons of water for proper flushing. They may be flushed by means of a flush-tank, flush-valve, or automatic flush. The flush-tank and flush-valve are the same as described for the toilet bowls. The automatic flush is an arrangement whereby the fixture is flushed automatically at predetermined intervals of so many seconds. When such automatic devices are installed, be sure to arrange conditions so that the device is shut off at night and other periods when the theatre is closed. In towns and cities where water rates prohibit the automatic flushing device, the flush-valve should receive preference over the flush-tank.

LAVATORIES, TRAPS, PUMPS

LAVATORIES, or wash stands, as everyone knows, come in many sizes and designs in almost any price range. Generally such fixtures are of two classes: (a) types which have backs and are wall hung; (b) those without backs, supported on a pedestal, which conceals the trap and piping; or on legs. The wall-hung lavatories are by far the more numerous and present a great variety of shapes and sizes, with flat backs, recessed backs of 6 inches, 8 inches or 10 inches in height; and the bowls may be round, D-shaped or oval; and with or without aprons.

TRAPS

It is important to know that all fixtures in toilet rooms must have traps in the waste lines between the fixture and the main soil line. Traps for plumbing fixtures are bent pieces of pipe, or an assembly of fittings in the shape of the letter U, or in some cases shaped like the letter S, but as though the letter were lying on its side. These traps are so shaped that an unobstructed passage is provided for the flow of sewage to the soil pipe. In these traps, the U-portion of them always retains water, providing a seal in the pipe which prevents the backing up of drain or sewer gas into the toilet room.

The following points cover the important features of a trap: (1) It must hold sufficient water to withstand evaporation. (2) It must have sufficient depth to withstand the syphonic action in the waste pipe without draining it empty. (3) It should be so designed as to be self scouring and therefore always provide free passage for sewage. (4) It should be provided with a cleanout plug. (5) It should have no interior strainers or other obstructions that may become clogged up.

Most of the troubles in theatre toilets are the result of faulty traps or faulty trap installation. Further, many instances of foul odors result from old out-of-date and therefore faulty and possibly leaky traps. There are many cases where traps are buried in concrete or floors and there is no way to determine in what condition they are. Such installations are bad practice and generally cause no end of trouble.

PUMPS

Allied closely with the plumbing in a theatre are the pumps—the sump-pump for the removal of sewage, the water pump to lift water to fill the house tank, and the pressure pump on the air washer system, to mention only the important ones. Pumps generally are classified into four groups according to the principle upon which they operate: (a) piston pumps, (b) centrifugal pumps, (c) rotary pumps, and (d) jet pumps.

PISTON PUMPS

Piston pumps are frequently found in theatres, but used for only one purpose, that of fire pump, and generally located in the stage basement. Such pumps raise water to the house emergency tank and automatically start when the water in the tank falls to a predetermined low level. Likewise there is an automatic cut-out which stops the pump when the water has been raised to an established high level in the tank.

The simple piston pump consists of a cylinder in which a piston or plunger moves back and forth, drawing in and forcing out the water with positive pressure. Arrangements of valves, usually of disc design, is such that the inlets and outlets for the water operate automatically. Frequently piston pumps are designed with more than one cylinder, and are referred to as single, duplex or triplex pumps, depending upon the number of cylinders. Such pumps are driven by a rather small pinion gear on the motor shaft. This pinion gear meshes with the gear teeth on a much larger wheel, which in turn is keyed to the crank shaft. Through connecting arms from the crank shaft to the piston heads, the power of the motor is used in drawing the water into the cylinders and forcing it out. Because of the very positive pressure characteristic of these pumps, this type is best to perform this particular function in theatres.

CENTRIFUGAL PUMPS

Centrifugal pumps are usually specified where large volumes of water are to be handled against low pressure, particularly if some solid matter must be handled with the water. Sewage or sump-pumps generally all fall in this class. There have been some great improvements in centrifugal pumps. Some recently developed pumps of this type will perform under special conditions satisfactorily, in comparison with high-pressure pumps of the piston type. According to design, these pumps are referred to as volute or turbine centrifugal pumps. The volute type handles water in exactly the same way as air is handled by the coinoidal, multivane fan. The turbine type operates as the name would imply, on the turbine principle. Where centrifugal pumps must work against high pressure, the turbine type is best adapted, but for ordinary recirculating jobs the straight centrifugal or volute centrifugal pumps will prove highly satisfactory.

SUMP-PUMPS

Practically all of the sewage or sump-pumps in theatres are centrifugal pumps on a vertical shaft, directly connected to a vertical motor. The motor operates from an automatic switch, which in turn is operated by adjustable stops, on a rod connected to a float. When the sewage rises high in the tank, the pump starts and continues to exhaust the tank until stopped at the low level by the float switch. The low limit is carefully set so that the pump never needs priming. The impeller of this type must always remain submerged, otherwise priming will be necessary to start the pump.

ROTARY PUMPS

Rotary pumps are positive-displacement or pressure pumps that seem to fall between the high-speed centrifugal and the positive-displacement piston types. The actual principle upon which this type operates is somewhat confusing to describe in words without the aid of drawings. Basically two main parts, of cycloidal shape, or two parts shaped like large pinion gears, rotate in opposite direction, building up pressure on one side and reducing pressure on the other. This type does furnish positive displacement, and the principle is used for pumping gases as well as liquids. Some of these pumps are installed in theatres and perform very satisfactorily. Managers operating theatres with this type of pump on their air washer water system should write to the manufacturer of the pump for full descriptive matter. I believe that the centrifugal turbine type pump is more frequently encountered in theatre work than the rotary pump. Both types can be used for identical purposes in a theatre.

JET TYPE PUMP

The jet type of pump really might be called a forced water syphon. There are actually pumps designed to operate on this principle, but they are not very efficient as pumps and are seldom prescribed for theatres. However, some ingenious theatre engineers have used the principle economically and effectively in removing seepage from low basins in boiler rooms and basement. The accompanying sketch shows the principle far more simply than it can be described in words. A homemade one may be of service sometime in draining a catchbasin or a flooded boiler room.

Pumps do form a part of theatre equipment, and having moving parts, they need attention from time to time, and oil at frequent intervals. The motors that drive them need constant attention. Pumps probably give less trouble than any other class of theatre equipment, and for that reason they are usually neglected. Most of the breakdowns in pumps could be avoided by just a little care and attention beforehand.

Great improvement at small expense can be made in existing toilet rooms if the fixtures are satisfactorily arranged and not discolored, cracked or otherwise unsightly. New toilet bowl seats and new flush-valve, eliminating flush-tanks, and new piping where piping is exposed, will make a wonderful difference. Add to these changes a planned lighting scheme (every toilet compartment should be brightly lighted), some paint, a mirror over each lavatory, new toilet paper containers, soap dispensers, a sand jar for cigarette butts, and an attractive toilet room will result.

In conclusion, this fact must be acknowledged: Wear and tear, physical, mechanical, electrical and structural depreciation and obsolescence go on day in and day out, whether the theatre operates or is closed, and whether or not the manager or higher executive deliberately closes his eyes to it. The only known method today of offsetting and reducing this rate of destructive and apparently ever mounting class of expense is to spend wisely for intelligent maintenance. "Getting by" is expensive operation in the long run.

dition has been fully recognized. Moreover, the fact that such action may result in incidental injury to the theatre owner does not in itself constitute a justification for issuing an injunction against such acts. In other words, the interests of capital and labor are at times inimical and the Courts may not decide controversies between the parties so long as neither resorts to violence, deceit, or misrepresentation to bring about desired results. This rule of the law is particularly applicable with respect to rival unions.

Notwithstanding the fact that the collateral result of the attempted persuasion of the public not to patronize a theatre, while it employs the members of the rival union, might make it unprofitable for the theatre owner, yet the courts restrain from interfering with lawful and quiet picketing by members of a rival union.

For instance, in Stillwell Theatre v. Kaplan (182 N. E. 63, New York, N. Y.), it was disclosed that certain theatre owners entered into contracts with the Empire State Motion Picture Operators' Union, Inc., by the terms of which it was agreed to employ none other than members of that union as projectionists.

Later members of Local 306 of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of the United States and Canada, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and a member of the State Federation of Labor and of the Central Trades, began picketing the theatres with signs which read: "Owners of this theatre refuse to employ members of Motion Picture Operators' Union Local 306, affiliated with the A. F. L."

The picketing was peaceful and not accompanied by any acts of violence, trespass, or intimidation, and the sign truly stated the fact.

The owners of the theatres being picketed filed suit and requested the Court to grant an injunction to prevent the picketing. It was argued by counsel for the theatre owners that the picketing was illegal because it conveyed the idea that union labor was not employed on the premises and, also, that the purpose of the picketing was in part to destroy business of the theatres. Also, it was contended that the picketing was illegal because its purpose was to induce or cause a breach of the contract between the theatre owners respectively and the rival union.

DECISION

Although the lower court granted the injunction, it is interesting to observe that the higher court reversed the verdict, saying:

"Unquestionably defendant in picketing these three theatres was actuated by a desire to improve labor conditions as to wages, hours, number of employes, and conditions of work, although incidental disadvantage to the employer might result. . . . We would be departing from established precedents if we upheld this injunction. We would thereby give to one labor union an advantage over another by prohibiting the use of peaceful and honest persuasion in matters of economic and social rivalry. This might strike a death blow to legitimate labor activities. It is not within the province of the Courts to restrain conduct which is within the allowable area of economic conflict."

INJURY OF PATRON IN LABOR DISPUTE

THE LEGAL QUESTION often has existed whether a theatre owner may be liable for an injury sustained by a patron caused by members of a union, or other persons who are enemies of the theatre owner, exploding a bomb in the theatre building. This point of the law was discussed in the late case of Perkins v. Publix Theatres Corporation (171 S. E. 147, Atlanta, Ga.).

CASE

The testimony of this case indicated that certain theatre employes, who were dissatisfied with their employment, caused a bomb to explode in the theatre which resulted in serious injury to a patron. The patron filed suit against the theatre owner to recover damages. He alleged that the theatre owner was negligent in allowing patrons to come into the theatre when he had information that the dissatisfied theatre employes may perform acts dangerous to persons within the theatre building.

DECISION

Although this court did not hold the theatre owner liable in damages, yet it was held that the injured theatre patron had a legal right of action. This court said:

"It being the duty of the occupier of a building, who uses it for the purpose of operating a theatre into which the public is invited to come as patrons of the theatre, to exercise ordinary care to keep the premises in a condition safe for those lawfully thereon, where it is alleged that the bomb had been placed in the theatre by the employes and servants of the defendant (theatre owner) who were ushers in the theatre and had free access to the theatre, and that the defendant was negligent in not knowing that the bomb had been placed in the theatre by his agents or employes . . . and the plaintiff (patron) was injured as a result of such negligence, a cause of action is set out. . . ."

SPECIAL RIGHTS OF SMALL INTERESTS

A GREAT MANY litigations have involved the common legal question of whether or not persons who hold a minimum interest in a theatre or other amusement corporation, have special rights with respect to the conduction of the business and affairs of the corporation, when compared with the larger interest. This point of the law was discussed in the recent case of St. Louis Amusement Company v. Rosskopf (52 S. W. [2d] 178).

CASE

In this case it was shown that an order was issued appointing a receiver for an amusement company on the grounds that the owner of 92 per cent of the stock was guilty of misconduct. The owners of less than 2 per cent of the stock tendered a $150,000 bond, believing this to be a sufficient amount in view of the fact that the corporation was worth about $1,000,000. Certain stockholders who owned 8 per cent of the stock in the corporation contended that the Court should approve the $150,000 bond. However, after the case was taken to a higher court it was held that refusal to approve the bond was not abuse of discretion. This court said:

DECISION

"The suit was instituted by plaintiffs for themselves and in behalf of all other stockholders having like interests. It is therefore a class suit, brought by representatives of the class. . . . The judgment that will be rendered therein, if on the merits, will be binding and conclusive on all members of the class whether they intervene or do not . . . In this connection it should be added that a stockholder's interest in a corporation cannot be fairly measured by his pro rata share of the assets, as upon dissolution; he is entitled to have the corporation continue as a going concern, engaged in the prosecution of the business for which it was incorporated."

Therefore, it is quite apparent that a judgment with respect to corporation difficulties will be rendered on its merits and is binding on all the stockholders.

New Schemes in Modern Remodeling

a light warm gray with touches of strong bright colors, black and silver for accent.

While semi-permanent decoration, as described above, is often admirably suited to the inner lobby or entrance foyer, the outer lobby or vestibule usually requires treatment with more permanent materials, partaking somewhat of the nature of exterior architecture. This part of the theatre is next to the outdoors and is commonly open and exposed more or less to the weather. Here strong, easily cleaned materials of dark, rich coloring enlivened by vigorous contrast are often best.

Such a treatment is seen in the photograph of the lobby of the Midtown theatre in New York City, of which Boak & Paris were the architects. This is one of the newer theatres which afford suggestions for the modernization of older theatres.

In this lobby, the walls are covered with Formica sheets in horizontal bands of rich red inlaid with 2 inch strips of black at the edges. The horizontal joints are covered with heavy wooden mouldings painted black. Frames for advertising displays, with hinged covers of glass, are built into the wall treatment. The cornice is in dull orange.

The ceiling is divided into narrow panels by aluminum-finished mouldings and is painted in graded tones of delicate blue. The perforated black rubber mats are relieved with touches of orange that recall the color in the cornice. They are set in sinkages that bring them flush with the framing bands, which are of dark gray terrazzo edged with gray metal strips which divide the floor into panels.

The horizontal banding of walls, as used in the Midtown theatre, is one of the newer fashions and in a lobby it has a psychological advantage derived from lines that lead into the theatre. But it should not be employed indiscriminately without regard for other conditions. Often the proportions of a room are such that some other treatment is better. Horizontal banding tends to make a room look longer and lower, and some rooms are already too long and low for good appearance. The main form of almost any wall surface is horizontal, therefore vertical division, instead of horizontal, affords good contrast.

THE EAGLE'S KEEPER

THE termination of the service of General Hugh S. Johnson as the keeper of the NRA's Blue Eagle, announced from Hyde Park in a genial exchange of letters Wednesday, has been preceded by two weeks of press rumors that he was slated for "a $100,000 a year post in the movies."

As has been customary for several years, whenever a public figure of current name value has fallen out of employment and appeared at loose ends, some newspaper chatter writer has suggested that "it is reported that he is to succeed Will H. Hays as czar of the movies."

This is in a fashion perhaps flattering to Mr. Hays, but the process is getting a bit monotonous. In the natural order of events it would seem that possibly some day there might be a successor to Mr. Hays. There has not, since the establishment of his office, been any such probability or evidence of its consideration. Succeeding Mr. Hays is likely to prove a very wearing occupation.

And as to General Johnson for that or any motion picture post, may we not for a moment recall that day now about a year past when four or five of the highest executives of the industry sat waiting, on vital code issues, in the ante room while "The General and Robbie" listened to the world series on the radio? That was hardly to be taken as laying the foundation for chummy relations ahead, even in so forgiving an institution as the picture industry.

The motion picture industry will be found in the most hearty agreement with the expression of the President when he wrote in his letter: ". . . . I hope that during these next few months you will get a thoroughly deserved rest. . . ." In fact it might be well for the General to rest longer than that.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE

APPROACHES to the American market from abroad might well be made with some cognizance that there has been a sort of movement hereabouts known as the Legion of Decency campaign. It has been mentioned in the papers now and then. Such cognizance might have led to refurbishing of the "Chu Chin Chow" lobby at the Roxy theatre in New York, with respect to anatomical details. The Paramount articulated and motorized presentation of the oscillating hips of Miss Mae West, a contemporary masterpiece, may be mentioned in the same category. The motion picture can get into enough trouble without advertising for it.

THE last planting of golden bantam is ripe. The hickory leaves are falling. The summer is over and that big bass under the overhanging rock at the dam has not been attended to yet—among many other things. Every summer is like that.

98.296 PER CENT OK.

BEFORE us is No. 13 of "A Moral Estimate of Motion Pictures Recently Released," which is issued periodically by the Chicago Council of the Legion of Decency. Also the evening finds us in a mood for research and figures.

The document represents the winnowings and findings of that indefatigable and eternally zealous militant of the commonweal, the Reverend F. G. Dinneen, S.J., member of the Chicago Legion and the barbed spearhead of its "black and white list" movement.

In this No. 13 listing the ardent researches and delvings of Father Dinneen have revealed that the 176 productions under consideration fall into classification thus: "Class A, 87; Class B, 68; Class C, 21." It is to be understood that "Class A" pictures are "considered unobjectionable and suitable for public entertainment." "Class B" pictures are "objectionable in spots," but "neither approved nor forbidden," while the bad, bad ones are "Class C", which are "considered indecent and immoral and unfit."

With a gentle note of exultation, Father Dinneen's leaflet thereby calculates that now "only 12 per cent are unfit for public entertainment."

And that leads us to more calculation and also to even bigger and better exulting. Scanning the list of twenty-one "Class C" pictures one finds only three which have been released under the seal of the Production Code Administration and the method of regulation which the industry instituted for itself effective July 15. Those three pictures represent 1.704 per cent of the total list. We submit that a dilution of iniquity on the order of seventeen parts in a thousand compares favorably with the bacterial content of the Chicago water supply and other embracing factors of the human environment.

FAVORABLE EXCHANGE

Favorable foreign exchange rates reacted to the benefit of seven major companies engaged in large scale international distribution to the extent of $8,350,000, in the 18 months ended June 30, estimates indicate. The firms, their gains: Columbia, $560,000; Fox, $1,600,000; MGM, $2,100,000; Paramount, $1,500,000; United Artists, $870,000; Universal, $720,000; Warner, $1,000,000. . . .

PETTIJOHN HONORED

Dined at Portland in honor of his industry service last week was Charles C. Pettijohn, MPPDA general counsel, celebrating his 20th year in the business. Greater harmony between various branches of the industry was predicted by Mr. Pettijohn, speaking at a luncheon. Exhibitor-distributor coordination he hailed in addressing the ITO of Southern California later at Los Angeles. . . .

ANOTHER MARKS

Into theatre operation has gone a new generation of the Marks family, as Jerome Marks has become manager, one of the incorporators of the Rio, in Chicago. His father, Louis Marks, with Meyer Marks, operated several local houses until they were taken over by Balaban & Katz. Jacob Kahn, Harry Solomon and Irving Sevin are associated with Mr. Marks. . . .

GOOD STUNT

Completely satisfied was Manager George S. Baker, of the Newman, Kansas City, with his 23-hour continuous run to introduce Mae West in Paramount's "Belle of the Nineties" to the public. Estimated boost in the weekly gross for the run ot $2,000 is the reason for the Baker elation. In preparation is Miss West's novelization of the film. . . .

BALABAN TO COAST

Severing his theatrical connections, making a thorough study of film production, A. J. Balaban will then undertake his new duties as associate producer at RKO Radio, with whom he has just signed a contract. . . .

DE MILLE ELABORATION

Elaboration of production will again be a chief factor in two films to be made by Cecil B. DeMille at the Paramount plant on the Coast. The two: "The Crusades," and a screen dramatization of the careers of Benedict Arnold, Peggy Shipman and Major Andre, an episode in American history. . . .

CRITICISMS

As newspapers in other cities are discarding the "star" rating system by critics, the Kansas City Journal-Post has inaugurated that method, using as well, "family" and "adult" designations of films. The method: one star, mediocre; two, fair; three, good; four, very good; five, excellent. "A" or "F" will follow the star listing. The outcry concerning the screen's influence on children gave rise to the suitability ratings, said the paper. . . .

FAMILY FILMS

Favored by Parents' Magazine, national publication, is a family program as a weekly feature of every theatre policy. Furthering that end is the monthly medal awarded by the magazine to the producer of the film which best appeals to both children and adults. Monogram's "Girl of the Limberlost" took the October award, MGM's "Treasure Island" the September.

OLDTIMER RETURNS

To Universal's studio, for a small role, last week went Grace Cunard, once the company's serial queen of silent picture days, appearing in such films as "The Broken Coin." The present role is in "The Good Fairy," co-starring Margaret Sullavan and Herbert Marshall. . . .

BRITISH MONEY

Refuting statistically the oft-repeated statement that a large percentage of British theatre receipts comes to the U. S. as rentals, Simon Rowson, president of the British Film Association last week told a London meeting that of a $200,000,000 theatre gross last year, only $27,000,000 went to the U. S. British attendance runs to 20,000,000 weekly, he said. . . .

BOARD RULING

Ten years of continuous operation of the Miller and Jefferson theatres in Jefferson City, Mo., by the Dubinksy Brothers was indicated ended last week as the Kansas City grievance board dismissed a Dubinsky complaint against Harry Sodini, who recently leased the theatres before Dubinsky could negotiate purchase. Recognizing certain rights of the complainant, however, the board has referred the case to the Code Authority for review. . . .

GULICK AIRTALKS

Under contract for a series of broadcasts is Paul Gulick, advertising and publicity director of Universal, who tells of "The Human Side of Moving Picture Stars" under the sponsorship of Stylset. The first airtalk, last Sunday over WOR, concerned Universal's Binnie Barnes, new contract player. . . .

GANG FILMS SCORED

Supported enthusiastically last week by the McKinley lodge, Canton, Ohio, was the resolution passed recently by the Fraternal Order of Police convention, opposing underworld, gangster films as a handicap to police, especially as concerns the younger element. Vaudeville bookings of relatives of "public enemies" were also condemned. . . .

AUSTRALIAN FILMS

Fairly successful domestically are Australian films, the output of two Sydney studios, last week reported Arthur W. Kelly, United Artists foreign sales vice-president, from Australia. Sufficiently equipped for unpretentious productions, the Sydney plants warrant no comparison with Hollywood, he wrote, but in exhibition the ranking is high. . . .

BIGGEST GROSS

The highest gross for a two-week run yet recorded at RKO Radio City Music Hall in New York, was recently recorded when Columbia's "One Night of Love," starring Grace Moore, is reported by the theatre to have grossed $207,914.28. . . .

EQUIPMENT MEN SEEKING SHARE IN HOUSING LOAN

Hope Interpretation Will Permit Exhibitors to Borrow Funds for Purchase of Seats, Carpeting and Sound Apparatus

Manufacturers and dealers in motion picture theatre equipment will ask the Federal Housing Administration at Washington to interpret the Housing Act so that loans granted to owners for remodeling theatre structures under the Act may also be used to purchase new equipment—principally seats, carpeting, sound reproducing systems and the like.

With a possible $33,000,000 Government-guaranteed credit available for theatre modernization in the federal plan to underwrite $1,500,000,000 for "better housing," the industry has started to engage in one of the greatest periods of remodeling, repairing and re-equipping in its history. Already exhibitors have made application through local banking channels to obtain the permissible maximum of $2,000 per theatre for renovations.

Although manufacturers and dealers of theatre equipment appear to be in a favorable position to benefit anyway by a general "buying atmosphere" even though actual loans cannot under present interpretations be applied to any but permanent and unmovable improvements, the equipment interests hope to have the status of seats, carpeting and sound revised to permit of their classification as permanent fixtures.

The Housing Administration this week asked motion picture theatre owners everywhere to pledge the active support of their theatres and screens in furthering the "better building" program.

Precedent Already Established

Equipment makers and supply dealers decided to ask the Housing Administration to reconsider a previous decision by which seats and carpets were classed as removables and as such not eligible for purchase under the loan, after the administration had ruled that a refrigerator is a permanent fixture and, therefore, a part of the loan may be applied to its purchase.

The extent to which a loan that is entirely secured under the provision of the Housing Act can be applied to theatre equipment according to the present interpretation, depends upon the kind of equipment and requirements for its installation. Official opinion will go further than that no removable equipment comes within the meaning of the Act. Seats and carpeting, for example, have been officially adjudged removable. At the same time, loans for sound "and other equipment if actually built into the theatre" will be approved. In sound equipment circles, however, opinion has been expressed that this ruling eliminates soundheads and allied apparatus from the provisions of the Act.

Some equipment interests have even gone so far as to declare that screens, projectors, generators and the like should be eligible for purchase because no theatre could operate without them.

In any event there never before has been as much interest evidenced by equipment individuals in promoting a market for their product, with dozens of dealers and manufacturers contacting Washington on the issue independently and through the service organizations in their fields.

Regardless of whether the Administration will broaden its regulations to permit the use of government-guaranteed loans for financing new equipment along with the remodeling of theatre structures, it appears that the money that ordinarily would have been spent by the exhibitor for repairing his theatre property will now be available for new equipment, and because the need for new equipment of all kinds usually arises when the owner is engaged in a "sprucing up" process, the new theatre modernization plan is certain to open wide the market for theatre equipment sales.

Of significance to the efforts of equipment makers and dealers to pave the way for their participation in the theatre modernization movement was this statement from the Federal Housing Administration: "Immediate benefits will come to makers of building materials and equipment and to service organizations which adopt aggressive sales and advertising programs. But larger business returns will come swiftly to all other manufacturers who move alertly to their opportunities."

Some 16,000,000 buildings throughout the country need improvements and repairs, it was said.

Local Committees Planned

The Federal Housing Administration has set up an organization to cooperate with "Better Building Programs" of local communities.

The local committee is to be formed in every "progressive" community and will command, through its chairman, the cooperation of the regional, state or district director and through him the services and counsel of the Federal Housing Administration in Washington.

Technical specialists associated with Better Theatres will serve as consultants to exhibitors on all matters, technical and otherwise, pertaining to remodeling and to installation of new equipment under the modernization plan.

A typical reaction of exhibitors in the field to the possibilities offered by the loan program is reflected in a communication from Missouri Theatres, which said that the circuit is one of the first to apply for a loan to reconstruct the entire front of one of its properties at Senath, Mo.

One of the immediate effects of the modernization movement is expected to be the reopening of scores of theatres which have been dark for some time due to the inability of the owners to obtain the finances necessary for remodeling and new equipment. The rundown condition of many properties made it impossible to compete with more modern structures, and they subsequently were temporarily abandoned, though not dismantled.

The usual number of theatre reopenings at the beginning of each new show season in September has been increased considerably this year, according to daily reports from the field. Whether this development has any special significance to the government's modernization scheme is not definitely known.

All reports to the contrary, theatres now operating under a lease may be remodeled with a loan obtained under the Act. While loans are not made to lessees they can be obtained by lessors for improvement of their properties.

The Act provided (1) that each approved lending institution is insured against all loss up to an amount equivalent to 20 per cent of its total qualified loans (ten times the normal bad debt loss); (2) that a property owner may borrow from an approved institution up to $2,000 to repair, remodel and rebuild his property (not more than five such loans to one owner); (3) that loans shall be repaid in regular installments extending over periods of from 1 to 3 years, with provision for exceptional cases running to 5 years.

The financial institutions may not collect as interest and/or discount and/or fee of any kind, a total charge in excess of an amount equivalent to $5 per $100 of the original face amount of a 12 equal monthly payment note, deductible in advance. The cost for this new financing is extremely reasonable, lower than similar credit available in the past, and the arrangements are simple and direct, the Administration declares.

Because this money can be obtained easily and because the need for improvement is so great, thousands of theatre owners will call for Government credit to restore the motion picture theatre to the level of greatest usefulness.

A survey conducted by Quigley Publications indicates that thousands of theatres are ready to participate in long delayed renovation and alteration, with trade experts predicting a parallel wave of equipment buying to total over $50,000,000.

This, in addition to government credit for permanent improvements, may bring total expenditures by theatres during 1934-35 beyond $100,000,000.

Actors' Equity Association this week urged the owners of legitimate theatres to take advantage of the Government credit for improving their properties, pointing out that one of the basic reasons for the socalled "decline of the road" was the discomfort and unsightliness of many of the legitimate show houses.

The motion picture screen is one of the first mediums to be employed by the Administration in furthering its "Better Building Program" generally. Special short pictures will be pro-

NEWSREELS GIVE SPEEDY COVERAGE OF LINDBERGH KIDNAPING ARREST

Quizzing of Hauptmann and Interviews Are Presented on Screens of Broadway Within a Few Hours After Capture

Moving with speed which was almost comparable to that of the newspapers' rotary presses, the five newsreel companies late last week brought to the screens one of the most dramatic stories of a decade—the breaking wide open of the mystery of the Lindbergh baby kidnaping case, which for two and one-half years had baffled the best police minds.

Official announcement of the arrest of Bruno Richard Hauptmann as the receiver of at least a considerable portion of the ransom money and as the possible kidnaper himself, was made Thursday afternoon. Within a few hours newsreel shots of the questioning of the suspect, interviews with police officials and neighbors of Hauptmann were being shown in theatres along Broadway.

The newsreels, like the newspapers, had been tipped off nearly ten days before about the impending capture, but the authorities had asked their cooperation in maintaining strict secrecy. This knowledge permitted the assembling and re-editing of the pictorial records of the original kidnaping, and when the Hauptmann arrest "broke," a complete background of the case was in readiness for assembly, together with the fast moving events revolving around the climax.

First showings of the suspect's grilling at police headquarters and other activities attendant upon his arrest reached Broadway theatres about 10 o'clock that night. Universal News reached the Strand and ten other houses at this time, while Fox Movietone News appeared in the Roxy and Trans-Lux theatre. These reels had complete New York circuit coverage Friday morning.

Universal News had a "break." Thursday night was its makeup night, so the regular issue was held 25 minutes and shipments were made to all accounts during the night by air express. The Universal "Special" showed the prisoner, the Lindbergh money found in his possession and an interview with the New York Police Commissioner.

Fox Movietone obtained equally complete records which were shown as far West as Kansas City at the Friday matinees.

Special Issues Rushed

Fox Movietone and Hearst Metrotone make up on Monday and Wednesday nights, and so these two put out special issues, which were rushed to Boston, New Orleans and Kansas City in time for the afternoon shows on Friday. These reels ran about 350 feet each.

Typical of the activities of almost all the newsreel companies in New York was a description of the coverage by Pathe News, by C. R. Collins, news editor:

"On Thursday, September 20, about 3 p. m,. we were officially advised of the arrest of Bruno Hauptmann and learned of his being held and questioned at the Greenwich Street Police Station. We immediately rushed two sound crews with an electrician and lights to the station house where, after considerable difficulty, we succeeded in inducing the authorities to permit us to photograph Hauptmann being questioned, to photograph the pile of ransom money found at his home, where we recorded a talk by Police Commissioner O'Ryan, who posed with J. Edgar Hoover of the Secret Service and Colonel Schwarzkopf of the New Jersey State Police."

"About 4 p. m.," Mr. Collins continued, "we learned where Hauptmann lived in the Bronx and had the first crew on the scene making pictures of the home, garage where the money was found, Hauptmann's Dodge car with its telltale license plates, policemen digging up the ground surrounding the home looking for more money, and so forth."

Record Attendants' Interviews

Pathe also recorded the only interview given the newsreels at the time by Frank Lyle and John Lyon, the two gasoline station attendants who took the ransom bill and wrote Hauptmann's automobile license number on it, thereby leading the police directly to Hauptmann's capture.

Said Allyn Butterfield, Universal Newsreel editor:

"In putting out the 'special' we made no attempt to rehash the kidnaping angles of the case and the finding of the child's body, or to bring the Lindbergh family into the picture. The hot news was the arrest of Hauptmann and the dramatic account of the events which led to his capture. So we put this together in a flash news screen bulletin and speeded it to the theatres of the nation. The resulting letters and wires of thanks and commendation indicate that exhibitors and their patrons appreciate this fast service."

Paramount News had a short Lindbergh reel on the screen of its Broadway theatre for its late show Thursday night while a print of the Paramount record was reported to have been in San Francisco by special plane Friday morning.

The speed records established by the newsreels in the Hauptmann capture are generally reported to have exceeded those of the original kidnaping in 1932. At that time, prints were being shown on British screens about three weeks later. Within two or three days after last week's happenings all companies had prints aboard ships bound for England and the Continent.

Every Angle Covered

Since the actual arrest, the newsreels have been covering every angle of the story, including Hauptmann in the police lineup, his arraignment in Bronx county court, developments in Hopewell and Trenton, N. J., the scenes of the kidnaping—photographing of all the original ransom notes, interviews with Mrs. Hauptmann and Dr. John F. Condon ("Jafsie"), who turned the ransom money over to the kidnapers for Col. Lindbergh.

Berner J. Rybak, vice-president of the Trans-Lux newsreel theatre on Broadway, saw the long-cherished dream of newsreel men come true, in "beating the daily papers at their own game." In a letter to the Universal Newsreel editor, Mr. Rybak said:

"I believe there was a greater demonstration from the audience when the title was flashed on the screen than there ever has been for any other subject we have played. There was considerable clapping of hands and stamping of feet. I would judge that the majority of the audience hadn't even seen this in the newspapers and it came as a complete surprise to them."

Fox Movietone and Hearst Metrotone Issue Last Specials as Joint Product, Metrotone Starting Independently Oct. 2

Movietone and Metrotone Independent

Another development in the newsreel field came this week when Fox Movietone News and Hearst Metrotone launched separate selling campaigns which will be well under way when the two reels cease to be produced jointly by Fox Movietone.

On October 2, Hearst Metrotone will start operating independently with its own news-gathering agencies throughout the world.

As the "big gun" in its campaign, Hearst Metrotone, which is distributed by MGM, is selling Edwin C. Hill, whose radio talks and newspaper articles on "The Human Side of the News" have brought him into the homes of millions. Mr. Hill has been signed as the Hearst "Globe-Trotter."

Fox Movietone has the team of Laurence Stallings, noted newspaper man and playwright, and Lowell Thomas, radio commentator-competitor of Mr. Hill, who will do the narration.

All Hearst newspaper delivery wagons and newsstands next week will start displaying Mr. Hill's picture as the new newsreel reporter and 36,000 billboard locations have been signed for special advertisements.

Paramount News and Pathe News now are the only reels which have no "name" commentators. Universal has its Graham McNamee, Hearst, its Hill, and Fox its Lowell Thomas.

Academy Technicians Resume Regular Sessions

The technicians' branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast plans a series of technical meetings during the next few months, beginning this week. The first session will be devoted to "Transitions and Time Lapses." Cecil B. deMille will be guest chairman.

Members of the directors' and producers' branches of the Academy have been invited to attend. Papers will be presented by Fred Jackson, Anne Bauchens, Slavko Vorkapich, Loren Ryder and Martin Cohen.

$73,331,000 GROSSED BY 3,198 HOUSES IN 27 STATES

Reports on earnings and payrolls in exhibition for ten additional states to be surveyed by the Government in its national investigation of business were made known this week at Washington and disclosed that 1,612 theatres grossed $40,098,000 during 1933, making total gross earnings of $73,331,000 for some 3,198 theatres in 27 states reporting to date.

The census, covering all so-called "service" industries, is now nearing completion for the whole country. It was undertaken by the Administration through the United States Census Bureau with funds supplied by the Public Works Administration and was announced early this year at Washington as being intended as a basis for future comparison to show business improvement.

The census to date shows that exhibitors operating 3,198 theatres in the 27 states completely surveyed to date spent $13,904,000 on payrolls last year, or 19 cents out of every dollar collected at the box-office. Average yearly payroll per theatre now stands at $4,348.

Theatres surveyed so far each gross on an average of $22,930 annually, with the weekly gross averaging $441 per house.

PUBLIC DOESN'T WANT CULTURING BY RADIO

70 Per Cent Protest Federal Move to Allot One-Fourth of Time to Educators

The American public does not want cultural programs mixed with its radio entertainment, as proposed by the Federal Communications Commission at Washington.

Seventy per cent of an average group of 10,000 listeners in 31 large cities voted against the Administration's proposal to regulate broadcasts so that a fixed percentage, perhaps as much as 25 per cent, of all broadcasting time would be turned over to educational, religious and other cultural organizations for the exclusive broadcasting of their own programs, according to Frank Miske, director of research for Ross Federal Service.

Basic opposition was on the grounds that such a proposal would tend to take from the public more liberties and would make the Government more of a dictator over radio, which, obviously, the large radio interests disfavor. The results of the survey follow:

E. H. Le Mare, Organist, Dies

Edwin Henry Le Mare, organist and author of more than 200 musical compositions, among them "Moonlight and Roses," died at his home in Los Angeles Monday. He was 69 years old.

Mr. Le Mare had been official organist in Portland, Me.; Chattanooga, Tenn., and San Francisco.

Born in Ventnor, Isle of Wight, England, he made his first tour of the United States in 1901 and later became organist and director of music at the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburgh.

Mary Pickford Broadcast Set

"The Church Mouse," a romantic comedy by Ladislaus Fodor, has been decided upon as the initial offering of Mary Pickford's radio stock company, when it makes its air debut over an NBC-WEAF coast-to-coast network on Wednesday, October 3, at 8 p. m. The program is sponsored by the manufacturers of Royal desserts, and will be broadcast from Hollywood.

Joe Penner, comedian of the air, with his famous duck, will begin a new series of broadcasts October 7 for Fleischmann's yeast on behalf of bakers, over an NBC-WJZ network. Penner has been working in Hollywood in "College Rhythm," set for early release.

Block and Sully, comedy air team, who have just completed their appearance in the United Artists-Samuel Goldwyn picture, "Kid Millions," starring Eddie Cantor, resumed radio performances on Monday of this week over Station WABC. The same station on Tuesday evening broadcast a "preview-by-ear," the subject having been United Artists' "The Count of Monte Cristo," produced by Reliance. Eddie Cantor resumes with the Chase and Sanborn Hour on the air October 7 over an NBC WEAF network, succeeding Jimmy Durante.

Will Rogers will be featured on the Gulf Headliners' series of broadcasts, over a WABC-Columbia network, beginning October 7. Alternating with Rogers will be Stoopnagle and Budd, comedians.

First Division Sets Four-Day Convention

Branch managers, salesmen and bookers of First Division Pictures will attend a four-day convention at the Park Central Hotel, New York, beginning Friday of this week. Harry Thomas, president, will outline plans for the reorganized company. One of the primary purposes of the session is the introduction to the organization personnel of William M. L. Fiske 3rd, and Nicholas S. Ludington, who recently bought into the company.

Late last week Mr. Thomas was elected president, Mr. Ludington and Mr. Fiske vice-presidents, and Julius K. Chapman, secretary. A treasurer is expected to be named shortly. Three new features and several short subjects will be screened.

Fox Consolidation Is Urged by Judge

Consolidation of Fox Theatres with Fox Metropolitan Playhouses was urged upon attorneys for both companies in New York this week by Justice Martin Manton in federal district court, New York. He said reorganization could proceed under Section 77-B of the bankruptcy laws, with creditors of Fox Theatres, which owns all the Fox Metropolitan outstanding stock, and creditors of Fox Metropolitan participating.

The attorney for Fox Theatres, Ralph O. Wilguss, declared, however, that reorganization of that company under 77-B would be impossible, as claims approximating $35,000,000 had been filed against the company and its assets were negligible. Subsequently it was estimated the value of the company's assets would not exceed $2,000,000.

Nevertheless meetings were to be started this week between Milton C. Weisman, receiver for Fox Theatres, and representatives of Fox Metropolitan. William E. Atkinson, receiver for Fox Theatres until Mr. Weisman entered the picture, has withdrawn as co-receiver. He will continue as president of Fox Theatres Corporation.

The hearing, called to consider the petition of creditors represented by Charles H. Kelby for a reorganization of Fox Theatres, was adjourned for two weeks to allow a special master to rule on provability of claims, which apparently will delay for at least three months a creditors' bid for Fox Theatres assets.

Sale of Fox Metropolitan would be averted and Skouras and Randforce retained as operators under a reorganization plan developed by Archibald Palmer, counsel for a bondholders group, and expected to be submitted to Federal Judge Julian W. Mack next week.

Discussed were campaigns on two new stars, Mady Christians and Maurice Schwartz. Miss Christians' first will be "Wicked Woman." Mr. Rapf indicated that Maurice Schwartz might be placed in roles of the Lon Chaney or Emil Jannings variety.

'NEW SCREEN STUFF FOR MELODRAMA'

DeCasseres Calls 'Judgment Day' First Hit of Stage Season, and 'Bride of Torozko' Fine Comedy

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

JUDGMENT DAY

Why not try a new kind of picture trial scene? We have been looking at the same old stale stuff for years. It has become more standardized than codes for stationary pumps.

These trials are always for the same old murder or the same old divorce, with the same old questions, answers, crooked dicks and weeping mothers and sweethearts.

Elmer Rice's "Judgment Day" would make the best (and most unusual) trial scene we have ever had in pictures. It would also make a tremendously thrilling story, for the off-stage matter in this grim melodramatic satire, in the hands of a good scenarist, would triple the value of the play as it now stands.

There are two Elmer Rices. There is the Rice that has a fine, sensitive, straight theatre instinct—the Rice of "Counsellor-at-Law," "On Trial" and "Street Scene." Then there is Rice the propagandist for some sort of Communism. He rages against the crimes of capitalism and Fascism, but conveniently forgets the crimes of Russian Communism. The People are now deified. All crimes in their name are sacred. Merely a matter of taste in guillotine fashions—do you like a red or a brown blade to nip your noodle at the neck?

Mr. Rice, with his wife, has bought the Belasco Theatre. He opened it with this gripping, superbly acted play, written, directed and staged by himself. It's the first hit of the season.

It is frankly a melodrama. And although many critics made faces at it, the audiences are sold on it—and not radical audiences necessarily. For I am anything but "radical," and I admit freely that no play of this kind has kept me more interested in many years. It is knock-out picture stuff for a great cast. I see no propaganda in it, although it is, obliquely, a swipe—a furious, searing swipe—at the brutal sadism of the present German rulers.

It is laid in a mythical "Slavic country" and concerns the trial of three persons for an attempt on the life of the Minister-President (who may or may not be Adolf—as you will).

The whole thing is a pure frame-up (á la the Reichstag fire). It moves, in three acts and five unrelenting scenes, to a terrific climax, in which the Dictator is shot by one of the Judges.

"Judgment Day" is a masterwork of dynamic terror and climacteric crescendos. Humor? Plenty of it. Romance? There is "the famous Italian opera-singer" and the Minister of Culture and Enlightenment (gorgeous for picture potentialities).

The players, especially Fania Marinoff as the opera singer (who blows the frame-up) and Josephine Victor as the accused girl, are the best drilled I have seen in years.

A great, vital, melodrama of Right Now. Here's new screen stuff.

THE BRIDE OF TOROZKO

Gilbert Miller and Herman Shumlin made their seasonal bow with a fine, sensitive, human comedy from the Hungarian of Otto Indig. It was adapted from the original by Ruth Langner.

"The Bride of Torozko" is not the sort of product that will draw crowds into the theatre. While audience reaction was favorable, this fine satire is too clean, too subtle, too exotic for those who are drawn by big names, sugar-coated pornography and loud and chattering climaxes.

Now is the time, Mr. Breen, Mr. Hays, et al., to do this play, to compel the screening of it even if it doesn't promise great box office returns.

Here are clean romance (oh, there's lots of it left in the world!) deft characterizations, and above all a plea for religious tolerance put into a mould that is absolutely original. But "The Bride of Torozko" is as far superior to "Abie's Irish Rose," to which some critic compared it, as "Judgment Day" is to "The Trial of Mary Dugan."

Women wept over the pathos of this simple story and the next moment roared. It hurdles all formulas, and is not goody-goody. But it is decent.

It is laid in a Roumanian province now governed by Hungary.

The Recorder of the town has discovered that Klari, a Catholic girl of the village, is a Jewess and a foundling. A great to-do is made over this. Her Catholic lover drowns his sorrow by joining the army.

But in the second act we find, plausibly enough, that Klari is neither a Catholic nor a Jewess, but a Protestant.

The whole story is a chuckling satire on religious intolerance, a spoof at the fatality of birth.

But the outstanding figure in "The Bride of Torozko" is Sam Jaffe's Herschkowitz, an orthodox Jewish innkeeper who shelters Klari and takes a delight in making her a Jewess.

This is one of the master-creations of the current stage by one of its greatest actors, Sam Jaffe. His shrewd Hebraic observations tickle the brain enormously. He is the comedy, the tragedy, the mystery of Jewry: "Yes, Klari, God made the Jews the Chosen People, but what he chose them for, I don't know!"

Jaffe ought to be starred in this picture. Jean Arthur was a touching and sensitive Klari, who tries to be a Catholic, a Jewess and a Protestant by turns.

There is a sub-story also in the concealing by Herschkowitz and Klari of two army deserters in the inn, for which Herschkowitz is jugged for a week.

If this beautiful, wise little play doesn't go into pictures, then the Clean Up promise is just baloney.

STRANGERS AT HOME

Skinning and honking along the main highways and byways in your gas-buggy you have no doubt noted those signs, "Tourists Accommodated."

In this play, "Strangers at Home," by Charles Divine (M. S. and G. S. Schlesinger producing) we are taken into one of these houses and shown the havoc that is wrought by letting into your family fortress the wide-wide world and all the noise, dirt and moralic or immoralic sediment thereof.

The theme is too trivial for the almost tragic manner in which Mr. Divine has treated it.

If "Strangers at Home" has any picture potentialities it should go on the screen as a roaring farce, or if it cannot be made to roar, it should at least chirp. But now it only whimpers.

In the story as is, because of this invasion of tourists one of the Crosby daughters lost her fellow, another one lost that which the late Mrs. Grundy held to be more precious than all of Uncle Morgenthau's hoarded gold, the boy took to that which stealeth away our pains—liquor, and a seaman's life Yo-ho! and old man Crosby himself came down with coronary thrombosis.

Mrs. Crosby and her widowed sister didn't really need this tourist trade to make ends meet. They wanted novelty, excitement, romance.

And they got it—but Mr. Divine didn't record it in the proper key.

KEEP MOVING

This is a "revue" in two acts, crocheted by many hands. The White Horse Tavern Productions produced it, and it will probably keep moving right into Cain's flophouse.

Aside from the title, there isn't much for pictures here. It's also full of dirty spots. When it isn't smutty, it's dead fish.

But there's Tom Howard. This dead-pan comedian is the show. Howard has never had a part to do his talents justice. Better luck, Tom!

The Singer Midgets appeared dressed in Walt Disney pig characters. This is somehow revolting to me. But midgets must live, too, I suppose. But why as pigs?

Southern Owners Protest Paper's Reviewing System

The Gulf States Theatre Owners' Association, with headquarters in New Orleans, has protested against the star reviewing system employed by the Item, local afternoon paper, and has asked that the method be changed. Exhibitors are anxious to see the elimination of the star method and "negative" reviews. Kenneth T. Knocloch, novelist and newspaper writer, is the storm center, his reviews causing almost a procession of exhibitors to the Item's business office.

ZONING PLAN HELD BAR TO A SENATORIAL QUIZ

Code Authority's 12 Principles Said to Assure 'Right to Buy,' Eliminate Other Complaints

Solution of most of the problems encountered in clearance and zoning controversies was seen this week at NRA offices in Washington in the 12 principles enunciated two weeks ago by the Code Authority. Of prime importance were the stipulations that clearance shall be based on admission prices, not upon double featuring or stage show policies, and shall take precedence over clearance specified in contracts.

Await Test of Principles

While NRA officials refused to discuss the regulations in detail, they indicated that no further consideration would be given to the reopening of those sections of the code dealing with clearance and zoning until application of the principles has been tested.

In other quarters belief was expressed that the 12-point program will avert any Congressional investigation of the industry during the coming session, that it practically assures to exhibitors "the right to buy" and eliminates the complaint that theatres, once classified below first or second run, found it practically impossible to improve their standing.

While the program does not go into the question of block booking, there is a well-defined impression that that phase will be less important in view of the larger advantages given exhibitors in other ways. The Code Authority has emphasized the greater privileges embodied.

A further safeguard to exhibitors is said by observers to be contained in the provision that "in the event of the building or opening of a new theatre or the reopening of a closed theatre, the clearance and zoning board shall immediately meet and determine the zone in which such theatre shall be placed" and "such theatre shall, of course, have the opportunity of purchasing such run as it is able and which the distributor may desire to sell."

Assessments To Be Revised

The Administration in Washington announced that exhibitor assessments for support of the code administration for the second half of the year will be revised to eliminate burdensome levies complained of by some exhibitors. No general revision is to be made, however.

The NRA stated that a period of 10 days would be given for the filing of objections to the reopening of the code for assents, a move recommended by the Code Authority and approved by NRA officials.

Legal questions pertaining to two amendments to the code were discussed by a committee comprised of Austin Keough, chairman; William McKay, Sidney Bromberg and William Jenkins. The two amendments are in reference to contract labor in studios and minimum wage provisions for vaudeville talent.

A resolution stipulating that "serial motion pictures shall not be classified as short subjects and be regarded as such within the provisions of Article V-D, Part 5, of the Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry," was unanimously adopted by the Code Authority last week. That part of the code referred to in the adopted resolution prohibits any distributor from requiring as a condition of entering into a contract for the licensing of exhibition of features that the exhibitor buy more shorts than he gets features.

Johnson Resigns; Roosevelt Accepts

General Hugh S. Johnson, who for more than a year has controlled the destinies of thousands of businesses as Administrator of the National Industrial Recovery Act, this week requested President Roosevelt to accept his resignation. The President, from his home in Hyde Park, N. Y., announced acceptance. Mr. Johnson leaves October 15.

Washington speculated on the future of Sol. A. Rosenblatt, division administrator in charge of amusements and regarded as third in importance in the Johnson cabinet.

In a letter from New York September 24 General Johnson wrote the President as follows:

"The reorganization of NRA, which has been the subject of so many conferences and memoranda between us, is becoming momentarily more urgent. We are in agreement upon the general form of reorganization and I do hope you will now also see eye-to-eye with me on the subject of my resigning from a job which, as reorganized, seems altogether superfluous. Added to this are private considerations which are becoming more and more poignant. I therefore urge again your acceptance of my resignation."

The President replied that General Johnson had accomplished that part of his job which he had set out to accomplish.

Mr. Johnson, who was in charge of the NRA organization plan before enactment of the NIRA and participated prominently in the final activities surrounding adoption of the motion picture code last summer and autumn, had been criticized in recent weeks for his "iron-handed" administration and "cracking down" policies by several members of the Roosevelt official family, especially by Donald R. Richberg and Secretary of Labor Perkins.

Declares $1.75 Dividend

A dividend of $1.75 a share on the 7 per cent preferred stock, payable October 1, was announced Tuesday by Marcus Loew Theatres, Ltd., of Canada.

London Advertising Head in U. S.

John B. Myers, publicity and advertising manager for London Films, whose productions are released by United Artists, is in New York for a fortnight studying American exploitation methods.

Reissue Westerns For Family Films

A motion picture guide, designed to promote better understanding between theatres and public, appeared this week in the Sunday amusement section of the Memphis Commercial Appeal. The guide is compiled by the Memphis Better Films Council, and films scheduled to play in Memphis during the week are listed in it under three classifications: adults, adolescents and children.

Reissuing Westerns

Warner and Columbia, in line with the agitation for family pictures as evidenced in places like Memphis, announced they will take advantage of the situation by reissuing several westerns, given Production Code Administration approval.

Columbia's approved westerns include "Unknown Valley," "McKenna of the Mounted," "Silent Men," "Fighting for Justice," "The Western Code," "The Avenger," "Desert Vengeance," "The Fighting Sheriff," "The Dawn Trail" and "South of the Rio Grande." "The Texas Ranger," a Warner western soon to be reissued, also has been approved.

Harry A. Post, vice-president of Celebrity Productions, arrived in Hollywood to confer on Powers Comi-Color Cartoons.

George R. Batcheller has started the new season's program of 18 Chesterfield and Invincible pictures with "The Curtain Falls," starring Henrietta Crosman.

Economic Films, Inc., has been formed by Frank Wilson, whose first picture, "America Forward," five reels, has been completed.

Lesser To Produce Twelve

Sol Lesser is negotiating to produce 12 features for major release. He has decided to produce for 1934-35 only four of the six George O'Brien pictures to be distributed by Fox. The other two will be for the next season.

M. H. Hoffman has announced an increase of the current Liberty Pictures program of 8 features to 12, with four "specials" and two "super specials" in addition. Production budgets have been raised 25 per cent. Liberty has closed a franchise deal with Security Pictures for Omaha, Des Moines and Kansas City.

With the exception of dubbed versions Paramount will confine its foreign language picture program this year to 10 features, with eight French films made in Paris and two Spanish features with Carlos Gardel made in the East.

Bert C. Fassio, president of Shamrock Pictures of Detroit, has opened his first exchange in that city to distribute in the Michigan territory.

Darryl Zanuck has launched the second year of 20th Century Pictures with production starting on "The Mighty Barnum," starring Wallace Beery, with Walter Lang directing. Four others to start before the new year are "Call of the Wild," starring Fredric March; "Clive of India," Ronald Colman; "The Red Cat," now being adapted by Bess Meredyth, and Hal Long from the musical by Hans Adler and Rudolph Lothar, and "Cardinal Richelieu," George Arliss.

The Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association of Philadelphia, in a fight against "extortionate film rentals," is employing the screen, radio and public mass meetings "to acquaint theatregoers with the abuses heaped upon the independent theatremen."

In New York, Loew's, Inc., completed product discussions with RKO, and RKO will get all of Fox and half of Universal and Columbia pictures for 30 of its Greater New York theatres. RKO will not drop any of the 11 recently acquired independent theatres and Loew's will not surrender any of its product to these houses, the transfer taking in only units held prior to the leasing drive.

EXHIBITORS DROP MUSIC TAX FIGHT; U. S. TO INCLUDE THEIR COMPLAINTS

Legal Committee Gets Assurances from Washington That Antitrust Suit Will Be Brought to Trial Before November 1

The legal subcommittee of the exhibitors' national emergency committee, formed to combat the attempts of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to increase music taxes, has decided, upon assurances from Washington that the Government will amend its anti-trust suit to cover exhibitor complaints against the society and that the suit would be brought to trial before November 1, to refrain from initiating any official independent action against the society until the Government's suit is brought to trial. The exhibitors' committee so voted late Wednesday.

Despite the fact that an exhibitor delegation Thursday had failed to get a commitment from the Attorney General's office in Washington that the Government would ask an injunction restraining ASCAP from placing its proposed music tax increases in effect October 1, the legal committee made its decision, which means that all exhibitors whose contracts for music performance rights with the Society expire on or after October 1 will be forced to pay the new taxes until such time as either the Government or the exhibitors' national emergency committee takes action. Payments will be made under protest in hope of recovery if the federal suit is won.

It was reported this week that federal officials advised the exhibitor delegation against injunction procedure, declaring that an early trial of the Government action was certain and would provide exhibitors with adequate relief.

The Government has informed the exhibitors it will move for calendar preference for its suit. George Z. Medalie, former U. S. attorney retained by the exhibitors, will withdraw.

More Funds Asked

The sole statement by any member of the exhibitors' committee in New York last week came from Walter Vincent, its chairman, who said that the committee "is now of the opinion that the situation is being very capably handled by the Department of Justice." Mr. Vincent said, however, that more funds would be needed to bring exhibitor witnesses to New York to testify.

No relaxation of the exhibitors' campaign to obtain complete relief from music taxes by federal legislative means is contemplated, it was said. The point was made that Department of Justice representatives urged exhibitors to continue their program and advise Senators and Congressmen.

An example of the possibilities of organized exhibitor action against ASCAP is seen in the action this week of the City Commission of Miami, Fla., which has passed an ordinance providing for the payment of a $2,500 license fee to the City of Miami by any person collecting a music tax in that city. The portion of the ordinance specifically dealing with the licensing of music tax collectors reads as follows:

"An ordinance providing for the registration of all persons, firms and corporations engaged in certain businesses, professions or occupations in the city of Miami: Fixing the license taxes for such businesses, professions or occupations: Providing the terms under which such licenses may be obtained: Regulating the carrying on of such business, professions or occupations under such license and providing a penalty for the violation of the ordinance: Declaring same to be an emergency measure and dispensing with the reading of this ordinance in two separate days by a 4/5 vote of the City Commission.

"Be it ordained by the Commission of the City of Miami:

"Royalty and copyright agents and salesmen:.....$2,500.00

"Shall mean each person, as agent for another, or as the representative of another in any capacity, collecting, or attempting to collect, or receiving money, or other valuable consideration for rights, royalty, rents or fees on copyrighted music, books, recorded music for mechanical reproduction, radio programs and/or patents.

"Any person or persons and the member of any firm or corporation violating this ordinance or any of its provisions, or sections, or parts of sections, shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $200 or by imprisonment for a period not exceeding 60 days, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the Court."

"I am sure if the city government of every city in the United States passed a similar ordinance or license fee, a happy conclusion would soon be realized by the theatre owners of the United States, in so far as their persecution by the ASCAP is concerned," said Sidney Meyer, secretary of Wometco Theatres, Inc.

In New York on Monday, E. C. Mills, ASCAP's general manager, said that as the society has no representative in Miami there is nobody there to tax. Miami exhibitors, he said, pay their fees by mail.

"However," Mr. Mills said, "we reserve the right to assign a representative to that city, and if and when we do we will be compelled to pass the extra $2,500 cost on to the exhibitors. Perhaps exhibitors want to help out the city government and are too modest to do it directly."

Explaining his recent advice to members of the Allied States Exhibitors' Association not to contribute to the general war chest to fight the society's tax increases, Abram F. Myers, Allied's general counsel, said it would be difficult for an individual theatre to establish conclusively that it was engaged in interstate business.

His advice to Allied members is to pay the first installment of the increased tax and rely upon a campaign in Congress to effect a modification of the copyright law.

"It is difficult," Mr. Myers said, "to see how enduring relief can be obtained by litigation so long as the law permits the copyright owner to split his monopoly three ways —publishing, recording and performing— and to collect a royalty on each."

The society is relying on a 1926 ruling of the Department of Justice that it is not a combination in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, and is so advising its counsel in various cities. There has been no change in the law, the society points out, since the 1926 ruling when, after a two years' investigation, the Department of Justice reached the conclusion that there were no grounds for proceeding against the ASCAP because none of its transactions were in interstate commerce.

FIVE YEAR RECORD FOR "CHU CHIN CHOW"

When 27,873 bought tickets last Sunday to see British-Gaumont's "Chu Chin Chow" at the Roxy theatre in New York, a five-year record was set, according to the figures of the theatre, which showed that 28,605 had seen "The Cock-Eyed World" on Sunday, August 4, 1929.

Miami Ordinance Requires Fee of $2,500 for Anyone Collecting Tax; Cost Will Be Passed On to Exhibitors, Warns Mills

Hearing Is Postponed In Edwina Booth Suit

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer this week in New York supreme court asked certain evidence be ruled out in the $1,000,000 damage action brought against it by Edwina Booth, actress. Miss Booth charges she contracted a serious illness when she was required to expose her body to the sun to acquire a tan necessary for her role in "Trader Horn," produced in Africa.

The company contended Miss Booth failed to comply with a court order requiring that she serve it with a bill of particulars, as of last April. Attorneys for Miss Booth claimed she could not obey the order since she was under observation in a hospital. Hearing was postponed to next week.

August Tax Revenue Aggregates $993,717

The Internal Revenue Bureau at Washington has announced admission tax collections for the month of August as having totaled $993,717, which compares with $943,384 during August, 1933.

GAUMONT MOVE TO BUY B. I. P. IS REPORTED

Purchase or Amalgamation Thought Aim; Weeks Names Schlaifer Sales Manager

That Gaumont-British Picture Corporation may either purchase the controlling stock in British International Pictures or amalgamate both companies was indicated Wednesday in cables from London. Advices from the British capital said reports were current that conferences now taking place in London between Isidore Ostrer, Gaumont president, and John Maxwell, president of B. I. P., were regarded as pointing to either amalgamation or purchase of Mr. Maxwell's interests in B. I. P. by Mr. Ostrer.

In New York, while Gaumont officials were refusing either to confirm or deny the reports from London, George W. Weeks, Gaumont general sales manager, announced appointment of L. J. Schlaifer, formerly with United Artists and Universal in sales capacities, to the post of sales manager for Gaumont in America.

B.I.P. Studios Best Equipped

It was pointed out in New York that B. I. P. has substantial interest in more than 150 theatres throughout England and also has the largest and best-equipped studios. Gaumont-British controls more than 300 theatres.

Another Gaumont official said either the purchase or amalgamation report could be true, but that he had not been notified.

Mark Ostrer, chairman of the board and general manager, could not be reached for an official statement.

If the Gaumont distribution arrangements with Fox, whereby the Gaumont sales staffs will operate directly out of Fox exchanges as separate entities are not extended beyond one year, it was stated, Gaumont will open its own exchanges.

Releasing 16 in U. S.

Gaumont, meanwhile, has increased its production program from 26 to 31 for the current season, but of this number only 16 will be released in this country. Eight are ready for distribution. The 16 will be sold in two blocks.

Mr. Weeks left Monday for a trip to key cities to organize his sales force, with Boston and Philadelphia scheduled as the two first stops. In each situation a full staff and local manager will be appointed.

Prior to his depature for Boston, Mr. Weeks closed a deal with Edward Alperson, acting on behalf of Skouras eastern houses, under the terms of which all the Gaumont-British 1934-35 product will be taken by the circuit.

The eight Gaumont features now ready are "Power," "Chu Chin Chow," Evergreen," "Little Friend," "Princess Charming," "The Iron Duke," "Jack Ahoy" and "Evensong."

In Chicago, Abe Fischer will continue as the company's sales head under a realignment.

Lou Goldberg, formerly of the Columbia Pictures' home office publicity staff, this week joined Gaumont's publicity and exploitation department.

Appointment of Mr. Schlaifer as sales manager introduces to the British company a man with wide experience in the American film market since 1914, when he joined Warner Features in Calgary, Canada. A year later he joined United Film Service Co., in New York, and in 1916 went to Universal, leaving to manage the Unicorn Exchange in Chicago, and to operate state rights exchanges of his own, but returning to Universal in 1920 as Seattle western division manager. After becoming western division manager, in June, 1927, he joined United Artists, but February of 1932 found him back at Universal again. Early in 1933 he returned to United Artists as assistant to Al Lichtman.

Numerous people prominent in New York socially and officially and in the film business were guests last Friday evening at the Roxy theatre at the first showing of the operetta, "Chu Chin Chow." A dinner preceded the showing and a reception concluded the evening.

Aldermanic President Bernard S. Deutsch and Mrs. Deutsch, Sir Gerald Campbell, British consul general; Gladys Swarthout, Mr. and Mrs. Martin Saportas, Conde Nast, Mr. and Mrs. Waddill Catchings and others were among the dinner guests of Howard S. Cullman, receiver for the theatre, and Mark Ostrer, head of Gaumont British.

"Chu Chin Chow," the first of 12 Gaumont pictures signed for the Roxy theatre by Howard S. Cullman, drew $24,200 in its first four days.

Herschel Stuart Heads Columbia Public Relations

Herschel Stuart was appointed late Wednesday director of public relations for Columbia Pictures in New York, in charge of the advertising, publicity, exploitation, radio and art departments, succeeding George Brown. He will assume his duties immediately.

Mr. Stuart has been identified chiefly with theatres. He was born at Franklin, Ky., July 17, 1893, and had his first business experience in the newspaper field. He handled publicity years ago for various circuits before he became general manager of Hulsey Theatres. Mr. Stuart was manager of several film exchanges, returning to exhibition as division manager for Publix in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

For eight years he was chief of staff for Harold B. Franklin with various national circuits, including general manager in Washington, Oregon and Montana. He was for five years general manager of the Poli Division of Fox Theatres in New England, and in 1933 Mr. Franklin appointed him general manager of the RKO circuit, a post which he relinquished late last year.

duced to explain how property owners, builders and equipment interests can profit in the nationwide movement. Slides also will be sent to exhibitors for relaying messages from the Administration to the public.

Quick Response Shown

James A. Moffett, Federal Housing Administrator, this week sent to 15,000 theatre owners an official request for their cooperation. Within a few days he received favorable replies from 1,300 owners.

"The average exhibitor considers his theatre a 'community center' and knows that when he turns out to boost a movement which is aimed to help those in his town or city he is building up good will," said Mr. Moffett.

One-sheet posters, booklets and pamphlets were also sent to exhibitors for display in their theatres, tying in the theatre with the program.

Orders were sent to state directors by the Housing Administrator to communicate with exhibitors to arrange tieups.

"Enthusiastic cooperation by an exhibitor thoroughly experienced in show business not only will prove of value to his house, but will be a substantial contribution to 'Better Housing Programs,'" said the Administration at Washington this week.

"Better Housing Week"

A "Better Housing Week" conducted by individual theatres in communities was suggested, with the idea of helping the business of theatres through increased employment and earnings that are expected to result locally from the program.

Exhibitors, too, were urged to participate in the community parades which will be staged for "Better Housing Weeks."

Poster and essay contests will be conducted in all public schools, while arrangements are being made at Washington for a national system of speakers' and radio bureaus as a subcommittee. Specifically provided for in the plan will be a schedule of speakers to talk from theatre stages and at organization meetings, luncheons and the like.

National Housing Administration representatives everywhere are conducting local meetings to explain the machinery for obtaining loans. Augmenting the speakers is a series of slides with sound accompaniment detailing in question-and-answer form the rules and regulations for borrowing, and the manner in which loans may be obtained. Reproduction is made over a combination slide and turn table device called Visomatic, marketed by Major J. Andrew White in New York.

The Administration believes that property owners, community leaders, bankers, theatre owners, equipment manufacturers, supply dealers, architects and contractors do not have to be sold on the benefits of the program as much as they have to be told about it, and therefore efforts will be expended accordingly in the next few weeks in a "full blast" publicity campaign.

Arrangements have been made to place a supply of the Visomatic machines—used principally in industrial fields—in Western Union offices in 200 cities. Four productions already have been completed, one to explain the provisions of the act to architects, equipment manufacturers and supply dealers; another to clarify the machinery for property owners; a third to explain the plan to bankers and financial institutions, and a fourth to aid local campaign committees in organizing "Better Building" drives.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

ONE reason advanced by Tennessee-born, 33-year-old Grace Moore for the success of "One Night of Love," her celluloid musical which took the high hat off opera, is the independence of the producers, Columbia. "I didn't feel as though I was working for the Chase National Bank," she sopranoed.

Much is known of Miss Moore's career in highly-polished opera; little is known of her younger days as a Holy Roller singer in her native Jellicoe, Tennessee, or, of the time, some 14 years ago, when she was breaking in on the stage in "Hitchy-Koo."

She, too, has a complaint to make about Hollywood. She says that the gown shops and other purveyors of feminine finery "gyp" the headliners. As an opera singer in New York she said she could get a 25 per cent discount on all of her clothing, "but in Hollywood they put you on the spot for a 50 per cent increase."

As a sidelight on how competitive producers in Hollywood regard "One Night of Love," it is our understanding that Eddie Mannix, associate producer for Metro, offered to buy the negative from Columbia, for distribution independently or otherwise, at a price which would have given Harry Cohn's company a profit of some $500,000 above production costs.

Some of our palpitating showmen might like to know something about Mr. Cohn's proclivities and enterprise in pulling the trigger on this one. The story on the Coast is that against the opinions of his own organization, Harry himself propelled "One Night of Love" into execution. Of course Sam Briskin and others at the studio had something to do with the actual production, but the courage to make the film is attributed to Harry Cohn.

It is now motion picture history that "One Night of Love," playing its first booking at a single theatre—the Music Hall in New York, grossed some $207,000 in two weeks. The first week's gross was $104,000, which was more than the combined grosses of the Capital, Palace, Roxy and Strand. These four houses together seat 10,500 more persons than the Music Hall.

A piece of publicity sent by the Paramount home office on Broadway confuses us more than a little. Boldly captioned: "HOWARD J. GREEN EXPLAINS FILM WRITING," this informative document quotes six-footer Mr. Green, ex-reporter, former vaudevillian (Hockey and Green) and now a Paramount scenario writer, with the statement that "the best way to write for motion pictures is NOT to write for motion pictures."

In the same bulky envelope containing other notations on the week's news at Paramount appeared a different yarn informing us: "Ninety per cent of the writers at Paramount smoke pipes."

Then there is Broadway Harry Jans' tale of the two vaudeville actors who decided that Hollywood was the place for their talents. They sold everything they had, bought a small car and struck out on the long trail westward.

Two weeks in the movie capital and they were broke. Wiring their agent in New York, they implored him to find something for them—pronto! Five weeks later, with but three dollars between them, they received a reply.

"Can get you boys week in Providence and week in Boston," read the telegram. "Wire confirmation."

The actors, quite perplexed, again examined their three dollars—and then sent the following reply to the agent:

"We accept date. Leaving at once by magic carpet!" . . .

With possibly a fine concession to the sensibilities of good Christians, the United Press and member newspapers running a serialized feature by Mae West, entitled "Me and My Past," omitted the installment scheduled for Sunday and ran it on Monday instead.

An editor's note explained the arrangement was requested by the violet-eyed, curvacious Mae herself. Probably because the installment in question, as told by Leicester Wagner, United Press staff correspondent, who "ghosted" the yarn, revealed to a breathless and anxious world that West had no use for various things, including a bust developer.

There are no more "loose morals" in Hollywood, advised Mae, later. "After what we've been through you'd be lucky to find a loose nickel."

To which the widely-circulated tabloid Daily News of New York added: "It evidently has done Mae good to be cleaned up," basing this opinion on a first-hand investigation of her latest, "Belle of the '90's." The film was first shown last Friday afternoon at the Paramount theatre, where a cardboard full-length figure of Mae stands in front of the lobby, mechanically manipulated in such a way that the substantial Westian hips roll hither and yon to the accompaniment of a fresh Broadway breeze.

Theatre owners in New Orleans and the publishers of the Daily Item in that town appear to be engaged in a bit of a tussle. The exhibitors are complaining about the manner in which the newspaper is criticizing their features, claiming that the city editor is assigning police reporters, cubs, horse and snake editors and occasionally one of the porters to review the films. No less than six different by-lines appear over as many feature reviews printed on the motion picture page of an issue of the Daily Item on hand.

It's a long way from the garden variety bent-pin fish-hook that dangled on the end of an old hickory stick to Mr. Gary Cooper's set of ritzy gold-plated hooks which he just purchased to flaunt in the faces of those finny trout up Lone Pine way in the west. The hooks are the newest things in the trout-cleaning art and are gold-plated because they are rust proof. Of more importance to the polished gentlemen of our cinema city is the attractiveness of the gold hooks. The Hollywood influence.

Motion picture advertising departments in New York are sticklers for adhering to the regulations set down by J. J. McCarthy's (MPPDA) Advertising Advisory Council for raising the standards of exploitation, promotional and advertising copy. Everything must first be submitted and then stamped with approval before it can be published. There are no excuses for the failure of anyone to abide by this rule. And so, to make doubly sure that there is no slipup in this connection, S. Charles Einfeld, advertising chief at Warners, has had erected on the wall of his department a sign measuring about a foot-and-a-half on which appear large black letters asking this pertinent question:

DID THE HAYS OFFICE SEE IT?

Balaban & Katz's theatre advertising copy announcing the opening of Mae West's "Belle of the Nineties" in Chicago said that it is "Paramount's Picture Presented Exactly as Produced." If this advertising is truthful then we are all wrong in our recollections of Paramount having returned the original version to its studio in Hollywood for a scrubbing and toning down that necessitated more than a few retakes.

NEW ORLEANS buried seventy-year-old Jules Alciatore the other day. He had for some fifty years presided over the famous restaurant of his father, Antoine, in the French quarter of that Louisiana town.

There is many a motion picture home in Hollywood and New York where the cook of the star or director, executive or producer is preparing for dinner tonight some rare dish that was concocted to taste for the head of the house by Monsieur Alciatore. Down through five decades he delighted at table many of the world's notables. Numbered among them were not a few of our own film folk who often shaped their cross-country itineraries to include New Orleans for a visit with Jules at Antoine's, now 96 years established.

Sauces were sonnets to him whose place echoes the testimonials of presidents and princes, stars and satellites. On those walls hang framed tributes from Teddy Roosevelt and Will Rogers, the Sidney Drews and Taft, Warren Harding and Will Rogers, and from Harold Lloyd and Calvin Coolidge.

Each has tasted his Oyster Rockefeller, so named, said Jules, "because I know no other name rich enough for their richness."

He made a famous blend of New Orleans French-dripped coffee, a combination known by many in this motion picture profession. Jules called it Cafe Brulo Diabolique, a coffee poured into a silver bowl containing flaming cognac and spices.

Richard Barthelmess, chief second and loud rooter for Enzo Fiermonte, handsome 26-year-old Italian, has nothing to say for publication about Mr. Fiermonte's humiliating defeat in Hollywood last weekend when the young, silk-robed husband of the wealthy Madeline Force Astor Dick was knocked out by Les Kennedy, battle-scarred veteran. Knockouts these days at the hands of Kennedy are few. He accomplished this feat over Fiermonte with a right that even Kate Smith could have dodged.

Enzo ought to try his luck at roulette.

American motion picture press agentry in its most realistic moments never reached the heights obtained by their British confreres, who, in a paroxysm of patriotism resulting from the well-known "Buy British" movement, combined their efforts on behalf of tombstone makers and morticians in devising an advertising slogan which urges: "DIE BRITISH AND REMAIN BRITISH." The idea being that one's undertaker and tombstone maker should be strictly British, using strictly British materials, or something.

NEW DELAY IS SEEN IN PARAMOUNT PLAN

Hearing on Reorganizing of Subsidiary, Paramount Broadway, Postponed to Oct. 22

Adolph Zukor, president of the Paramount Publix Corporation, arrived in New York from Hollywood over the week-end to attend the final conferences on the company's financial reorganization. En route, at Kansas City, he said definite provision is made for his continuance as its titular head. The plan was due to have been submitted to the federal district court in New York within the next two or three weeks, but when on Monday Referee John E. Joyce postponed until October 22 a hearing on reorganization of the subsidiary Paramount Broadway Corporation, it was generally understood that the outcome of this move must be awaited before any action can be taken in the parent company's reorganization because of the size of claims held by the subsidiary against the parent concern. These are said to total $178,000,000.

Attorneys Ask More Time

The postponement in the Paramount Broadway case came as the result of a motion by Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballantine, counsel for the Paramount Publix trustees. The attorneys asked for more time to study the proposals, but submitted unwillingly to a ruling by Mr. Joyce that creditors and bondholders reserved the right to file objections to reorganization proposals at any time up to five days previous to resumption of the hearings.

Judge Edwin L. Garvin, representing three bondholders, offered a petition for an order from Mr. Joyce directing the trustees to supply his clients with detailed operating statements of all foreign subsidiaries of Paramount. His petition charged that accountants retained by his clients to study the Paramount books had been blocked when seeking information on foreign companies and that those bondholders, therefore, could submit no reorganization plan.

Counsel for the trustees offered the defense that to supply a set of breakdown figures of foreign operations would be inimical to good business practices, and would divulge trade secrets to competitors. They further pleaded that Judge Garvin's clients did not represent 25 per cent of the bondholders or 10 per cent of the creditors, as specified by bankruptcy laws. Mr. Joyce asked the attorneys to submit memoranda within a week and reserved decision.

Paramount Broadway's reorganization plan was studied Tuesday by the Congressional Real Estate Bondholders' Reorganization Committee, engaged in a national inquiry.

Little Delay Expected

Although definite objections to the reorganization plan of Paramount Publix are expected to be encountered from miscellaneous groups of small creditors, little delay in reorganizing after the plan actually has been submitted is expected, as the essential creditor elements are in virtual accord, it is said.

Among these is the Paramount bank group, creditors for $13,200,000, who are being sued by the Paramount Publix trustees to set aside a preference alleged to be involved in their claim. An adjournment of preliminary steps in this suit was granted Tuesday until October 23 to permit further negotiations.

The suit against former Paramount Publix directors brought by the trustees to recover up to $12,200,000 expended for repurchase of Paramount stock issued for theatre acquisitions from 1929 to 1932 will not be brought to trial, according to present indications, as the new company would be required to bear the burden of the extensive litigation involved.

Amended Answer Awaited

This suit was filed in New York supreme court by the trustees—Charles E. Richardson, Charles D. Hilles and Eugene W. Leake—last spring. Defendants will file an amended answer to the complaint within the next few weeks after which other motions are expected to be filed and argued. The defendants also planned to demand a jury trial which, because of the crowded court calendar, would mean that the suit could not be tried for at least three years.

An order authorizing Paramount Publix to proceed with a plan which will release it from liabilities of $1,711,000 in connection with a bond issue of Toledo Paramount Corporation and rents and taxes on five Toledo theatre properties, was signed in New York last week by Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey. In return for the Paramount release, Famous Theatres, a Paramount subsidiary, agrees to withdraw two claims filed against the Toledo company, one for $1,036,449 and another of an undetermined amount. Paramount also will pay fees totaling $165,000 to Al Reuben and Walter J. Kountz, receivers for the Toledo Paramount, and their counsel.

Phillipson Honored; Sails for England

Percy Phillipson, who has been in New York since the first of the year on a reorganization of General Register Corporation, was tendered a farewell dinner at the Motion Picture Club last weekend, prior to his return to London this week. T. P. Drew, vice-president, will remain in charge of the New York office. Mr. Phillipson is president of the company.

Among those attending were Charles Alicoate, Film Daily; Mark Ostrer, head of Gaumont-British; Edward A. Powers, advertising manager of General Register, and James P. Cunningham, Ray Gallo and Sherwin Kane of Quigley Publications.

Sulzer, Mees and Sievers are Named Eastman Officers

Three new vice-presidents, elected at the September monthly meeting of the board of directors of Eastman Kodak Company, have assumed their new duties. The officers are Albert F. Sulzer, former manager of Kodak Park, who becomes vice-president in charge of Kodak Park, Dr. C. E. Kenneth Mees, director of research and development, who becomes vice-president in charge of research and development, and Herman C. Sievers, general sales manager, who has been named vice-president in charge of sales and advertising, succeeding the late Lewis B. Jones.

The board passed a memorial resolution on the death of Mr. Jones, who died recently. It noted the 40 years which Mr. Jones had devoted to an executive post with Eastman, and indicated the importance of his work as contact of the company with the public.

All three of the newly elected vice-presidents have been with the company for many years, Mr. Sulzer having joined the company upon his graduation from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1901. He was appointed manager of Kodak Park in 1929 and was elected a director of the company in 1931.

Dr. Mees came to Rochester in 1912, when Eastman acquired the firm of Wratten and Wainwright, of Croyden, England, of which Dr. Mees was managing director. Mr. Sievers joined the company in 1902, automatically going over to Eastman when the company bought a photographic stockhouse with branches in Sioux City and other situations. Mr. Sievers was Sioux City manager.

Cleveland Owners' Quarrel Ends in Death and Suicide

Ernest Schwartz, 49, prominent Cleveland attorney and president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, was shot and seriously wounded, and his partner, Benjamin Z. Levine, 45, was fatally wounded, in their office in the Williamson Building last weekend, following a business quarrel. Their assailant, Abraham Knopp, 60, of Waterbury, Conn., also a partner, was later found dead in Euclid Beach Park, and was pronounced a suicide.

The three had been associated in operation of the Broadvue, Mile, Nerval and New Y theatres, neighborhood houses. According to Mr. Schwartz, dissensions among the three partners had resulted in litigation, and the court had ordered payment of a certain sum by Mr. Levine to Mr. Knopp. Mr. Knopp called for his money, and when Mr. Levine attempted to explain a delay in payment, the quarrel followed.

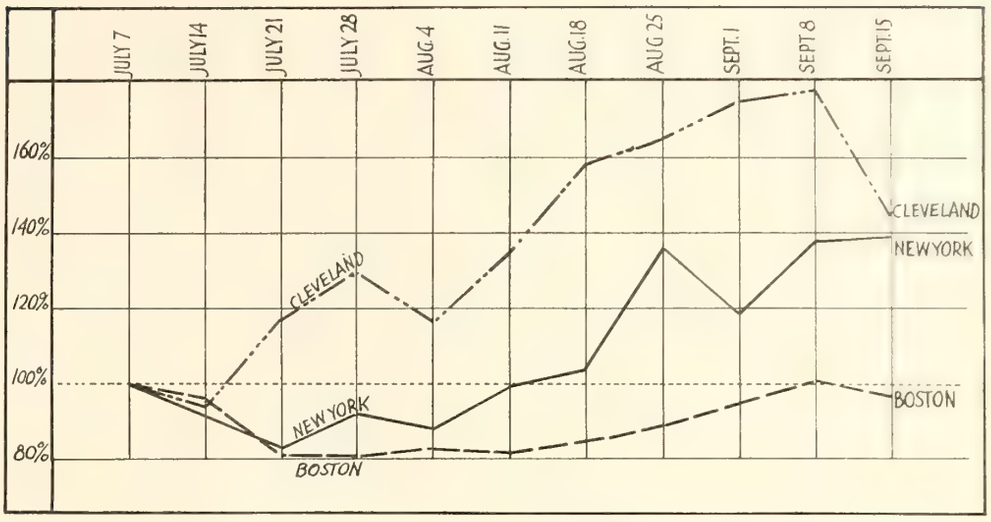
Porter Browne, Playwright, Dies; Wrote "Bad Man"

Porter Emerson Browne, playwright and author, whose principal indirect contribution to the screen was "The Bad Man," originally a play, died last week in the Norwalk, Conn., Hospital where he had been a patient since June 7. He was 55 years old. Mr. Browne had lived in Norwalk for about 20 years until he left for Arizona six years ago, because of ill health. He returned to Norwalk last spring and shortly thereafter was stricken with what proved a fatal illness.

Mr. Browne was born in 1879 in Beverley, Mass., receiving his education in the elementary and high schools of Beverley and Newton, Mass., going from there to the Brooklyn Standard Union. Later he worked on the Boston Globe and the Boston Evening Transcript. Traveling through the Colorado mining camps, he gave up hope of making his fortune there, and landed in a job on a rice plantation in South Carolina.

His first story, "The Conversion of Blake," being accepted by Collier's, he devoted the following five years to story writing for the Saturday Evening Post and various other publications. His first play, "A Fool There Was," was completed in 1906, and was successful. Numerous other plays followed. His most successful play was "The Bad Man," which, starring Holbrook Blinn, ran for a year on Broadway and was extremely popular as a motion picture.



The most prominent of his screen plays were "Joan of Plattsburgh," starring Mabel Normand; "Too Many Millions," starring Wallace Reid, and "The Seventh Day," with Richard Barthelmess.

Mr. Browne is survived by two daughters, Miss Prudence Browne, of Westport, Conn., and Mrs. Suzanne Browne Malkin, of Norwalk.

Sarnoff Elected NBC Chairman

David Sarnoff was elected chairman of the board of directors of the National Broadcasting Company at a meeting in New York last week. Mr. Sarnoff succeeds the late H. P. Davis as chairman, and will retain his presidency of Radio Corporation of America, of which NBC is a wholly owned subsidiary.

The following officers were elected in addition to Mr. Sarnoff: M. H. Aylesworth, president; R. C. Patterson, Jr., executive vice-president; Mark Woods, assistant executive vice-president; A. L. Ashby, vice-president and general attorney; David Rosenblum, George Engles, Edgar Kobak, Frank Mason, J. F. Royal, R. C. Witmer, D. E. Gilman, F. M. Russell, Niles Trammell, all vice-presidents; H. K. Norton, treasurer; Lewis MacConnach, secretary; R. J. Teichner, assistant treasurer.

Cleveland theatres' receipts for the week ended September 15 were 42 per cent higher than for the week of July 7. New York was a close second with 39½ per cent, but Boston was 1½ per cent behind its July business. These developments of eleven weeks are shown by the graph, based upon Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of box office grosses. In each city the gross for the first week of the period was taken as 100 per cent.

STUDY GUIDE ISSUED ON 'TREASURE ISLAND'

Teachers' Council in Manual Advises Classes See MGM Film in Body Before Discussion

The first of a series of study guides to develop nationwide appreciation of motion pictures by high school students made its appearance this week when the National Council of Teachers of English released its guide on Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Treasure Island," from the Robert Louis Stevenson classic. Council study guides heretofore had been issued in individual localities only.

The National Council's program has been widely adopted; it was estimated recently that 20,000 teachers of English had endorsed the fundamental principles.

Under the plan the motion picture, as in the case of "Treasure Island," literally will supplement the written classics of literature.

In its "Treasure Island" manual the National Council has made two divisions—instructions for the teacher, and the students' guide. The leading paragraphs of the teacher's key embrace methods of presentation of the study to the pupil. It is suggested that before seeing the picturization of "Treasure Island" the study guide leaflets should be distributed in order that each individual student may choose, at least tentatively, a set of questions under one of the topical headings.

It is further suggested that the ideal plan for seeing the picture is to have the English class go to the theatre in a body, with a view to discussing the picture in class the following day.

A brief resume of the literary source and production of "Treasure Island" is given, quoting letters written by the author to William Ernest Henley telling of his plans for writing the story.

Following this resume is an explanation of the method of the story's transcription to the screen, with explanations by Hunt Stromberg, who supervised the entire production; John Lee Mahin, who wrote the scenario, and Victor Fleming, the director. There also is a complete outline of the settings and properties employed in the production, besides a brief plot and character study.

The students' guide, in the introduction, includes such questions as: "How did Stevenson come to write 'Treasure Island'?" "What elements make the book good material for a photoplay?" "Do you consider it a good adaptation?" "What did the scenario writer omit? What did he change? What did he add?" "Do you agree entirely with The Literary Digest (Sept. 1, 1934), which says that this picture is 'a handsome and faithful retelling of the Stevenson classic'?" Other preliminary questions for open classroom discussion follow and then the guide launches into a test of historical research, costumes and properties necessary to re-create "Treasure Island." Pupils are asked to mention the chief settings which had to be designed and whether they appeared "realistic."

A plot study, in which students are specifically asked the reasons for certain actions and incidents in the film, includes such questions as: "In the book Dr. Livesey and the Squire study Jim's map and gradually realize its significance. In the film they understand and act at once. What is thus gained?" "Where does suspense begin in the photoplay? Enumerate incidents that build suspense. At what point has the director hung up big question marks of expectancy?"

Next in the guide is a study of the characters in the film, with special emphasis laid upon realism in acting. There are questions concerning the accuracy of the film's dialogue compared with the book; the effect gained by the musical score; the photography, and the work of the director.

Finally come questions for the students as to whether the picturization of "Treasure Island" inspires him to high ideals and whether he has learned anything "about life" from it.

The study, sponsored by the National Council, was prepared by Howard Dietz, Silas Seadler and William R. Ferguson, of the MGM advertising and publicity departments, in cooperation with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

We Live Again

(United Artists - Goldwyn)

Romantic Drama

In the entertainment, production and showmanship values that really count, "We Live Again" is an attraction that most exhibitors should be proud to present. Tolstoy's great romantic drama, intelligently modernized, skillfully directed and convincingly portrayed against effective settings and backgrounds is, in this case, revealed as a brand new and different picture. While an atmosphere of realism predominates, the entertainment is inspiring in an unusual degree. It's a love story; the story of a prince and a peasant, a woman who was wronged and deserted to suffer life's greatest sorrows, yet kept her secret so that in the end the man who wrecked her dreams came pleading for forgiveness. Out of this their great love was born.

As such it is distinctly a woman's picture. But the other elements that enter into its construction, the strange forces that brought about the man's regeneration, the drama of the times and events with which the story is interwoven, for example the spectacle of the Russian Midnight Easter Mass, give it a character for widespread adult appeal.

In "We Live Again" there are elements appealing to every emotion, yet the actual story is simple. Returning home, Prince Dmitri, an aristocrat who entertains radical ideas, is charmed with the manner in which peasant Katusha has developed into womanhood. Their summer companionship develops into an idyllic romance. Before parting, they vow eternal faith.

Two years pass, during which Dmitri, forgetting his illusions, surrenders himself to the liberal life of his class. They meet again and following the religious service spectacle (an outstanding selling feature) both give way to their love. In the morning Dmitri runs away and both dread and heart-break come to Katusha. When the girl's condition becomes apparent to the Prince's aunts, she is dismissed. Her baby dying, she goes to Moscow, eventually to become a woman bought and paid for. Years pass and Dmitri has forgotten all his youthful dreams, even the girl. Retired from the army, he is called upon to serve on a criminal jury. Katusha is being tried for complicity in murder. Upon hearing her name, Dmitri remembers, but an error is made in the verdict and the girl is sentenced to banishment in Siberia.

Follow scenes in the grim Russian prison, where Dmitri, beginning to realize what he has caused, tries to convince the girl that he wants to help, only to be spurned. Using every bit of influence he can command, he is unable to alter the verdict. Knowing that nothing can be done, he deserts his class, gives his estates and wealth to the peasant tenants to follow Katusha to Siberia. On the border their great love begins.

While the picture makes possible the adaptation of much that is different in publicity and exploitation in reference to both story and cast values, particularly in reference to Anna Sten and Fredric March, it is not advisable to stray far from what the picture actually is. It should be sold as the drama of a man's selfish passion and final repentance and of a woman's sacrifice and enduring devotion.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Chu Chin Chow

(Gaumont-British)

Operetta

Once again the almost immortal "Chu Chin Chow," the operetta of Oscar Asche, retelling the famed Arabian Nights tale of Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves, comes to the motion picture screen, this time with the considerably helpful assistance of the talking technique. In the role occupied by Betty Blythe in the Graham Wilcox production which Metro-Goldwyn released in 1925, is Anna May Wong, and the production is English, by Gainsborough.

For the adults among his patrons, the exhibitor may offer a treat in this new version of "Chu Chin Chow." Its name and fame are far flung and many an older person will have seen the silent film, and perhaps the play on the stage. All the splendid music is there, plus the opportunity for the wider scope in settings and atmosphere.

For the younger patrons, perhaps unfamiliar with the origin of the operetta, let the exhibitor not lose sight of the Arabian Nights story of Ali Baba, which should be familiar and should be used in the selling as some sort of subtitle. Also emphasis on the music is important. Retaining all the whimsical flavor of the original, all the Oriental fantasy, the production is highly entertaining, melodious and amusing. The general unreality of the piece, a deliberate part of the tale, plus the music, and the fact that there are comparatively few spoken lines, should definitely overcome any possible objection which might be raised by reason of the English origin and accent. Let the exhibitor permit no pre-conceived prejudices to color his attitude toward the film.

Though the names, with the exception of that of Miss Wong, will perhaps be unknown in this country, the exhibitor may be assured the performances are more than competent, with Jetsam, an English vaudeville player, as the merchant's "announcer," singing a bass which is wholly delightful. That the film moves a little slowly, that it is a trifle lengthy, should offer no real obstacle to enjoyment. The exhibitor will have to sell the film, but it should be worth the effort. A "class" attraction. it should also have considerable "mass" appeal.

The story needs but brief recounting. Ali Baba, poor brother of the wealthy merchant, accidentally finds the hideout of Abou Hassan, leader of the forty thieves, and partaking of gold he finds, rivals his avaricious brother in style. The brother, seeking more wealth, finds only death at the hands of Abou Hassan. Meanwhile, warned by his spy in the merchant's house, Miss Wong, Hassan raids the camp of the visiting Chinese merchant, Chu Chin Chow, kills him, impersonates him, and appears at the brother's house, prepared to pillage the place. The signal is to be the sale of the slave girl, Miss Wong. But the slave sweetheart of Ali Baba's son, John Garrick, overhears the plot, warns the guard, and Abou Hassan escapes, with Miss Wong. In the hideout, he accuses her of treachery. She, in revenge, warns Garrick of the planned raid of Abou Hassan on Ali Baba's home, saves the merchant and herself kills Hassan.

There is no reason why the film should not be sold as a family attraction, and the cooperation of women's clubs and even schools obtained. Where the children are concerned it would be well if a scene or two depicting unusual cruelty be eliminated. It is decidedly worthwile entertainment.—Aaronson, New York.

Wednesday's Child

(RKO Radio)

Drama

This picture is a serious, semi-analytic study of a modern social problem, naturally dramatic and full of human interest, and as such, properly understood, a definitely valuable piece of screen merchandise. A boy is the central figure, but it's not a kid picture. Rather it is an exclusively adult attraction which probes deeply into the problem of divorce, broken homes and the effect such tragedy has upon a susceptible juvenile mind. Essentially this picture attacks a certain opinion which many in this modern day hold with regard to marriage. As a showmanship feature, it says, almost in fact, that individuals should not marry and have children unless they intend to stay married and make their children's happiness and welfare their most important duty. Thus departing emphatically from popular formula, it essays to teach an emphatic moral lesson rather than amuse or entertain. As it is different from the ordinary, it demands a radical departure from the customary procedure in selling.

Here's the gist of the story. Bobbie is the pal of his father, Ray Phillips, and early sequences portray the ideal father-son relation. In company with his playmates, he sees his mother kissed by another man. The child is amazed in a way that he cannot understand, but his mates, wiser in the ways of the world than he, rag him to desperation. Comes the discovery by Phillips of his wife's unfaithfulness, the inevitable divorce, destroying every boyish dream and illusion, and Bobbie is awarded to the mother for eight months of the year and the father four months.

Catherine, remarrying, tries to do everything to make her son happy, but the boy does not respond. He's waiting only for the four months with his pal dad. It comes, but the ecstatically happy youth finds only more tragedy as he learns that his father is going to marry again. Cracking under the strain, the boy is taken to the hospital. In his crisis, mother and father meet. At the suggestion of the doctor, the boy is sent to military school, just as are thousands of other kids. Through conversations of Bobbie with his room mate, Chick, audiences are given semi-humorous insight into what such children think of their circumstances.

From this point the picture builds to a quick climax. The father, realizing what he means to the boy, puts the other woman aside to take the boy home with him, so that the dreams and hopes that always have been his shall be realized.

The subject with which this picture deals appears to be its best potential showmanship. Neither title nor cast means very much, consequently the dramatic meat of the picture is the element which should be given concentration. Sell it to adults from the angle that they will get more that is instructive and beneficial out of it than reading a dozen books or listening to so many lectures, even resorting to the old bromide of daring them to view it. At any rate, get out of the regular rut with this one, combine dignity with impressiveness.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Lemon Drop Kid

(Paramount-LeBaron)

Drama

This is a character drama of a man's regeneration. The familiar Damon Runyon personalities, the way they talk, act and live, are again featured. It embellishes the motivating element with romantic love interest, twists of typical comedy in dialogue and situations, tragedy and surprise.

In the picture, Brooks, a two-bit tout, with a penchant for chewing lemon drops, gips Griggsby out of a $100 race bet. Fleeing the law, he lands in a small town and gets a job in the grocery store. Falling in love with Alice Deering, he marries her. Determined to stick to the straight and narrow, his wages are nothing to brag about. When the baby is about to arrive, he robs the store in order to get hospital expense money. The wife dies in childbirth, Brooks is suspected of the robbery, and sentenced. The child being cared for by two old racetrack pals, The Professor and Maizie, Brooks responds to the inspiring influence of the warden. Out on parole, the two-year-old baby further opens his eyes to his responsibilities. Then comes the surprise. Ever since Griggsby lost his dough, he has been looking for Brooks. The shock he got at the time completely cured him of some affliction and as he rewards The Kid, he fixes up a job for him so that it will never more be necessary to surrender to his petty criminal tendencies.

Direct appeal of this production is to the Runyon fans. There's enough exciting action to enthuse the menfolk, and the romantic love interest, which is heavily accented by pathos, points toward feminine sympathy. Several features in the show suggest unique exploitation and showmanship.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Death on the Diamond

(MGM)

Action Mystery

Punch-laden with drama, comedy and action on the baseball diamond in the big leagues, with the addition or the foundation of a really obscure murder mystery, this picture should be in the nature of a natural for showmen. With the baseball season nearing its close, and the World's Series in the immediate offing, when baseball fan fever will be heated to its top pitch, this hits at the right moment. There is also the combination of basic entertainment values.

For the women is the mystery itself, in which both sexes are interested, and a romance, which though not particularly significant to the main story thread, should nevertheless serve if properly sold.

Though the cast has no really outstanding names for definite marquee drawing power, there is the strength of the story and its atmosphere. The local newspapers should easily be drawn into the campaign, with an invitation to local sport writers to see the film privately, looking to mention on the sporting pages.

The cast is headed by Robert Young, with Madge Evans, David Landau, Nat Pendleton and Ted Healy in the principal roles. Pendleton and Healy account for much of the humor. Able direction is indicated in the manner in which drama is continually offset by comedy before it can become weighty. Three murders, committed in most unusual fashion, on the playing field, in the locker room and in the stands, keep the pace at high speed throughout, with comedy and romance spotted well.

Young comes from the minor leagues to the St. Louis Cardinals, and immediately falls in love with Manager Landau's daughter, Miss Evans, who is club secretary. Young, star pitcher, quickly becomes important to the club, since Landau needs the pennant to hold his club franchise. Paul Kelly, sports reporter, becomes immediately involved by reason of his interest in the club and its chances. It is early established, also, that a big gambling ring, headed by C. Henry Gordon, has a great deal of money which says the Cardinals will not win the pennant.

When their chances begin to look more than good, an attempt is made to kill Young and Pendleton, ace catcher, as the cab in which they are riding crashes, with bullet holes in the tires. The team's best hitter is shot dead rounding third base headed for home on a long hit. The Cardinals return to St. Louis for a final three-game series of which they must win two. They win one game, and as the second is about to begin a star pitcher, called to the locker room, is found strangled. They lose the game and Pendleton is poisoned. Miss Evans begs her father not to pitch Young in the final game but he insists. Kelly meanwhile is working on a hunch. The conclusion of the picture, as Young himself saves the day, proves Kelly's hunch correct, and wins his own game, combines an unexpected denouement, action and romantic termination.

It is a showman's natural, and entertainment all the way.—Aaronson, New York.

Million Dollar Ransom

(Universal)

Drama

There is no lack of action of the more dramatic type in this drama, which may have topical value with the reopening of the Lingbergh baby kidnaping case. It deals with the socalled "snatch racket." As to whether the natural offshoot to that theme, portrayal of gangsters and their methods, will meet with any opposition is something which the individual exhibitor himself will have to judge. The fact remains that the film contains considerable action, romance and a bit of comedy, and is definitely entertaining.

In the origin of the film is another selling point, an original story by Damon Runyon, widely read author of active fiction, whose yarns recently have attained considerable success in their transposition to the screen. Also, in what is virtually the leading role, though he is not so billed in the cast, is Edward Arnold, who has achieved a definite popularity through his effective handling of recent roles of a minor nature, has demonstrated an ability and is consequently worthy of billing attention.

Phillips Holmes is the nominal leading player, with Mary Carlisle concerned in the romantic aspect of the story, and Andy Devine supplying the larger part of the occasional and occasionally amusing comedy. In the story concerning a "big shot" beer operator who attempts to turn straight but pays with his life, there is opportunity for intriguing copy lines, especially when the lines are tied in with the story's origin and the appearance of Arnold.

Arnold, released from prison after a term for tax evasion and the demise of prohibition, is determined to put gangs and their ways behind him. When his daughter, Miss Carlisle, unexpectedly appears from Europe where she has been at school, Arnold forces himself to tell Wini Shaw, former sweetheart, that they are through, for the protection of his daughter. Miss Carlisle is sent to a farm operated by old friends of Arnold.

Arnold is annoyed at a night club by Holmes in a state of inebriation. Later Holmes proposes to Arnold that he "kidnap" him, thus hoping to divert his mother from her intention of leaving for Europe to marry a man he knows to be no good. Arnold, in need of ready money, agrees, and with the assistance of Devine, his former employee, secretes Holmes in an abandoned barn near where Miss Carlisle is staying. The two meet, fall in love, although she cannot learn his real identity.

The former henchmen with whom Arnold has broken, and headed by Bradley Page, get wind of the "kidnaping," think it real and attempt to cut in on the deal. Holmes' mother, as he expected, prepares to pay the large ransom asked. Arnold refuses, and before he can free Holmes to complete the hoax, Page and his men have captured Holmes and Miss Carlisle, hidden them, and demanded a share in

Stolen Sweets

(Chesterfield)

Drama

Again we have the story of the poor little rich girl, who has more money than she knows what to do with but is so carefully guarded, her life so carefully run for her, that she is completely unhappy. It is only when on shipboard she accidentally meets a young man, falls in love with him, and he with her, that she begins to discover the something she has always longed for.

That is the story, and its production independently makes for fairly entertaining light screen fare. In that the title line has reference to the girl's finding of a precarious and occasional few minutes of happiness with her suitor, despite stern parental commandments, there is an opportunity for a selling line or two which might be effective.

Heading the case are Sally Blane and Charles Starrett, with Jameson Thomas perhaps the only other familiar name. The selling should be concentrated upon the story itself, with the treatment perhaps directed at the younger element of the patronage, which does not mean the children.

Carefully watched as she returns from abroad, Miss Blane nevertheless accidentally meets Starrett aboard ship, he being an ordinary young insurance salesman, returning from a vacation in Europe with a few friends. Although she attempts to dismiss him as the voyage ends, however much against her will, he insists he will see her again. Learning her identity, he pursues her avidly, and her resistance is but half-hearted. Her fiance, Thomas, prim and proper and without the slightest sparkle of romance about him or his prearranged courtship, becomes harder and harder for her to bear. Her father, seeing Starrett, tries to buy or bribe him off, but he refuses, declares he intends to marry the girl despite the father or any one else.

Finally her father makes her see it his way, and she asks permission to have a final party of her own. Starrett and his friends arrive, and again she sends him away. Attempting to force her to elope with him, he breaks into her room one night, pretends to make a scene and is hit by Thomas, and arrested. Miss Blane goes to him and the two are secretly married. Honeymooning on shipboard, they receive a radiogram of forgiveness from the girl's parents, which they carefully cast into the sea.

Down to Their Last Yacht

(RKO Radio)

Musical

A comedy sufficiently spotted with music to warrant the term musical comedy, this effort has some engaging melody and considerable nonsense, only occasionally amusing. Built about the deliberate incarceration of a group of miscellaneous Americans on a Polynesian island in the South Seas, the film has a basic premise which is initially more entertaining than the result constructed on that premise.

The girl spectacle material is attractive, but neither unique nor spectacular. The chief difficulty is that with a title that is clever and attention-arresting and opening sequences giving promise of a really engaging and highly timely idea, that promise is not fulfilled.

There are no particularly outstanding names in the cast, although several are familiar as comedy players. Heading the cast are Mary Boland and Polly Moran, with Ned Sparks chiefly in the comedy support, and Sidney Fox and Sidney Blackmer for the incidental romance. The selling should make the most of the comedy character of the story and an effort to impart as much nonsense to the advertising as there is in the picture itself.

In introductory fashion is indicated the fall of the wealthy after the disturbance of 1929, Miss Fox's parents having tumbled with others. The only thing they have left, and the home they come to after menial jobs, is their yacht. In upon them storms publicity agent Miss Moran, with the idea that they should rent their yacht for a cruise to a passenger list composed of racketeers and such who are newly rich, and with the once wealthy as attendants. The social register is the requirement for crew members, Dun and Bradstreet's financial guide the requirement for passengers. Sparks is captain of the ship.

He deliberately beaches the yacht on the island of which Miss Boland is queen, planning to strike a deal for his passengers with the queen. She cages him and takes over the entire outfit. Miss Fox had been pursued aboard the yacht, as before, by Blackmer, in love with her. On shore, Miss Boland equalizes everything by placing all the passengers in a like position. Natives dance, strum guitars, sing to form a musical comedy sort of background characterized chiefly by its artificiality of appearance.

There is every evidence that Blackmer is attempting to save his own skin when he makes himself attractive to the queen and is scheduled to become her husband, much to the dismay of Miss Fox. It all comes out in the end, with the yacht blown up, the stranded whites teaming up and deciding to enjoy the calm and careless life of the natives. Blackmer gets clear of the queen to complete his romance with Miss Fox.—AARONSON, New York.

The Bride of the Lake

(AmerAnglo)

Romantic Drama

Romance on the Emerald Isle, with the captivatingly lilting music of the country, and the wholly charming scenery of the countryside for background, this English-made picture offers an unusual opportunity for the exhibitor in a community characterized by a population of Irish descent.

The film, produced by Julius Hagen, is an adaptation of the old story, "Colleen Bawn," and the stage play of the same name by Dion Boucicault. Set entirely in the quietly attractive atmosphere of the countryside, the picture deftly carries over to the audience a feeling of a calmly faithful people, duly respectful of their "betters" yet in no way characterized by a subservience of spirit. The players, although probably completely unknown in this country, are nonetheless extremely capable, and the leads, Gina Malo and John Garrick, have excellent singing voices.

The young nobleman, faithful to his love for a peasant girl, and willing to sacrifice home and wealth for that love, accounts for the central theme of the story. About it has been drawn an attractive picture of the Ireland familiar in song and story, depicting the neighboring noblemen indulging in the hunt, making merry over the great board in the manorial hall of the castle.

There is no reason why the exhibitor not catering to a patronage predominantly Irish cannot also count upon audience-enjoyment of the picture. The obstacle which usually stands in the way of pictures of English origin, that of predominantly English accent, is not true in this case. The lines are spoken entirely with the pleasing accent peculiar to the country, and not difficult to understand.

Garrick's castle property is mortgaged to Stanley Perrins who threatens to foreclose. He is in love with Garrick's sister, Dorothy Boyd, and offers to drop the mortgage if she will marry him. She refuses. Garrick, for his part, might end his financial difficulties by marrying a wealthy cousin who has loved him for many years, but he will not take the easy way out of his difficulties, and at the same time throw over the girl he loves. A rich uncle has refused to aid him. In a rash moment he bets Perrins that his mare can outrace Perrins' horse, with the stake a large sum on Garrick's part, against the mortgage.

As his peasant girl sweetheart is pursued by Dennis Hoey, a fugitive smuggler, the old retainer of Garrick blames the girl, and attempts to kill her. But Hoey saves her life, and Garrick, coming after her, permits Hoey to escape and barely makes the race track in time to start. He wins and the day is saved all around.

Throughout, a principal character is Stanley Holloway as the neighboring priest. His work is perhaps the best of all in the cast, and he adds a continuous note of good humor.

It is a film worth the attention of almost any exhibitor, and has an especial appeal to the audience of Irish extraction.—AARONSON, New York.

Jack Allman, who goes out of his way to get into the way of rattlesnakes, and permits tarantulas to bite him, shows how he captures the deadly terrors of the desert. But before he goes to work there is shown a monkey-faced owl swallowing a lizard, with a mouse for dessert. Then a toad goes about the business of snatching his dinner with his tongue, and a garter snake in turn swallows a frog. It's animal life "in the raw." These shots are preliminary to Allman's work, however. There is an expansion of showmanship over his previous pictures, with such bits as a tarantula crawling across his face and biting his lip, and a rattler coiling up for the night on his chest. It's vigorous material.—Running time, 16 minutes.

Fingal's Cave
(Audio Prod. - First Division)
Distinctive

As a symphonic orchestra under the direction of Hans Lange renders the famous "Fingal's Cave" of Mendelssohn, the visual accompaniment, in the three-color Technicolor process, is a beautiful picturization of the ocean in its varying moods, presenting scenic effects of unusual excellence. Produced by Robert Bruce, this number of the Musical Moods series offers a distinct opportunity for the exhibitor in the presentation of something different, and of excellent quality. Its appeal, with a combination of striking music and beautiful color photography, must be to all classes of audience.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Nosed Out
(MGM - Hal Roach)
Pie-Throwing Technique

This is a comedy drama of oldfashioned politics and politicians. With vegetables the medium, it smacks of that hilarious technique of the old pie-throwing days. Cobb, accidentally forced into a contest with the boss mayor, hears epithets applied to his personality, physique and career of which he never dreamed. Scared witless, he finally is insulted enough to meet his rival on the forum. Greeted with the vegetables from the boss' cohorts, he turns the tables to see his enemy buried under an avalanche of garden produce. Running time, 18 minutes.—G. M.

The Discontented Canary
(MGM-Harman-Ising
Delightful Fun

In color that features unusual pastel effect, this details the humorous experiences of a canary who longed for the happy freedom of his uncaged feathered brothers. The tune of "The Man on the Flying Trapeze," accentuating his carefree joy in life, a wisecracking parrot telling him he should stay put, he finally gets out to find the world a terrible place beset with all kinds of dangers in which a terrible looking alley cat is the chief villain. All his misfortunes are delightful fun and that old movie chase idea tops it all off as the canary gets safely back to his cage. Running time, 8 minutes.—G. M.

I Surrender, Dear
Good

Listed as a revival, and currently on the Educational season releases, this subject, featuring Bing Crosby, should be worth exhibitor attention, by reason of the current popularity, on air and screen, of the leading player. In a completely comedy subject, Crosby mistakes a girl for his sister, and then pursues her avidly, despite the objections of her titled fiance, and her mother. Crosby renders several numbers, including the title number, effectively for those who like his style.—Running time, 22 minutes.

Mike Fright
(MGM - Hal Roach)
Great Fun

In this comedy the entertainment quality that made the old "Our Gangs" so popular is recaptured. Locale is a broadcasting station, the occasion a juvenile talent tryout. As the various pampered child prodigies strut their stuff for fun and laughs all around, the new Our Gang, headed by Spanky McFarland, turn the radio station into bedlam. As The International Submarine Band, their instruments a collection of bottles, pans, bazoos and other junk, they finally get a chance to go on the air to become sensations. Great fun for the regular kids as well as for the mature kids who like to forget they're grownups. Running time, 18 minutes.—G. M.

Poor Cinderella
(Paramount)
Good

One of the new Dave Fleischer Betty Boop series of animated cartoons in color, this number tells the story of Cinderella, the fairy godmother, and the prince at the ball, with Betty Boop as the heroine. The use of color immeasurably enhances the effectiveness of the subject, and its origin should make the number especially appealing to youngsters.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Old Pioneer
(MGM-Harman-Ising)
Fantasy in Color

This tells a fantastic story of the Cigar Store Indian's origin. Presented in color, it takes the pioneer and his covered wagon entourage into wild Indian country. The antics of the noble red men preparing to defeat this new grab at the hunting grounds is comically presented. As a little brave falls off a cliff as he alone would repel the white men, he is saved by the pioneer. The attack follows, however, with its awful carnage, but when the chief finds it was the pioneer who saved his heir, he extends the peace pipe which the pioneer transforms into a bunch of cigars, and we have the brave who a generation or so ago adorned the front of every tobacco shop. Running time, 9 minutes.—G. M.

What a Man Thinks
(Beverly Hills Exchange)
Weak

With a heavily tragic theme, in which the action proceeds stiltedly, there is little entertainment value to this study of what happens to a cashier who absconds with the bank funds. In a distant town he calls upon a seedy lawyer, entrusts to him the safekeeping of the money, giving a name he sees on a wall calendar. Then he returns to his own town, surrenders, and is sentenced for ten years, as he expected. On release he goes back to the strange town to reclaim his package, but when he comes to signing a receipt he cannot recall the name he has given (another company's calendar is on the wall now). Defeat drives him to the dock. As he's sinking for the third time, he sees the missing name over the end of the pier, too late. Ralph Lewis is the player.—Running time, 25 minutes.

Chris Columbo, Jr.
(Universal)
Good

A clever Oswald cartoon, this finds our hero, as young Chris Columbo, hooted for his notion that the world is flat, spurned by the kings of Europe, but finally getting his ships through the Spanish queen's generosity. Manned with jailbirds, the ships sails west, mutiny is afoot, and while the crew battles Oswald, the ships find land and Indians. Cleverly done, the subject should be found enjoyable.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Paramount Pictorial
(Paramount)
Interesting

There is material of general interest in this, Number 2 of the new series. Pictured with excellent photography throughout, are a harvesting of wheat on the deep slopes of Oregon under the snow-capped peak of Mount Hood, with 27 mules harnessed to a great harvester; an impressionistic sequence of mechanical gears in action with appropriate musical score, and a popularly entertaining explanation by Denys Wortman, noted cartoonist, of the origin and development of his comic characters, Mopy Dick and the Duke. An interesting subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Going Places (No. 2)
(Universal)
Good

A happy grouping of unusual travelogue bits, coupled with the clearly presented dialogue of Lowell Thomas, radio commentator, gives the subject added interest. The baby animals have particular appeal for children, the camera study of Russian women in industry is new stuff for all adults, there's a picturesque long shot of a ceremony with Mexican fishermen's lacrosse-racket shaped nets, and finally bits of odd dance customs topped off with a Bull Dance in which Swedish farmers make faces at each other.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Why Mules Leave Home
Fair

A fairly entertaining Terry-Toon Cartoon, this subject finds the old farmer operating effectively until his mule, stung by a bee, foments discontent and marches off with the farm help. But when the farmer is attacked by flying Indians, the mule and his fellow-deserters dart back to save the day. Mildly entertaining.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Exhibitor Gives Legion Support in First Broadcast

The first broadcast of a series of four to be made by the Legion of Decency in explanation of its objectives was given over the National Broadcasting system last Friday evening by Archbishop John Timothy McNicholas, of Cincinnati, who spoke from Station WCKY, at Covington, Ky., a key station in that territory which is owned and operated by L. B. Wilson, well known independent circuit owner in and around Cincinnati.

Believing in the necessity for clean motion pictures at all times, Mr. Wilson insisted that the Legion be given full play over his station, even declining to allow any commercial announcements to be sold on time adjoining the broadcast, and this despite the fact that his houses on occasion have felt the influence of the Legion campaign when it was directed at theatres at large.

Only Demand Is Clean Films

"The Legion of Decency was not formed to make pictures nor to tell the producers how to make them," explained Archbishop McNicholas. "But," he added, "it was formed to criticize them from the moral standpoint."

The Legion had "no ulterior motives," he said, "no hidden plans, nor were there any professional reformers associated with it. It had no financial aspect whatever. It could not be intimidated, could not be cajoled, could not be bought.

"It made one demand only, and would be satisfied with nothing else—clean pictures, clean speech and wholesome recreation for the masses of the people, who have very little else in the way of recreation in their lives."

Archbishop McNicholas said that the Legion has noted "with gratification that a number of cinema artists have never lowered their standards and have never accepted a part in an indecent picture. It is also gratifying to learn that those who have had the moral courage to refuse to take part in degrading the public have drawn large houses and have been popular favorites, furnishing another proof that the American public generally is clean-minded and desires only wholesome relaxation. It undoubtedly would be helpful to the producers if they recognized fully the advantage of having only normal people as their artists, and if they set themselves against the exploiting of abnormal persons whose lives are a public scandal.

"As the production of moving pictures is national in character, the producers would naturally prefer to find a solution of all their problems through one national agency. Equally satisfactory results can be obtained by the simple process of producing only clean films. All groups will readily accept these, and will patronize moving picture theatres in greater numbers than ever before. The pressure of public opinion can and should give us clean films."

Asks Unfailing Constructive Criticism

"Confusion in the listing of pictures will cease if every film produced conforms not only to the moral Code, but to the spirit of the Code which the producers themselves have signed," continued the archbishop.

"It is to be hoped that the seal of approval given to a picture by the industry's own administration will soon be an entirely satisfactory guarantee that it is worthy of general patronage. The industry needs a reasonable time to put its house in order. The public can help in this task by resolutely insisting, according to the agreement of the producers, that pictures made prior to July 15, 1934, shall not be shown if there be a genuine protest against them on moral grounds.

"There can be no reasonable demand that all pictures produced shall be suited merely to the mentality of children, or that they shall be dull and without human interest, or that they shall not afford genuine legitimate amusement and a generous measure of profitable instruction. May I in conclusion express sincere thanks, in the name of the Episcopal Committee on Motion Pictures, to all members of the Legion of Decency, of all faiths and all groups, for arousing public opinion against salacious pictures. May the Legion of Decency in its permanent organization sustain public opinion by unfailing constructive criticism from every section of the country. I again venture to hope that the producers will merit the full confidence of the public."

No Truce with Decency: Mundelein

The Catholic Church is willing to suspend its motion picture decency campaign to see what the film producers will do to improve the tone of the screen, it was said in Rome late last week by Cardinal Mundelein of Chicago, visiting the Vatican.

"We are going to give the movie producers a chance to see what they can do," he said. "We do not want to put the movies out of business." He emphasized, however, that there would be no truce with decency on the screen. "We are not taking any chances," he declared. "We are going to remain organized."

Commenting on Cardinal Mundelein's remarks, Cardinal Dougherty, of Philadelphia, declared that the boycott in his diocese would continue.

Dr. Tippy Aids Drive

Dr. Worth M. Tippy, of the Federal Council of Churches of New York, arrived in New Orleans last week to add impetus to the local drive against indecent pictures, with concentration among the Protestant groups.

Neither censorship nor prohibition, but wholesome entertainment, equally artistic and more profitable in the long run than "indecent" films, was declared the object of the clean films campaign, by Most Reverend James H. Ryan, rector of the Catholic University, at Washington, in a radio address.

A Chicago campaign of the Legion will be started Thursday of this week with a parade of 50,000 Catholic children, from 250 parochial schools, high schools and colleges.

Film Men of Denver Hold Annual Outing

With more than 300 in attendance, the distributors and exhibitors of the Denver territory held their first annual outing at the Lakewood country club, Denver, last week. The affair was initiated by Jack Langan, Universal manager, the committee including J. L. Morrison, Fox manager; Al Hoffman, United Artists manager; Walter Ibold, Comet theatre; Earl Bell, Warner manager, and Rick Ricketson, Fox West Coast division manager. Men occupied themselves with golf and baseball, and the women were entered in a bridge tournament.

Loew Awards for Foreign Sales Records Are Restored

Arthur Loew, in charge of the MGM foreign department, announced prior to sailing for South America the restoration of prize offers for the first four MGM foreign branches making the highest sales quota. During the vacation period, Mr. Loew personally paid all his employees a week's extra salary. The prize arrangement for foreign offices was discontinued two years ago, when salary reductions went into effect.

New Wage System For Projectionists Based on Theatre

A basic wage scale for projectionists, according to classifications of theatres, is expected to be ready in New York within the next two weeks. It was indicated that if the plan meets with approval of exhibitors and operators' unions it may be attempted in other sections. The New York plan is being worked out by officials of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Operators' Union and independent and circuit executives.

In some individual situations in the field, operators and exhibitors were battling sporadically over the wage issue.

At Cincinnati, Deputy Administrator John F. Toedtman of the Ohio Recovery Administration began hearings on alleged violations of the code filed against 10 neighborhood and suburban theatres by Operators' Local 327.

In Detroit all ushers in United Theatres walked out and non-union help was installed, while in Memphis, all efforts of M. A. Lightman failed to reach an agreement with union labor, over whether Mr. Lightman's Strand must have a stagehand, the result being no work at the house for any union men.

Dietz and Pete Smith Lead Fun at AMPA

Howard Dietz, director of the advertising and publicity department of MGM, and Pete Smith, featured "voice" in MGM short subjects, afforded considerable amusement to the members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, at their weekly meeting in New York last week. Stuart Erwin, Charles McManus, Charles Winninger and James FitzPatrick were on the program.

Mel Heymann, of the MGM publicity department, has succeeded Harry Blair as secretary of the AMPA. He is also a member of the publicity committee.

REINHARDT DRAWS $250,000
ZANUCK STARTS SECOND YEAR
GRACE MOORE VEHICLE SOUGHT
NINE FILMS START, EIGHT FINISHED

DESPITE the fact that Max Reinhardt's outdoor festival, "A Midsummer Night's Dream," played to more than 100,000 spectators during its seven nights engagement at the Hollywood Bowl with an approximate intake of $250,000, it did not affect motion picture theatre business. Indeed, the Paramount ran nine shows of the Mae West picture, "Belle of the Nineties," last Saturday, which included a breakfast matinee starting at 9 and a midnight show opening at 11:30.

The "Dream" festival was originally slated to run five nights with a limited nightly seating capacity of 14,000 because of acoustics and vision, but after the third night the demand for reservations became so great that the management decided to throw the Bowl wide open. The Bowl has a seating capacity of 20,000 and when the S. R. O. sign went up there was established a precedent in southern California for a seven-day attraction.

The venture was sponsored by the State Chamber of Commerce, to which all the profits will revert after they pay Reinhardt a reported guarantee of $50,000 and all expenses, which are estimated not to exceed an additional $50,000 necessary for rent, settings and costumes. Most of the talent worked for bare expenses and the glory of being in a Reinhardt production.

Reinhardt and his aids are now in San Francisco, where a similar engagement will be staged, but with only a few of the principals of the Hollywood presentation.

Reinhardt's imaginative setting for the play included a stage consisting of a grassy sloped foreground to the tree-bedecked ridge which surrounds the Bowl. Ballet dancers performed on the ridge against weird lighting which threw them into strong relief against a black sky.

Excellent Shakespearean interpretations were rendered by John Lodge, William Farnum, William Henry, Evelyn Venable and Olivia de Havilland, with Mickey Rooney in the role of Puck contributing the best liked performance.

The play was climaxed by a brilliant array of 200 torch bearers, who made an endless chain from the ridge to the foreground to give true Reinhardt magnificence to the wedding ceremony spectacle.

Third U. S. Officer at Studios

The United States Government, through the War Department, is continuing the cooperative training program worked out by the Academy, through which selected Signal Corps officers are sent to Hollywood for a period of training in motion picture production. First Lieutenant Charles S. Stodter, the third officer assigned to this work, arrived here this week and will begin the comprehensive research under direction of Gordon Mitchell, manager of the Academy's Technical Bureau.

Other officers who have taken this course and are now active in the Government's studio at Washington, making films for training officers and soldiers in the maneuvers of war, are Captains Fred W. Hoorn and M. E. Gillette.

Following a four months suspension of production, Darryl Zanuck launched the second year of 20th Century Pictures last week with "The Mighty Barnum," starring Wallace Beery with the support of Adolphe Menjou, Janet Beecher, Virginia Bruce, Rochelle Hudson, Charles Judels, Herman Bing and Tammany Young. Walter Lang is directing.

Zanuck plans to put four others into production before the end of the year. These will be "The Call of the Wild" with Fredric March, "Clive of India" with Ronald Colman, "Cardinal Richelieu," with George Arliss, and "Folies Bergere" with Maurice Chevalier.

Enthusiastic over tremendous box office receipts wherever Grace Moore is being shown in "One Night of Love," Columbia is seeking a suitable story to permit putting the next Moore vehicle into work by November. Ten Films Start, Eight Finished Paced by the debut of a new company, Wanger Productions, and 20th Century's resumption of activity, Hollywood started nine new pictures while eight were being finished. The comparatively quiet MGM lot was the only one starting two pictures: the others were Wanger, 20th Century, Radio, Universal, Warner, Columbia and Mascot. Of the completed pictures, two each are credited to Fox and Monogram; Radio, Warner, Universal and Chesterfield were responsible for the remainder.

Wanger Productions begins its career with a topical modern political drama, "The President Vanishes," in which Edward Arnold, Janet Beecher, Paul Kelley, Arthur Byron, Sydney Blackmer, Rosalind Russell and Charley Grapewin feature an extensive cast. Ambitious to get off on the right foot, 20th Century started "The Mighty Barnum," a colorful story of the great circus showman, with a cast including Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou, Janet Beecher, Virginia Bruce, Rochelle Hudson, Charles Judels, Herman Bing and Tammany Young.
